DELANO'S
PATENT INDEPENDENT HORSERAKE,

In the Counties of Somerset, Middlesex, Essex, Hudson, Bergen and Passaic, and will have them ready ready by the 1st of May.

This Rake was patented by Calvin Delano, of East Livermore, Maine, Feb. 27 1649 It is fitted to the hind wheels of a Single Horse Wagon, and attended by a man or boy who can RIDE AND RAKE, and manage the horse with ease and certainty.

Each Tooth acts separately and independently, its head being suspended on a rod or hinge over the Axletree, one Tooth being attached to each head. It is equally applicable to ROUGH AND SMOOTH LAND, and applies with equal pressure on each kind of surface.

Premiums and Diplomas were awarded it in the Fall of 1847 and 1848, by the Kennebec and Franklin Counties Agricultural Societies Its utility has been tested by more than 100 Farmers in the State of Maine, who have certified to its superiority over all other Horse Rakes

Francis F. Haines of East Livermore, authorized by the Patentee, will dispose of the Patent Right, within and for the States of New-Jersey and Pennsylvania, by Counties or Towns on very liberal terms

All infringements on the Patent Right of the above Invention will be prosecuted, without favor, to final judgment CALVIN DELANO, Patentee.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S
TRICOPHEROUS,
or Medicated Compound.

FOR RESTORING, PRESERVING, AND beautifying hair eradicating scurf and dandruff, and curing diseases of the skin, glands and muscles, stings, cuts, bruises, sprains, &c., &c. It has been ascertained by experiment that has produced the same effect in curing disease of the skin, &c, of the Horse and all the animal kingdom.

The following testimonials, selected from hundreds of similar import, will serve to show the value of the preparation, and the estimation in which it is held by those who have given it a trial:

NEW-YORK, Sept 22. 1850.

Prof. Barry—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted with a cutaneous eruption of the scalp of a most aggravated character for the last sixteen years, and during that period I have had the advice of some of the most eminent physicians, and have tried all the preparations for the hair and skin now known, without the least benefit. I was advised by a friend to try your Tricopherous. I did so, as a last resort, and, to my surprise and gratification, found myself cured in about two months. Such was the violence of the disorder that at times I was partially blind.

Respectfully yours,
G. V. M. RAPELYE, 148 Columbia-st.
Brooklyn.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23d 1850.

Prof. Barry—My Dear Sir: About two years ago my hair came out a great deal, and my head was much affected with dandruff. I was told by a friend to try your Tricopherous, and I did so, and to my astonishment my hair was firmly rooted, and all the dandruff disappeared, as the head now shews for itself

With respect I am your obedient servant,
J. S. TREADWELL, 683 Broadway.

[From the Military & Naval Argus, Nov. 9th.]

There is no remedy for the permanent cure of baldness and diseases of the cranium generally, that has reached the popularity enjoyed by the article known as Professor Barry's Tricopherous, or Medicated Compound. It is extensively used by the upper classes of the community; in almost every nursery in the land it is used in preference to other articles of the kind. It imparts vigor to the roots of the hair, and thus promotes its growth to a remarkable degree. It destroys dandruff and scurf, and yields the hair fine and glossy. It will cure all diseases of the scalp such as scald head, dew worm, and other obnoxious disorderders of the skin: in cheapness, as well as efficacy, it stands unrivalled. It is sold in large bottles, price 25 cents at No 137 Broadway, and at the druggists' generally throughout the United States and Canadas. [123's.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels: such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt.

RUPTURES, are always to be treated with the surgical instruments known as Trusses and Supporters, and these require to be skillfully applied. With this view, the HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE, now established some thirty years, has under the various managers, presented to the public both male and female attendants to apply its instruments directly to the persons, which is preferable in all cases, and has also made improvement at different times, showing that advancement which study and practice only yield toward the relief of this malady.

With much pleasure the fact is now published, that recent improvements BUTLER'S TRUSS PADS have been made, and sufficiently tested upon numerous cases to warrant, through the cures already affected, their submission to the public, as being in adaptation and efficiency superior to any heretofore made known.

These improvements, recently patented, are now being applied at this office, 4 Vesey street, in cases of rupture, gravitation of the bowels, prolapsus uteri, prolapsus ani and piles.

The public may rely upon that care being made in their application, which will most likely tend to the final cure of the several complaints.

Hull's Truss Office, 4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St. Paul's Church, New-York.
FRED'K M BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The ladies' department is attended by a female qualified to fit the instruments, having so attended this office for many years.

Children trussed when only two weeks old, and invariably cured. [145is.

GREAT COUGH REMEDY!

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

In offering to the community this justly celebrated remedy for disease of the throat and lungs, it is not our wish to trifle with the lives or health of the afflicted, but frankly to lay before them the opinions of distinguished men and some of the evidences of its success, from which they can judge for themselves. We sincerely pledge ourselves to make no wild assertions or false statemements of its efficacy, nor will we hold out any hope to suffering humanity which facts will not warrant.

Many proofs are here given, and we solicit an inquiry from the public into all we publish, feeling assured they will find them perfectly reliable, and the medicine worthy their best confidence and patronage.

FROM BENJ. SILLIMAN, M. D., L. L. D., &c.,
Professsor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, &c., Yale College, Member of the Lit. Hist. Med. Phil. and Scien. Societies of America and Europe.

"I deem the CHERRY PECTORAL an admirable composition from some of the best articles in the Materia Medica, and a very effective remedy for the class of diseases it is intended to cure."

New Haven, Ct., Nov. 1, 1849.

Prof. CLEAVELAND, of Bowdoin College, Me. Writes—"I have witnessed the effects of your "CHERRY PECTORAL" in my own family and that of my friends and it gives me satifaction to state in its favor that no medicine I have ever known has proved so eminently successful in curing diseases of the throat and lungs."

REV. DR. OSGOOD.

Writes—"That he considers 'CHERRY PECTORAL' the best medicine for Pulmonary Affections ever given to the public," and states that "his daughter after being obliged to keep the room four months with a severe settled cough, accommpanied by raising of blood, night sweats, and the attendant symptoms of Consumption, commenced the use of the 'CHERRY PECTORAL,' and had completely recovered."

HEAR THE PATIENT.

Dr. Ayer—Dear Sir: For two years I was afflicted with a very severe cough, accomanied by spitting of blood and profuse night sweats. By the advice of my attending physician I was induced to use your CHERRY PECTORAL, and continued to do so till I considered myself cured, and ascribe the effect to your preparation.

JAMES RANDALL.

Hampden ss. SPRINGFIELD, Nov. 27. 1848.

This day appeared the above named James Randal, and pronounced the above statement true in every respect.

LORENZO NORTON, Justice.

THE REMEDY THAT CURES.

PORTLAND, Me., Jan. 10, 1847.

Dr. Ayer: I have been long afflicted with Asthma which grew yearly worse until last autumn, it brought on a congh which confined me in my chamber, and began to assume the alarming symptoms of consumption—I had tried the best advice and the best medicine to no purpose, until I used your CHERRY PECTORAL, which has cured me, and you may well believe me. Gratefully yours.

J. D. PHELPS.

If there is any value in the judgement of the wise, who speak from experience, here is a medicine worthy of the public confidence.

MECHANICAL MEDICINE.

Dr. Banning, formerly of this city, asks to announce that he has returned to 341 Broadway; for consultation and management of weakneses of the vocal, pulmonary, digestive, nervous, spinal and female systems; and also of the drooping, languor and physical deformities, which are so destructive of both health and beauty at the present day.

As these and kindred maladies are usually the result of a violation of the laws of physical organization, he will treat them chiefly by those exercises, mechanical appliances and reformatory habits of body, in coujunction with hydropathy galvanism and other discoveries of the day, which, united with the cooperative efforts of the subject, are calculated to relieve and restore the energies of the suffering and neglected organs.

Having spent several years in traveling for investigation and practical experiment on the subject, he has, at length, greatly improved and multiplied his surgical and mechanical appliances for the purpose. In addition to his new supports for female and spinal weaknesses, are some combining the properties of a universal hernial truss and an effective general support, with which he challenges cases of general debility, constipation, piles and prolapsus, ani, lencorrhea, prolapsus uteri and every variety of hernia.

The distinctive peculiarity of these devices is, that they do not weaken or restrain the motions or growth of the suffering parts, but act imitatively and concordantly with the mathematical genius of the body's forces. Hence, by a most comfortable and gentle pressure, they at once give great support and render the oppressed system eligible to its own restoration.

Feeble invalids coming from a distance will command prompt and faithful attention.

For more definite information, see his revised edition of "Animal Mechanics," and also his circular, which will be sent gratuitously when requested.

His improved body-braces, spinal supports and supporter trusses applied at his office (341 Broadway) and to be had wholesale and retail- City and country physicians and druggists are invited to call and examine Office hours from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. [121.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impetency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence. fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cerdial cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without offspring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co., of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper.

WONDERFUL CURES!

AND

CANCHALAGUA;

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to CONSUMPTION.

NO OPIUM.

This syrup contains no Opium, Calomel, or any mineral whatever, but is composed entirely of those Roots, Herbs, and vegetable substances which have a specific influence upon the Lungs, and their connected organs. Its immediate effect is to allay all irritation, and gently remove the phlegm and other morbid secretions from the Throat and Air-Passages; thus relieving the Cough, by subduing the inflammation and other causes which give rise to it. It also stimulates and imparts a healthy tone to the lungs themselves, thereby enabling them more thoroughly to remove from the blood those impurities and diseased particles, which, if retained, do so much mischief in the system, and lay the foundation for incurable CONSUMPTION. It also exerts a decided action upon the skin, and assists nature in expelling, through the Exhalents, much of that morbid matter which would otherwise be thrown back upon the Lungs, thus relieving them of a part of their work, and rendering the system pure and healthy. When tubercles are forming, it checks their development and further progress; or if ulceration has taken place, it assists the Lungs in throwing off the corrupted matter, soothes the irritation, heals the ulcerated cavities, and restores them again to healthy action. This Medicine, therefore, is not a palliative merely, which only relieves for the time being, but is a thorough curative, as it strikes at the very root of the disease, and by removing it, removes at once all its remote and attendant consequences. This is its distinguishing characteristic—a property possessed, in equal power, by no other medicine of like nature, now before the public.

CIRCULARS, &c.

As no ordinary-sized advertisement can fully explain the nature and merits of this article the Proprietors have published a new Circular, giving the history of this Medicine: the description, nature &c., of its principal ingredients; the effect they are designed to have upon the Lungs and Liver, and a copious reference to the persons who have been cured by it—giving their names and residences, even to the street and the number. Those who are troubled with a Cough, or whose Lungs are in the least affected, are earnestly desired to call upon the Agents named below, and procure one of these Pamphlets. It can be had gratis, and will well repay a perusal. The "Hints on Health," and "About taking Cold," may be worth to yourself and family, in the shape of Doctors' Bills saved, besides being the means of prolonging many a valuable life.

HUNDREDS OF DOLLARS,

WARRANTY.

Such is our confidence in its virtues, that we are willing to warrant this Medicine in every case of recent Cold, (where used according to the Directions on page 7th of the pamphlet, inside the wrapper of each bottle,) and where the person is not satisfied that he is deriving benefit from it, by returning the bottle within 24 hours' time, will be returned. ☞ See page 3d of the pamphlet inside the wrapper of each bottle.

THE MONEY

☞ Be sure to ask for Dr. A. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, and CANCHALAGUA, and let no other be palmed on to you.

CAUTION.—None genuine, unless there is on the buff wrapper a note of hand, signed with a Pen, by A. L. SCOVILL & CO.

FOR SALE, wholesale and retail, by A. L. SCOVILL & Co., Proprietors, at their Principal Depot, GOTHIC HALL, no 316, Broadway, New York, to whom all orders for the Medicine, and letters relating to agencies, should be addressed, post-paid.

The continued success of this Magazine presents the strongest motives to the Publishers to make it still more worthy of the unprecedented favor with which it has been received by the public. The present number is embellished with the portraits of the eminent American writers Irving and Bryant, and a view of their residences, accompanied with original sketches of their literary character. Others, names names distinguished in letters and science, will be made the subject of articles and pictorial illustrations in subsequent numbers.

The circulation of the Magazine is now SIXTY THOUSAND, and is regularly extending in every part of the Union. No effort will be spared to render it a great National Work, both in regard to the richness and variety of its contents and its adaptation to the wants of the American mind. The utmost care will be taken to present a faithful and pleasing picture of the current literature, while nothing will be admitted which can offend the most tastidious taste or the nicest sense of morality. As an agreable and instructive publication for family reading in any portion of our vast Republic, the Publishers are determined that it shall be without a superior in the literature of the world.

Each number of the Magazine will contain 144 pages octavo, in double columns. The volumes of a single year, therefore, will present nearly two thousand pages of the choicest of the Miscellaneous Literature of the age. A carefully prepared Fashion Plate, and other pictorial illustrations, will accompany each number.

Terms.—Three Dollars a year or Twenty-five Cents a Number. The First Volume, is now ready, neatly bound in Muslin, at Two Dollars. The Work may be obtained of Booksellers and Periodical Agents, and of the Publishers.

Liberal arrangemts will be made with the Trade, with Postmasters, and with Agents for efforts in circulating the Work, and Specimen Numbers will be supplied gratuitously to them.

The Publishers will supply Mail and City Subscribers when payment is made to them in advance.—Clubs supplied upon liberal terms. Muslin Covers for each volume will be furnished by the Publishers and Agents at Twenty-five Cents each.

Persons desiring the Work early will please to furnish their names and address to the Agents. Orders for Numbers from the commencement can now be supplied.

THE NEW JERSEY

HORSE POWER

Manufacturing Company.

HAVING improved, strengthened and perfected A. D. CRANE'S Patent Horse Power, are now prepared to furnish the same to all who may want.

This Power consists of an endless floor running over a series of pulleys, connected by cranks, without a rack or cog wheel about it: none being required from the fact, that the weight of the horse on the floor or platform causes sufficient adhesion between it and the pulleys to transmit all the power he is able to give. Also by this arrangement the chain is freed from the draught or strain (which cannot be avoided in any other Stall Power) except, what is reqired to pass the floor around. The requisite speed is obtained direct from the machine thereby avoiding a great amount of friction and wear, and lessening the liability to get out of order. They run so easily as to require less than an inch elevation to the foot. A self acting brake is attached by which the motion is kept regular and uniform even when the work is unsteady and irregular.

From the above description it is evident that this is the most simple and efficient Power known.

They are highly recommended by those who have used them, for driving Circular Saws, Lathes, Drilling Machines, Threshers, Grist Mills, Pumps, &c.

The Company have certificates to prove the above and also to show that the Two Horse Power will grind 40 bushels of Corn to Meal (with Platt's Patent Mill.) in a day of ten hours, making it an invaluable Power for the Southern planter as well as others.

It has taken Silver Medals at the different Fairs where exhibited, and the only one given to Horse Powers by the American Institute last fall.

They also furnish Threshers of the most approved construction.

Price of Single Power with Belt, $75; Double do. with Belts $110: Thresher and Separator, $35.

For the Plainfield Gazette.

MESSRS. EDITORS.—Being from home, when W. M. D's reply to my last, was published, it has not been practicable for me to respond as early as I otherwise should. On reading his article, I find he holds, that the question between us, is, whether the Bible be true. But such is not the fact. The question between us, is, whether the experience of man proves the laws of nature to be immutable. W. M. D. affirms that it does, I deny it. Whenever, and in so far, as he writes to this point, I will answer him. When my opponent says of our knowledge of facts, received through our senses, "that we know, and can know it no more certainly if we were coexistent with eternity," in this he speaks to the question; and as the statement has the appearance of containing an additional idea to what had been advanced before, I will answer it. I admit, that we may know various facts, or circumstances by our senses, just as certainly as if we were coexistent with eternity; but, that, for this reason, we know that the laws by which such facts, or circumstances came to pass, are immutable, I deny. We may know that the sun appears in the east, and disappears in the west, day after day, but we do not know, therefore, that the law by which that takes place, is immutable. It is one thing to know that an event takes place, and another thing to know that the law by which that event takes place is immutable, or, (which is the same thing,) that said law is eternal, and can not possibly be suspended reversed or destroyed, by any power in the universe. The knowledge we get by our senses though it be certain, can never enable us to investigate the primary constitution, or nature, of nature's laws, in order to ascertain what they are capable, or incapable of. [By or through what other source can or do we know it or any other thing or fact; by or through what other source can we know or judge of the truth or certainty of Revelation, whether it be of God? Shall we indeed inquire of a Clairvoyant, or "Rochester knocker"?—W. M. D.] And so long as our experience is finite, or limited, we can never, by it know, what may, or may not exist in the infinite which every where spreads, and extends, beyond the contracted limits of our vaunted experience.

I find nothing else in W. M. D's article which bears on the question between us, but what he has before advanced, and I have answered. If he has nothing more to advance on this question, I should be glad if he would inform me to that effect. If he has other proof, I wish he would present it, that I may examine it. But I protest against his wanton violation of the rules of debate, and especially in spreading before our readers such a mass of invective, against the Bible, before that point can properly be taken up. No one can doubt I presume, that it has been W. M. D's principle, and only object from the first, to make it appear that the Bible is not true. [Was not this the subject when L. C. made his attack, and was not truth assigned as the object?—W. M. D.] And it has been my intention to follow him in his arguments on that point in due time. But the question of the immutability of the laws of nature is, and must be an entirely independent question from that of the truth of the Bible, but most of all, with the man who denies its truth. For such a man, to talk about the Bible, (a book he does not believe) when attempting to prove the laws of nature to be immutable, or any thing elsewhatever, is manifestly out of all reason. Suppose the Bible were all untrue, that would not prove the laws of nature to be immutable. But, if it can be proved, that the laws of nature are immutable, that may prove the Bible to be untrue. [Aye, aye, that's the rub; inevitable isn't it?—W. M. D.] And as W. M. D. has affirmed that the laws of nature are immutable, and laid that doctrine down in the outset, as the corner stone of his affirmation that the Bible is not true, he has no right to take up any other topic, until he has done what he can, to establish his first, and grand proposition, on which his entire system depends. And as I have told him before, I now tell him again, I will discuss no other point, till this is done with; whatever amount of labor he may expend, to show that the Bible or any thing else, is not true. I now ask W. M. D. not to persist in the course he is taking, but keep to the point, and write to the question. I wait to hear if he has any other evidence to present in this case.

LUCIUS CRANDALL.

Reply.

Although there is a superabundance of evidence in addition to what we have already given, yet as before stated, we are perfectly satisfied to let that point—the immutability of nature's laws—rest with the judgment of the critical or investigating reader; knowing that no man can disprove this position.—Were this not the case, those who are acquainted with the acute logical reasoning and indomitable perseverance of our opponent to establish a point, know, that ere this he would have attempted its refutation; for upon the truth of this, as he very justly remarks, does the correctness of our conclusions depend. But they know, and he knows that they know, that so long as tangible indisputable evidence, in daily sight of all our readers exists, for instance, so long as the water wheel to the mill in the centre of our village, or the sun in the heavens,—demonstrations or facts that L. C. admits we can know the truth of "just as certainly as if we were coexistent with eternity"—or any similar demonstration, continues to exist, to move round on its axis in obedience to that immutable law of nature (we ask for no stronger or more certain evidence than this to prove a contrary proposition) so long will the refutation of that proposition be unattempted, or at least remain impossible that it should succeed, it being a constant refutation of a contrary proposition; therefore a constant and ever reliable witness whose evidence L. C. (with those persons who have intimated that they can refute it, including those who besides L. C. have made the attempt, or those who may fancy themselves more able to do it, to assist him) cannot disprove, invalidate or impeach; therefore, so long as these things exist, as this law of nature exists, which is coextensive with eternity, with God, just so long will they prove that the Bible is not what it is represented to be, the word of God.

L. C. admits that our knowledge of a fact thus established, is as well ascertained, "just as certain as if we were coexistent with eternity." A supererogation entirely uncalled for, it being as we have proven, and as every act of man's life constantly demonstrates, a universally admitted axiom, or self evident truth, that fire will burn and water seek a level; that this is an immutable law; and therefore this being a law of nature, that the laws of nature are immutable, eternal. But, forsooth, because we do not know the reason why, they so act, because we cannot "investigate the primary constitution, or nature, of nature's laws,"—this argument denies the existence of God—therefore L. C. argues that they do not so act, that they do not exist!

Thus it will be seen that the argument objection or difficulty that L. C. has attempted to show was in the way of the truth of our proposition does not exist; it is, as we have shown, a complete refutation of itself. It does not require the ingenuity or intellect of L. C. to perceive this; it cannot fail to be perceived by the most careless observer.

"And the windows of heaven were opened." (Gen. 7: 11.)—Of course, if there were windows, the sash had to be shoved up; and the water we may suppose was poured out as we might pour it out of a tub from an upper story window of a house upon the heads of the passers by below. If the flood was a literal flood of water upon the earth, as we have always been given to understand, then also is there windows in heaven. So also, if there was not a literal garden of Eden, a terrestial paradise, neither could there be a tree upon which the knowledge of good and evil grew, (Gen. 2: 8 to 18.) and as there could have been no forbidden fruit eaten, there could have been no transgression, consequently the scheme of salvation cannot be the result of a thing which never happened. We cannot construe one part of these things, to suit our purpose, literally, and the other part figuratively, this would be manifestly unjust; therefore which shall be the interpretation thereof? But, as L. C. has suggested, this is enough; but every page affords more if wanted. When will men investigate and think for themselves; aye, how much longer will they require others, clergymen and editors to think for them? It cannot be expected that the Clergy will admit these things, but if they cannot defend them when investigated by others what must be the conclusion?

Therefore, with what we have said upon this point, as we have bebore intimated, we are perfectly content to let it go before the candid conscientious judgment of the reader. Therefore, we trust that L. C. will, if he can, produce any argument or evidence, to mitigate or offset, as the lawyers say, against the irresistable conclusions which the establishment of our proposition makes so clearly evident to all.

W. M. D.

Spiritual Manifestations.

The N. Y. Commercial Advertiser brings the telescope of "Common Sense" to bear upon the modern developments, and thus presents the results of its examination:

We beg the candid reader to look a moment at the absurdity of what is claimed by this class of impostors. Clairvoyants, for this folly is still practised to profit, claim to attain the knowledge of the most profound secrets, otherwise absolutely and immeasurably beyond the ken of mortals. They claim to see clearly the faintest tint of inflammation, the slightest indications of organic or local derangement in the dark caverns of a man's internals, and this through the skin and dark, solid flesh which one would think would make it mighty dark within and form a very effectual barrier to the vision of the most clear sighted creatures. Then they claim an intuitive knowledge of the mode of cure and the properties of medicines; They claim also the power of transporting themselves whither they will, of wandering through the rooms of any house they choose, seeing what every body is doing and knowing every body's thoughts. Other powers they claim, but this enumeration will suffice. Now, reader, suppose that you possessed these powers. Would you odly employ them when called upon by somebody, with a dollar or two in his hand ready to pay you for using them in the exploration of his stomach, lungs or liver? Is it not plain to you that if you possessed such powers, you might speedily have the world a suppliant at your feet, and might command wealth even more unbounded than your desires? Assuredly you might.

Reflect then upon the absurdity in which those persons are involved who claim such powers of clairvoyance and yet dole them out—that wait for questioners who shall pay such fee as they can afford, be it twenty-cents, or five dollars, for such vague and unmeaning aswers as they choose to be content with. Let common sense decide here. Equally absurd are all the other outbreaks of the present epidemic.—Four females sit behind a table that through them the spirits of the dead may make a number of knocks which the females may spell out, knock by knock and letter by letter, into a very unsatisfactory answer to a very foolish and simple question. Now look at the pretensions. They are that spirits are present: that they know your secret thoughts; that they will give you any information you desire; that they will only do this by rapping and through these women. In other words, the spirits of one's dearest friends prefer to converse with strangers (who make a profit out of that preference,) to talking with one's self; they follow those ladies about, like lap dogs in leading strings, those spirits know one's thoughts, but say nothing until questions are asked, and then often answer incorrectly: with a long train of other absurdities that crowd upon the mind.

So much for the absurdity. We hold, however, that there is far more revolting feature of the whole business than this. The clairvoyance, the Rochester knockings, the spiritual interviews and communications are all tainted with this one thing which ought to open every one's eyes—NO PAY, NO INFORMATIONS. The clairvoyant sees the Rochester women make their muffled sounds, at so much an interview. The invalid on the brink of death, who consults the clairvoyant must present his fees, if it be the last dollar he has and his wife and children are starving for lack of money to provide food with. The votary who visits the Rochester itinerant venders of spiritual messages must pay his dollar before the alleged spirit, even of his own wife and child will speer a single rap at him. And so all round. Was ever the greed of gain more barefaced? Why your quack doctors will advertise "No cure no pay," but these impostors pretend to stand at the gate of the unseen world, to hold in their hands the keys of the only door of entrance and exit, declare themselves the only medium of communication between the spirits and flesh enshrined mortals, and proclaim aloud and unblushingly, "Step in, gentleman; a dollar a head into the ante-room, all round, and take the chance of meeting the spirit and getting the information you want. You cannot meet the spirit of your lost child, sir, without paying us a dollar."

This may seem rough language, but it is an exact and truthful statement of the ral issue. We are well assured that the whole business from beginning to end is a monstrous fraud and nothing else. But suppose the theory and practice of spiritual communications conveyed through clairvoyance and Rochester knockings to be true, then we have to take all the just inferences which follow. They are these:—and the reader will readily see the absurdity. The spirits can choose their own medium of communication. They deliberately hire themselves out to a limited number of persons, to whom they confine the monopoly of the business. With their consent the exhibitors charge a fee for each interview and pocket the proceeds. A spirit wishes to commune with its late associate, perhaps its benevolent and best friend while in the body. It has, however to take the chance of that friend being a visitor, and even then must make him pay a dollar to Mrs. Fox or Mrs. Fish before the interview can be had. Perhaps, too when its friend calls the ladies are sick and hold no exhibition, or the play having ceased to attract and be profitable, they suddenly resolve to move elsewhere. Why this and all the other spirits must pack up and be off also, to bring money to their exhibitor in some other town. The dollar is the mainspring of the whole.

Surely common sense will soon come to the rescue of the deluded victims of such imposture.

Whittling Shingles.

SCENE.—Mr. Plowhandle's dooryard—John and Editor, seated on logs on the sunny side of his great woodpile. John whittling a beech chip; the Editor a bass wood splinter.

The Editor.—Whittle from you, John; why don't you whittle from you?

John.—What's the difference? Whittling is whittling, any way, whether you whittle towards you or from you.

Editor.—A mistake, John; a palpable mistake. There is philosophy in whittling. There is a right way, and a wrong way to do every thing; and for the right way is always a good reason.

John.—Pray what reason for whittling from you. It's a small mater at best—really too small to consider.

Editor.—Wrong again! It's the observance of these little things—the consideration of trifles—that constitutes what men call bad luck. There, now, you have cut your finger—not bad, I hope.

John.—Not very. Curse the knife. [Throwing it down.]

Editor.—Well, this is an apt illustration—proof positive—before I had commenced my argument.

John.—I'd like to know what cutting my finger had to do with luck, good, bad, or indifferent?

Editor.—Everything. If you had considered a moment you would have seen that whittling towards you was dangerous. Common prudence would have shown you that you might cut your fingers; while if you whittle from you, there was no danger. Herein then, is the key to that phantom which men call luck.

John.—Dont you believe in luck.

Editor.—Don't I believe the moon is a green cheese? No, sir. There is no such thing. It's all moonshine. Just now cut your finger and you say 'I am unlucky.' No such thing—you were stupid, careless. Ther's old Gripe, who began with no other capital than his axe, worth now his thousands; and you and every body else says, 'as lucky as old Gripe,' and yet we all know that he has made his money by the operations of a clear intellect—a shrewd, close observance of little things—turning the stream at the fountain, and not waiting until it gets to be a river.

John.—Training the sapling and not the tree.

Editor.—Exactly. A good idea. You always find him about his business. His work is never behind. His hay don't get caught out in the rain. His wheat is never wet in the bundle or swathe. He looks at little doings. If his grain is to stand out over night, it is all nicely put up in shocks and capped; if his hay can't be carted the same day, it's raked and cocked. He says I am not master of the elements, but I am of my time. So he makes sure against contingencies which he cannot control. He always whittles from him; and he is called 'lucky.'

John.—And he is lucky.

Editor.—No such thing; if you mean by that, chance favoring him more than others. Now, there is Dick Careless, he is always railing at his bad luck. Dick works hard. I think he does more real hard work than Gripe. But every body pities poor Dick, he has such 'hard luck.' If it were not for his wife, he would have been in the poor house before now. Every body says, 'what a clever fellow is Dick; and so he is, he minds every body's business but his own. Dick stacks his hay, but neglects to put on binders, and the top blows of and his stack is ruined. He has a nice crop of wheat cut, and intends to cart to-morrow, so he leaves the wheat carried into bunches. But to-morrow it comes on to rain, and his wheat gets wet and sprouts and then you say, 'well, that's just Dick's luck.' Dick has had 'bad luck' with his sheep and cattle and horses, always losing more or less every year. Now, you believe in luck, well just tell me why he loses more than you do?

John.—He is careless. Don't take pains enough with them.

Editor.—Oh! that's it. Which way do you think he whittles? Two to one, John, he whittles towards him. He can't see any difference; and like you is a firm believer in luck. There's Tapewell, Every body says, what a lucky fellow he has been, got as rich as a nabob, and had only a few goods to start upon. While Gingham, who had a fine store, full of goods, went all to smash in three years.

John.—Yes, and old Tape bought his fine store and house at about one-quarter cost. Wasn't that luck?

Editor.—No, sir. Tape lived within his means, and accumulated his profits. He did not care for a fine store while he could sell his goods in the old one; and being at less expense he could always sell a little cheaper, and thus got the best custom. Gingham lived up to his income, and a little over, so when hard times came he could not collect, could not pay, and down he went; while Tape was snug in his old store. Poor Gingham was called unlucky But you see the only difficulty was, he whittled towards himself, till he cut his fingers—while Tape whittled the other way. No such thing as luck there, John.

John,—Dont give it up yet. You're as plausible as a lawyer in a bad case; but st'll I am not convinced. I lost a young colt the other day; dropped down dead in the field; was worth a cool hundred; now, was not that bad luck? I don't know what you call it, but I called it confounded bad luck.

Editor.—How had you kept the colt?

John.—In the stable all winter, on carrots and hay, in fine order. Turned him out to grass the other day and before night of the second day he was stone dead.

Editor.—Did he run much when you let him go; Large field?

John.—Ah, didn't he run? Only a ten acre lot, I thought the fellow never would get enough. What an elegant racer he would have made.

Editor.—Day was warm and night cold?

John —Yes, but what of that?

Editor.—Oh! only you whittled towards you.

John.—How so?

Editor.—Simple John! This you call 'luck,' while it's rank stupidity. Your colt was in high condition—had not been exercised. A prudent man would have put him into a small yard, until he had become somewhat quieted. Old Gripe would not have left him out a cold night, after he had been exercising so severely in a hot sun. The colt was a victim to your own thoughtlessness. He killed himself running. Lucky John!

John —How could I tell he would hurt himself by being turned out. Never had one before, and have done just the same thing times enough before.

Editor.—That's it. We come back to where we started. It's the observance of these trifles, nothing more that makes men lucky or unlucky. Whittle from you, my good fellow, always whittle from you and a fig for luck.

Spirit Rappings Nothing New.

The Journal of Commerce publishes the following letter from the "Norwich Packet," published in Norwich, (Ct.,) March 13, 1789; from which it appears that the "mysterious knockings" are not without a precedent.

Poughkeepsie, Feb. 24. The public curiosity has for some time past been much taken up with very extraordinary circumstances attending a young woman at New Hackinsack, near this place. It is now near three or four weeks since she was attended wherever she went, by an uncommon "knocking" against the floor where she happened to be, and at several other parts of the house she lives in, somewhat resembling the noise attending a shoemaker's hammering on the heel of a shoe. Much pains has been taken to discover the cause of it, but to no purpose. For a few days past, the knocking has increased, and it is (we are informed) attended with the moving of chairs and things thrown from different parts of the room across the floor, in such a manner as to raise the apprehensions of the most curious and enlightened people. We shall endeavor to obtain a particular account of the above circumstances and lay the same before our readers.

An American quaker said to a guard during the revoluiionary war—"Friend, I counsel no bloodshed; but, if it be thy design to hit the little man in the blue jacket, point thy engine three inches lower."

We fear that many who atted divine service merely for form's sake, are not much better posted up than the subject of the following sketch.

"Have you," said an enquiring minded and slightly worldly gentleman, recently, to an "evangelical bookseller" in Broadway, "have you Christ's Sermon on the Mount!" "Christ's Sermon on the Mount!" exclaimed the bookseller, with no little surprise. "Yes," said the other, "it was mentioned yesterday in a very charming discourse at our church, as an admirable thing; but perhaps it isn't out yet!"

"Come down from that building, and I'll knock your head off" "You will, will you!"—"Yes, you scoundril, I will." "Then I guess—upon the whole —I shan't come down!"

The servant of a Prussian officer one day met a crony, who inquired of him how he got along with his firey master "Oh, excellently," answered the servant; "we live on very friendly terms; every morning we beat each other's coats; the only difference is, he takes his off to be beaten, and I keep mine on."

Terrible Destruction of life and property.

Accounts from Malta announce a succession of terrible earthquakes, which have been felt at Makri, a city of Adolia, Turkey, on the Mediterranean, and at the far-famed city and island of Rhodes, which is situated 50 miles out from Makri and the Turkish coast, Rhodes is nearly in the same latitude as New-York, and is distant from here six thousand miles. Its population is 25,000. The English mail steamers connecting with the Overland route to China, pass near Rhodes. The first shock was felt on the 23th of February, between five and half-past five P. M when at Rhodes, the upper part of the castle, which is at the entrance of the town, fell with an awful crash, overwhelming the offices of the Austrian Lloyd's steam navigation company, whilst the tower of Mays-Kule, which commands the entrance of the harbor, and several other parts of the fortifications sustained great injury, as did likewise many dwelling houses, some of which were shaken to their very foundations on the rock—others cracked throughout. The oscillations were from west to east.

At Makri, on the main land, and its immediate neighborhood, the consequences have been most disastrous and heart-rending. The whole of the houses, dwellings, and stores, lately erected in town, have been levelled to the ground, fissures have been formed in the very street, from which bituminous vapors exude continually, almost suffocating the inhabitants; many springs have been dried up, whilst in arid localities new ones have gushed out, changing the whole feature of the earth's suface.

The town of Levissy, which contained 1500 houses, has not one left standing, and no less than 600 human beings are reckoned to be under the ruins, which number would have beed awfully augmented had the shock been after nightfall, when the inhabitants retire to their homes after the labors of the day.—The village of Chiorge has nearly met with the same fate, the upper part of a huge mountain having fallen into, and blocked up, the small port of Eksenide overwhelming all the dwellings round about its base. Another village, more inland, has been buried from the fall, in opposite directions, of two hills, between which it was situated.

PLAINFIELD GAZETTE.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Thursday; April 24, 1851.

☞ Mr Albert D. Drake is our authorised agent to receive subscriptions and advertisments.

☞ Mr. E. W. Carr, Third street, Philadelphia, opposite the Exchange, is our authorised agent for that city.

☞ On our first page will be found the rejoinder or reply of Lucius Crandall to "W. M. D.," with the remarks of W. M. D. thereon. The gentlemanly and candid manner in which L. C. has conducted this discussion elicts our grateful acknowledgments. We wish we could say as much for our unneighborly cotemporary, and others, who, instead of following the generous example of L. C.—an example too given by Him whom they profess to follow—they denounce and would persecute. This, if we are not mistaken, whether they consider the example of Him to whom we have alluded of value or not, will be found not to be the best plan, to reclaim, if you please, a lost brother from the the error of his ways; thus at least have we read history. Bigotry and intolerance, when exercised by ignorance, excites in the better informed of mankind, only pity; but when exercised by men who scorn ignorance and profess knowledge, it only excites their as it does our contempt.

Protestantism, particularly, if we understand its history, has ever boasted of its spirit of Liberty, of toleration, of independence; claiming the right of private judgment in religious as in political or secular matters, and that the individual in his interpretation thereof is alone responsible to his God. Will those who profess to claim this right for themselves, those who proclaim that the Reformation was and is founded on right, justice and truth, and that it is therefore the foundation of civil and religious liberty, in this boasted enlightened age, in the nineteenth century of the Christian era, in the 73d year of the Independence of these United States, deny this right to any of their fellow men? Does Protestantism, after having made this the basis of its own existence, the ladder whereby it has gained power and influence, does it now claim exemption from investigation; has it indeed arrived at infallability? Our enlighened opponent says not; even we would fain have a better opinion of it, and therefore, in consideration of the opinions of the enlightened reader, we say not; therefore have we entered upon its discussion—a proper and just consequence of its own existence—as we would upon that of any other subject of interest.

Because we have established a paper wherein these objects in all their length and breadth, wherein the rights of all and every, even the most humble individual, are attempted to be set forth, wherein "Freedom to all opinions candidly expressed" is denied to none, shall either bigotry, intolerance or malice succeed to prevent it, to accomplish its and our overthrow? We trust not: we believe not — We have more confidence in the intelligence, liberal patriotic and virtuous principles of the enterprising citizens of our thriving town, than to suppose that because they may differ with us in opinion on many subjects of general interest, that therefore they will proscribe us for exercising the same privilege, for the utterance thereof, or that because we advocate the equal inalienable rights of all.

We do not care to have our paper constantly filled with the same stereotyped matter, the preface to some spelling book, or something similar, important though it may be, but choose rather to have it interspersed with original thought, humbly expressed though it be, on all subjects of interest to the social well being of our fellow man. We wish to make it, as we conceive all newspapers of a general character ought to be, the medium of useful knowledge to the people; this we conceive can be done in no way so efficiently as by a free interchange of thought, of ideas, by full and free discussion, on all subjects pertaining to man's welfare and happiness. This, with the liberal patronage we have received, and as we believe in consequence of the liberal course we have hitherto pursued, and which is still increasing, warrants us in stating that we shall not be driven therefrom by the intolerant proscription of the few.

On this question (the subject under debate) we know we are on the unfashionable therefore the unpopular side; but it is not fashion or popularity we court, but truth. Truth, pure and unadulterated truth, we conceive to be the most valuable, we care not from what source it comes, and therefore we shall not lose sight of it for mere fashion or popularity; so far as we know ourselves, truth, knowledge and freedom to all has been our object on this as upon all other questions. We care not for party or sect, but rather seek through the promotion of these important objects to secure the good of the whole; we rather consider them in their past and present aspects as detrimental to the public good. We consider our stake in these matters as important and as valuable as that of those who may fancy themselves or their opinions of more consequence; we doubt not this is the opinion of our opponent as well as of every other candid conscientious observer of the principle of "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

☞ Rebels and Tories, or the Blood of the Mohawk;" A Revolutionary Legend, by Lawrence Labree Esq. Published by Dewitt & Davenport, Tribune Buildings, N. Y.

Few Works are so popular or so deeply interesting to the reader as those exciting Revolutionary Legends, which, while they make the blood course more rapidly through our veins, also awaken a strong feeling of gratitude, and stir up all our amor patriæ, when we reflect that the blessing we as individuals now enjoy, and the lofty position we now occupy as a nation, were purchased by the hardships, toils, and very life-blood of our brave forefathers, whose heroic deeds are worthy subjects of the chronicler's pen.

We must confess that we have rarely read a work, interesting as many of this class are, which has excited in us a deeper interest; right glad are we to welcome back to the fields of literature a gentleman favorably known as editor of the "Illustrated Magazine," which took rank with our boasted "Monthlies."

☞ "A Memoir of the Rev. Henry Watson Fox, B. A., of Wadham College, Oxford; Missionary to the Teloogoo People, South India;" by the Rev. George Townsend Fox, B. A. of Durham, with an introductory essay by Rev. C. P. M'Ilvaine, D. D, Bishop of Ohio.

In this work the Christian reader particularly, will find many things of great interest, truthfully set forth by the author as practically exemplified in the life of this distinguished Missionary, who from his careful observance of the manners and customs of this People and his general acquaintance with human nature, has left us in his journals, from which much of the material of this work is drawn, a great deal of valuable and interesting matter. The work is beautifull embellished with engravings, illustrating the manners customs and religion of this peculiar people, and a map of the Missionary field in India. Being well printed on extra quality paper and neally bound in cloth; it will be a valuable accession to any library. Robert Carter and Brothers publishers, 285 Broadway, N. Y.

☞ "The Scalpel.—A Journal of Health, For the People."—The May number of this Journal was received some days since, too late however to notice in our last. We have repeatedly expressed our opinion of the value of this work to the scientific and general reader, and the perusal of the present number by no means diminishes our estimation of it. We would particularly invite the attention of heads of families to an examination of this work, (which may be done at this office) believing it better calculated than any other with which we are acquainted to give them correct information on that all important subject, Health: This is done too in so masterly a manner, interspersed with anecdote so abounding in wit and sarcastic humor as to render this generally dry subject one of peculiar pleasure as well as interest. Published quarterly by the Editor, Edward H. Dixon, M. D., at $1. per annum in advance; address as above, Box 3121, New York Post Office. $2 will procure the work from No. 1 to 12 inclusive, which may be had at this office for less than the postage additional.

The Storm.—Great damage has been done along the coast by the recent storm. At the east it was very severe; Minot's Ledge Lighthouse was entirely swept away, the two assistant keepers perished. The streets in Boston along the quays were entirely submerged, and the storm it is said was more violent in that vicinity than it had been in 30 years, much damagee has been done to the wharfs and other property at the seaport towns, many vessels were ashore along the coast.

☞ The Steamer Pacific arrived at New York on Saturday last from Liverpool, in nine days and 20 hours, the shortest passage on record.

School Law in Sussex.

We are gratified to learn that the several townships in this County, with few exceptions, voted the highest sum, three dollar limit, allowed by law for school purposes. In Newton $2464 was voted; Wantage $1500; Sparta $250 in addition to the usual sum; in Lafayette and Greene, (where, to the praise of the people of these townships be it spoken, the Common Schools have always been free to the children of the poor,) each voted the $3 limit; so did Still water, Montague, Byram, and Frankford. This is a good beginning, now what will be the results. One man in moderate circumstances told us on election day that he had four children, all of whom were old enough to go to school, and with the $12 distributed he could afford to send them through the whole year, while the taxes on his house and lot and personal property would be but slightly increased to raise it. Another had 6 children to send, and with $18 distributed upon them he could do much towards keeping the school open the year round for the benefit of his rich neighbors, who had formerly suspended the school whenever the public money run out. Let it be remembered too, that under the law equalising taxes the poor man pays as much taxes in proportion to what he is worth as the rich, and in their distribution the rich man shares equally with the poor man.—New Jersey Herald.

☞ Fifteen Hundred Dollars was voted to support the Free School in this village, with but 1 vote for a smaller sum. $300 of the amount is to be appropriated to diminish the debt on the School House.

The law allows $3 to be raised for every child in the respective townships—but not to exceed that. Several townships have voted that amount, including Bloomfield and Clinton in this county.

An Act.

To provide for the construction of sidewalks along highways, for the accommodation of foot travelers.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That it shall be lawful for the inhabitants of any township in this state, at their annual meeting, to provide for the construction of sidewalks on the public highways, not exceeding in width one fifth on each side of the road of the width thereof, and also to place posts or a railing by the side thereof; which sidewalks shall be constructed out of any money raised for repairs of highways; and the amount so to be expended, and the road or place where the sidewalks shall be made, shall be determined by such meeting, or by the township committee.

2. And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for any person owning or occupying lands adjoining a public road or highway, in any township, city or ward, to construct sidewalks on said highway, in the manner herein before provided, contiguous and along the line of said land.

3. And be it enacted, That when a sidewalk shall have been constructed as aforesaid, every person who shall ride, or drive a horse or team thereon, except for the purpose of crossing the same when necessary so to do, shall forfeit and pay the sum of five dollars to the use of the township, to be sued for and recovered by any person who will sue for the same

4, And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved March 14, 1851.

A Supplement to the act entitled 'An act securing to Mechanics and others payment for their labor and materials in erecting any house or other buildings within the limits therein mentioned,' approved April fifteenth, eighteen hundred and forty-six.

1. Be it enected by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That the act entitled 'An Act securing to Mechanics and others payment for their labor and materials, in erecting any house or other buildings within the limits therein mentioned,' approved April fifteenth, eighteen hundred and forty-six, and all the benefits and provisions of said act, be and the same are hereby extended to all the counties of this state.

2. And be it enacted, That so much of the first proviso in the first section of the act to which this is a supplement, as requires the claim to be filed within six months from the time the materials were furnished and work done, be and the same is hereby extended to one year.

3. And be it enacted, That this act shall be deemed a public act, and shall go into effect immediately.

Approved March 7, 1851.

☞ We understand that the Rev. E. H. Chapin, of New York, will deliver a Temperance Lecture in this place, on Tuesday evening, May 6th. Of course on such a subject, with such an orator none can fail to attend.

Reform Victories.

Within a few days past our Whig foggies have been subjected to severe flaggellations in the municipal elections at Morristown, Elizabethtown, Trenton, Burlington, Belvidere, &c. The Democrats have elected the Mayor and a majority of Common Council men in each. In Morristown, if we may judge from the groans of a letter writer in the Daily Advertiser the success of the Democrats was most triumphant. The Whigs by refusing to nominate a candidate for Assessor made the Tax Law the question, and the result was the defeat of every man upon their ticket, except one constable in this heretofore strong whig town. So much for the passage of the Reform measures by a Democratic Legislature which the whig leaders affect to believe are unpopular with the people on account of their "impracticability!"—New Jersey Herald.

☞ The New York Legislature adjourned sine die last week. Twelve Senators resigned to prevent the passage of the bill to enlarge the Erie Canal, believing it unconstitutional, leaving the senate without a quorum. The Governor has called an extra session which is to convene on the 10th of June next.

DIED.

In this place on Sunday April 20th, George Thorn son of James Thorn, aged about 17 years.

Three Specifics Blended.

Liverwort and Tar have both been held to be sure remedies for Coughs Colds, Croup, Asthma, Bronchitis, and almost every other variety of disease that assails the breathing apparatus. But the compound was imperfect, until the great California Tonic and febrifuge, which strengthens without exciting, was added to the first named ingredients. When, under the skilful manipulations of Dr. Rogers, the triplicate of vegetable curatives became one in his Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua, the absolute cure of all Lung complaints tending to, and terminating in Consumption, became a thing of certainty. As yet, there have been few failures, but the cures, well attested, are of ample record. Evidence of the highest character is offered in the pamphlet in the hands of Agents, and in an advertisement in this week's paper.

Electro-Magnetic Remedies

AND PRACTICE.

OF THE LATE

DR. H. H. SHERWOOD,

The preparation of Dr. H. H. SHERWOOD'S well known Electro-Magnetic Remedies of Compound CHLORIDE OF GOLD, which have obtained a success so remarkable in the cure of CHRONIC DISEASES, is continued as usual at his late residence, in accordance with his last will and directions, by his son-in-law, WM. LARNED, with competent medical assistance, under the name of H H. SHERWOOD'S SUCCESSORS.

They also continue the medical practice of Dr. Sherwod and the publicatian of his various medical works.

His MAGNETIC MACHINES which are admirably adapted for medical use, are also manufactured by them, and can be sent by express or otherwise to any part of the world.

All communications should be addressed to
H. H. SHERWOOD'S SUCCESSORS.
102 Chamber-street, New York.

We would caut on the public against spurious imitations of Dr. Sherwood's Remedies, none being genuine unless prepared by ourselves, the receipts of Dr. Sherwood being in our sole possession by his last will and testament.

If sold by our authorized agents they will always be accompanied by Dr. Sherwood's valuable treatise on the Motive power of the Human System, a work of about 200 pages duly secured by copyright.

We would call attention to the following abstract of Dr. Sherwood's theory of medical practice.

From the Manhattan Souvenir.

THE ELECTRO-MAGNETIC THEORY OF MEDICAL PRACTICE.

We are not of the number who at once enter a nil utili upon the promulgation of a new theory, or one differing from the dogmas of the schools. Nay, we derive a positive pleasure from the examination of ideas above the plane orthodox and gray bearded sciences. At this present writing we owe no little satisfaction to the examination of a pamphlet containing the rationale of the late Dr. Sherwoods' practice in acute and chronic diseases. The pamphlet gives a concise history of the rise and progress of the magnetic practise, and the theory appears well supported by analogy and proved by conclusive experiments

All the organs of the body are, without exception covered with a kind of skin called a serous membrane in which are an immense number of minute glands, with ducts terminating in open orifices on the surface. These glands excrete a watery fluid by which the surfaces are kept constantly moist. The internal part of the body, the mouth, œsophagus, stomach, and intestines, are also lined with a membrane differing from the one above mentioned in having a vilious instead of a serous surface. The membranes enclose glands and numerous cavities opening also upon the surface. These ducts and cavities are filled with a semi fluid, or mucus, which is constantly issuing from them; and hence these are called mucous membranes. In the human body there are also four hundred and thirty six muscles arranged for producing motion. These muscles are also covered with a membrane, the outer side of which has a serous and the inner a mucus surface.

There are thus two surfaces in the human organization disposed in different ways exuding each its own fluid. Repeated experiments have demonstrated that each of these exudations gives out its peculiar electric force; the serous giving the negative and the mucus the positive; thus forming a magnetic battery in which the nerves are wires conveying the current to the brain.

In a state of health these secretions and forces are in a state of equilibrium In a state of disease there is a predominace of one force over the other—Upon this discovery Dr. Sherwood's theory is based, his Remedies being electric in their action, and restoring the positive, and negative currents in the body to a healthy equipose

HIRAM ANDERSON,
139.] No 99 Bowery, New York.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS,

or Medicated Compound.

INFALLIBLE for renewing, invigorating, and beautifying the HAIR, removing the scurf, dandruff, and all affections of the scalp; and curing eruptions on the skin, diseases of the glands, muscles and integuments, and releieving stings, cuts, bruises, sprains, &c. With this preperation "there is no such word as fail." The first journals in America, medical men of the highest eminence, prominent citizens of all professions, and ladies who have used it for years in their dressing rooms and nurseries, admit with one accord, that for imparting vigor, gloss, luxurience and curl to the hair, eradicating scurf and dandruff, healing wounds, curing contusions, sprains, stings &c., and relieving diseases of the skin, the glands and the muscles, it has no equal, among the multitude of compounds advertised in the public prints, or used in private practice. In cheapness as well as efficacy, Barry's Tricopherous is unrivalled The immense cash sales of the article have enabled the Inventor to supply it at retail, at 25 cents per bottle, which is from 50 to 100 per cent less than the price of any other preperation for the hair now in use. The scientific treatise on the hair and the skin, (embracing valuable directions for the culture and preservation of Nature's choicest ornament,) in which each bottle is enclosed, is alone worth the money.

The affinity between the membranes which constitute the skin, and the hair which draws its sustenance from this triple envelope is very close. All diseases of the hair or ginate in the skin of the head. If the pores of the scalp are clogged, or if the blood and other fluids do not circulate freely through the small vessels which feed the root with moisture, and impart life to the fibres, the result is scurf, dandruff, shedding of the hair, graveness, dryness and harshness of the ligaments, and entire baldness, as the case may be. Stimulate the skin to healthful action with the Tricopherous, and the torpid vessels, recovering their activity, will anihilate the disease. In all affections of the skin, and of the substrata of muscles and integuments, the process and the effect are the same.—It is upon the skin, the muscular fibre, and the glands, that the Tricopherous has its specific action, and in all affections and injury of these organs, it is a sovereign remedy.

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States and Canada. [134is

THE CHEAP DRY GOODS STORE,

DELANO'S
PATENT INDEPENDENT HORSERAKE,

In the Counties of Somerset, Middlesex, Essex, Hudson, Bergen and Passaic, and will have them ready ready by the 1st of May

This Rake was patented by Calvin Delano, of East Livermore, Maine, Feb. 27 1649 It is fitted to the hind wheels of a Single Horse Wagon, and attended by a man or boy who can RIDE AND RAKE, and manage the horse with ease and certainty.

Each Tooth acts separately and independently, its head being suspended on a rod or hinge over the Axletree, one Tooth being attached to each head It is equally applicable to ROUGH AND SMOOTH LAND, and applies with equal pressure on each kind of surface

Premiums and Diplomas were awarded it in the Fall of 1847 and 1848, by the Kennebec and Franklin Counties Agricultural Societies Its utility has been tested by more than 100 Farmers in the State of Maine, who have certified to its superiority over all other Horse Rakes

Francis F Haines of East Livermore, authorized by the Patentee, will dispose of the Patent Right, within and for the States of New-Jersey and Pennsylvania, by Counties or Towns on very liberal terms

All infringements on the Patent Right of the above Invention will be prosecuted, without favor, to final judgment CALVIN DELANO, Patentee.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels: such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt

RUPTURES, are always to be treated with the surgical instruments known as Trusses and Supporters, and these require to be skillfully applied. With this view, the HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE, now established some thirty years, has under the various managers, presented to the public both male and female attendants to apply its instruments directly to the persons, which is preferable in all cases, and has also made improvement at different times, showing that advancement which study and practice only yield toward the relief of this malady.

With much pleasure the fact is now published, that recent improvements BUTLER'S TRUSS PADS have been made, and sufficiently tested upon numerous cases to warrant, through the cures already affected, their submission to the public, as being in adaptation and efficiency superior to any heretofore made known.

These improvements, recently patented, are now being applied at this office, 4 Vesey street, in cases of rupture, gravitation of the bowels, prolapsus uteri, prolapsus ani and piles.

The public may rely upon that care being made in their application, which will most likely tend to the final cure of the several complaints.

Hull's Truss Office, 4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St. Paul's Church, New-York.
FRED'K M BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B—The ladies' department is attended by a female qualified to fit the instruments, having so attended this office for many years.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels: such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt

RUPTURES, are always to be treated with the surgical instruments known as Trusses and Supporters, and these require to be skillfully applied. With this view, the HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE, now established some thirty years, has under the various managers, presented to the public both male and female attendants to apply its instruments directly to the persons, which is preferable in all cases, and has also made improvement at different times, showing that advancement which study and practice only yield toward the relief of this malady.

With much pleasure the fact is now published, that recent improvements BUTLER'S TRUSS PADS have been made, and sufficiently tested upon numerous cases to warrant, through the cures already affected, their submission to the public, as being in adaptation and efficiency superior to any heretofore made known.

These improvements, recently patented, are now being applied at this office, 4 Vesey street, in cases of rupture, gravitation of the bowels, prolapsus uteri, prolapsus ani and piles.

The public may rely upon that care being made in their application, which will most likely tend to the final cure of the several complaints.

Hull's Truss Office, 4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St. Paul's Church, New-York.
FRED'K M BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The ladies' department is attended by a female qualified to fit the instruments, having so attended this office for many years.

GREAT COUGH REMEDY!

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

In offering to the community this justly celebrated remedy for disease of the throat and lungs, it is not our wish to trifle with the lives or health of the afflicted, but frankly to lay before them the opinions of distinguished men and some of the evidences of its success, from which they can judge for themselves. We sincerely pledge ourselves to make no wild assertions or false statemements of its efficacy, nor will we hold out any hope to suffering humanity which facts will not warrant.

Many proofs are here given, and we solicit an inquiry from the public into all we publish, feeling assured they will find them perfectly reliable, and the medicine worthy their best confidence and patronage.

FROM BENJ. SILLIMAN, M. D., L. L. D., &c.,

Professsor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, &c., Yale College, Member of the Lit. Hist. Med. Phil. and Scien. Societies of America and Europe.

"I deem the CHERRY PECTORAL an admirable composition from some of the best articles in the Materia Medica, and a very effective remedy for the class of diseases it is intended to cure."

New Hiven, Ct., Nov. 1, 1849.

Prof. CLEAVELAND, of Bowdoin College, Me. Writes—"I have witnessed the effects of your "CHERRY PECTORAL" in my own family and that of my friends and it gives me satifaction to state in its favor that no medicine I have ever known has proved so eminently successful in curing diseases of the throat and lungs."

REV. DR OSGOOD.

Writes—"That he considers 'CHERRY PECTORAL' the best medicine for Pulmonary Affections ever given to the public," and states that "his daughter after being obliged to keep the room four months with a severe settled cough, accommpanied by raising of blood, night sweats, and the attendant symptons of Consumption, commenced the use of the 'CHERRY PECTORAL,' and had completely recovered."

HEAR THE PATIENT.

Dr. Ayer—Dear Sir: For two years I was afflicted with a very severe cough, accomanied by spitting of blood and profuse night sweats By the advice of my attending physician I was induced to use your CHERRY PECTORAL, and continued to do so till I considered myself cured, and ascribe the effect to your preparation.

JAMES RANDALL.

Hampden ss. SPRINGFIELD, Nov. 27. 1848.

This day appeared the above named James Randal, and pronounced the above statement true in every respect.

LORENZO NORTON, Justice.

THE REMEDY THAT CURES.

PORTLAND, Me., Jan. 10, 1847.

Dr. Ayer: I have been long afflicted with Asthma which grew yearly worse until last autumn, it brought on a cough which confined me in my chamber, and began to assume the alarming symptoms of consumption—I had tried the best advice and the best medicine to no purpose, until I used your CHERRY PECTORAL, which has cured me, and you may well believe me. Gratefully yours.

J. D. PHELPS.

If there is any value in the judgement of the wise, who speak from experience, here is a medicine worthy of the public confidence.

MECHANICAL MEDICINE.

Dr. Banning, formerly of this city, asks to announce that he has returned to 341 Broadway; for consultation and management of weakneses of the vocal, pulmonary, digestive, nervous, spinal and female systems; and also of the drooping, languor and physical deformities, which are so destructive of both health and beauty at the present day.

As these and kindred maladies are usually the result of a violation of the laws of physical organization, he will treat them chiefly by those exercises, mechanical appliances and reformatory habits of body, in conjunction with hydropathy galvanism and other discoveries of the day, which, united with the cooperative efforts of the subject, are calculated to relieve and restore the energies of the suffering and neglected organs.

Having spent several years in traveling for investigation and practical experiment on the subject, he has, at length, greatly improved and multiplied his surgical and mechanical appliances for the purpose. In addition to his new supports for female and spinal weaknesses, are some combining the properties of a universal hernial truss and an effective general support, with which he challenges cases of general debility, constipation, piles and prolapsus, ani, leucorrhea, prolapsus uteri and every variety of hernia.

The distinctive peculiarity of these devices is, that they do not weaken or restrain the motions or growth of the suffering parts, but act imitatively and concordantly with the mathematical genius of the body's forces. Hence, by a most comfortable and gentle pressure, they at once give great support and render the oppressed system eligible to its own restoration.

Feeble invalids coming from a distance will command prompt and faithful attention.

For more definite information, see his revised edition of "Animal Mechanics," and also his circular, which will be sent gratuitously when requested.

His improved body-braces, spinal supports and supporter trusses applied at his office (341 Broadway) and to be had wholesale and retail- City and country physicians and druggists are invited to call and examine Office hours from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. [121.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impetency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cerdial cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without offspring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co., of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper

WONDERFUL CURES!

AND

CANCHALAGUA;

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to

CONSUMPTION.

NO OPIUM.

This syrup contains no Opium, Calomel, or any mineral whatever, but is composed entirely of those Roots, Herbs, and vegetable substances which have a specific influence upon the Lungs, and their connected organs. Its immediate effect is to allay all irritation, and gently remove the phlegm and other morbid secretions from the Throat and Air-Passages; thus relieving the Cough, by subduing the inflammation and other causes which give rise to it. It also stimulates and imparts a healthy tone to the lungs themselves, thereby enabling them more thoroughly to remove from the blood those impurities and diseased particles, which, if retained, do so much mischief in the system, and lay the foundation for incurable CONSUMPTION. It also exerts a decided action upon the skin, and assists nature in expelling, through the Exhalents, much of that morbid matter which would otherwise be thrown back upon the Lungs, thus relieving them of a part of their work, and rendering the system pure and healthy. When tubercles are forming, it checks their development and further progress; or if ulceration has taken place, it assists the Lungs in throwing off the corrupted matter, soothes the irritation, heals the ulcerated cavities, and restores them again to healthy action. This Medicine, therefore, is not a palliative merely, which only relieves for the time being, but is a thorough curative, as it strikes at the very root of the disease, and by removing it, removes at once all its remote and attendant consequences. This is its distinguishing characteristic—a property possessed, in equal power, by no other medicine of like nature, now before the public.

CIRCULARS, &c.

As no ordinary-sized advertisement can fully explain the nature and merits of this article the Proprietors have published a new Circular, giving the history of this Medicine; the description, nature &c., of its principal ingredients; the effect they are designed to have upon the Lungs and Liver, and a copious reference to the persons who have been cured by it—giving their names and residences, even to the street and the number. Those who are troubled with a Cough, or whose Lungs are in the least affected, are earnestly desired to call upon the Agents named below, and procure one of these Pamphlets. It can be had gratis, and will well repay a perusal. The "Hints on Health," and "About taking Cold," may be worth to yourself and family, in the shape of Doctors' Bills saved, besides being the means of prolonging many a valuable life.

HUNDREDS OF DOLLARS,

WARRANTY.

Such is our confidence in its virtues, that we are willing to warrant this Medicine in every case of recent Cold, (where used according to the Directions on page 7th of the pamphlet, inside the wrapper of each bottle,) and where the person is not satisfied that he is deriving benefit from it, by returning the bottle within 24 hours' time, will be returned. ☞ See page 31 of the pamphlet inside the wrapper of each bottle.

THE MONEY

☞ Be sure to ask for Dr. A Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, and CANCHALAGUA, and let no other be palmed on to you.

CAUTION.—None genuine, unless there is on the buff wrapper a note of hand, signed with a Pen, by A. L. SCOVILL & CO.

FOR SAAE, wholesale and retail, by A. L. SCOVILL & Co., Proprietors, at their Principal Depot, GOTHIC HALL, no 316 Broadway, New York, to whom all orders for the Medicine, and letters relating to agencies, should be addressed, post-paid.

Beat at his Own Game.

Not many years ago there was and perhaps there is yet, a law in the State of Connecticut which set forth that any person found driving upon the highway on Sunday should be fined ten dollars, the complainant to receive half the penalty.

Now there never was a law devised, planned or laid down, but what some cute individual will find a hole or flaw to crawl through it, whatever may be its "tight fits," or intricate details. But somebody must be caught of course, and sometimes it does happen that the most wary and wakeful get caught in the very steel trap set by themselves to allure or trip the unwary—hence my story.

It is now no longer, I believe, an unsolved question but a fixed fact, that Yankees are cute if occasion require it. There is no question of it.—When the Connecticut Sunday travelling law, the summum bonum of which I have set forth, was in the flower of its bloom, one rainy, dirty, muddy Sunday, just such a day when both man and beast feel a strong inclination to lie back in some dry place, and chew the sweet or bitter cud of fancy, as it may be, a live and veritable specimen of genus yengese (the latter phrase is aboriginal, I believe) was to be seen without charge, "in the very act of violating the King's law," or that of the Commonwealth of Connecticut, driving a wagon and old gray mare upon the highway! If he did not know the law he was not long learning it, for a Connecticut man who, perhaps not having the fear of God before his eyes so clearly as he had in his heart the idea of making five dollars out of the lone traveller, ran out of his dry domicile by the road side and shouted:

"Hallo! there, Mister!"

"Certain, squire," said the Yanke Jehu, "woo, Sook, heold on, you fool yeou, woo! Mornin', Squire, what's the reuse! Hain't got the collery deown this way, tew, I hope? Dien' like sixty in York with it."

"No, friend," said the man, "we haint got no cholera down here, but I guess you don't know we have got a law what fines people that drive on the King's highway on the Lord's day!"

"Dew tell!" said he in the little tight wagon—"well I shouldn't wonder if you had, an—"

"And I shall arrest you, friend, for breaking the law."

"I want to know, now? Well, squire I can'thelp it; you see in fact, I am in the alfiredest hurry to get hum; I have been thar in New York, 'bout two weeks among the dead and dyin'——

"What? with the——"

"Collery, collery, squire. It's carryin' 'em, off by hull wagon load, (the squire's eyes dilated). I got a good job at haulin' the dead in my wagon to Potter's Field——",

"What! this wagon?"

"Zackly, squire, it paid well, (the squire's cheek grew a little paler,) and I held on until day afore yesterday; I felt it a cummin on me, and I started for hum."

"Friend," said the squire, "it's seven miles to M——town, and—'

"But I say, squire, I'm despirit ill—sick as a dog; can't you let me put up with you until ——"

"No, no, no, go on, go on; you'll soon get to M——town, and"—

"But you ain't agoin' to let a feller die in the road in this ere kind a way?"

"Drive on, drive on, friend, don't stop a minute," and the old feller stepped off as fast as he could toddle from the pedlar's pest wagon.

"Hallo! Squire!" roared the man of notions, "heow abeout the fine?"

"Da——blast you and the fine too; drive off!" shouted the old fellow, and on went the Yankee, showing a set of ivories to the drizzly day, enough to set a dentist in ecstacies.

"Go ahead, Sook; guess that feller won't stop tradin folks soon again; hoo! hoo! ooh! gin him a reg'lar ager fit."

But the pedlar had not made many miles before he was again hailed, and by an absolute constable who, ex-officio, soon brought up the old mare and her driver to a dead halt. It would not go down, perhaps, so well with this customer, thought the pedlar, to try the cholera game with him, so Yankee thought he'd try a doge.

"Well, haint no objection to pay the fine, for I was determined to get into M——to-day, rain or shine, and my old mare is nigh 'bout givin' eout."

"Well," said the officer, "drive ahead, it's only three miles to M——; I'll go down with you."

"Thank yeou. Spose you ride a bit, Mister, I'm pesky tired settin,' so if yeou'll just get in and drive along I'll walk a spell." And out got the cute chap into the road.

The constable got in, glad to quit the mud and rain for so comfortable a place, and on they went.

As you get near M——there is plenty of houses along the road, and many ran out too see who on earth it was profaning the Sabbath and breaking the law by driving a yellow covered pedlar's wagon in the very face of open day. Seeing it was their constable, the folks were at a dead loss to comprehend the matter, and let him drive on without interruption. The roads being heavy and the old mare in the last stages of done out, the wagon pulled rather tediously along, while the bona fide owner, long limbed, winded and light of foot, reached M——some twenty minutes before the officer and proscribed wagon came up. Pushing into the first tavern at hand, the pedlar called for the landlord and wanted to know if it was not against the law to drive a wagon on Sunday. Being well assured by Boniface of the fact, he requested him to step out and see a man in the very act.

"Why, bless my soul, that's Mr.——, our constable!"

"'Tis?" said the pedlar, "well, now, I'd call him a purty feller, tew; the constable breaking your laws all to smash on a Sunday. But he is at it ain't he, landlord."

"It is a fact; here he comes, sure enough."

"Well, I reckon there's something to be made here," said the pedlar, so I'll just shear the fine with yeou, landlord, if yeou'll show me where the squire lives."

"Oh! I'm justice here myself," said the landlord.

"Dew tell? We'll, then, we'll soon fix that constable."

Up drove the constable, and jumping out, grinning, he handed the lines to the ostler, and told him to put the mare up.

"Why you beat me here, friend," said he.

"Guess I hev," said the pedlar.

"Well, as it is Sunday," said the officer, "and near night, we'll let the mare lay over until morning; I'll take care of the mare and wagon."

The pedlar had no objections—so it did lay over until morning, when bright and early the constable found himself fined ten dollars and costs for violating the Sunday travelling law. The officer grinned and squirmed, but as the case was made out as clear as day, there was no dodging it, and that community (especially the constable) learned that Yankee pedlars, like edged tools, must be handled carefully.

From the Regenerator.

"The Poor Child Died."

My baby, nine months old, had some fever, and seemed very unwell. One neighbor said—

"You'd better send for the doctor."

Another suggested that it had no doubt, eaten something that disagreed with it, and that a little antimonial wine would enable it to throw it off; another advised a few grains of calomel, and another a dose of rhubarb. But I said—

"No. I'll wait a little while and see if it won't get better."

"You should give him medicine in time. Many a person dies from not taking medicine in time;" said a lady who expressed more than usual concern for the well-being of my baby. She had a very sick child herself.

"Many more die," I replied, "from taking medicine too soon. I believe that one half of the diseases in the world are produced by medicines, and that the other half are often made worse by their injudicious administration."

"You'd better send for the doctor," urged the lady.

"No. I'll wait until the morning, and then, if he's no better, or, should be worse, I'll call in our physician. Children often appear very sick one hour, and are comparatively well again in the next."

"It's a great risk," said the lady, gravely. "A very great risk. I called in the doctor the moment my dear little Eddy began to droop about. And it's well I did. He's near deaths door as it is; and without medical aid I would certainly have lost him before this. He's only been sick a week, and you know yourself how low he is reduced. Where do you think he would have been without medicine? The disease has taken a terrible hold of him. Why, the doctor has bled him twice; and his little chest is raw all over from a blister. He has been cupped and leached. We have had mustard plasters upon his arms and the calves of his legs. I don't know how many grains of calomel he has taken; and it has salivated him dreadfully. Oh! such a sore mouth! Poor child! He suffers dreadfully. Besides, he has taken some kind of powder almost every hour. They are dreadfully nauseous; and we have to hold him, every time, and pour them down his throat. Oh dear! It makes my heart sick. Now, with all this, the disease hangs on almost as bad as ever. Suppose we hadn't sent for the doctor at first? Can't you see what would have been the consequence? It is very wrong to put off calling in a physician upon the first symptoms of a disease."

"Pardon me, Mrs. Lee, for saying so," was my reply, "but I can not help thinking that, if you had not called the doctor, your child would have been quite well to-day."

Mrs. Lee—that was the lady's name—uttered an exclamation of surprise and disapproval of my remark.

"But can not you see, yourself, that it is not the disease that has reduced your child so low. The bleeding, blistering, cupping, leaching and calomel administrations, would have done all this, had your child been perfectly well when it went into the doctor's hands."

"But the disease would have killed him inevitably If it requires all this to break it, don't you see that it must have taken a most fatal hold on the poor child's system?"

"No, Mrs. Lee, I can not see any such thing," was my reply. "The medicine probably fixed the disease, that would, if left alone, have retired of itself. What does the doctor say ails the child?"

"He does not seem to know. There seems to be a complication of disease."

"Produced by the treatment, no doubt. If there had been scarlet fever, or small pox, or croup, active energetic treatment would, probably, have been required, and the doctor would have known what he was about in administering his remedies. But in a slight indisposition, like that from which your child suffered, it is, in my opinion, alwas better to give no medicine for a time. Drugs thrown into the tender system of a child, will always produce disease of some kind, more or less severe; and where slight disorders already exist, they are apt to give them a dangerous hold upon the body, or, uniting with them, cause a most serious, and, at times, fatal illness."

But Mrs Lee shook her head. She thought the doctors know best. They had great confidence in their family physician, he had doctored them in dangerous attacks, and had always brought them through safely. As to the new-fangled notions about giving little or no medicine, she had no confidence in them. Medicine was necessary at times, and she always gave her children medicine at least two or three times a year, whether they were sick or well. Prevention, in her eye, was better than cure. And where there was actual sickness, she was in favor of vigorous treatment. One good dose of medicine would do more good than a hundred little ones. With much more to the same effect.

On the next morning, my dear baby who was just as sick for a few hours as Mrs. Lee's child was at first, was as well as ever

Not long after breakfast, I was sent for by Mrs. Lee. Her poor chrld was much worse. The servant said that she was sure it was dying: I changed my dress hurriedly, and went over to the house of my neighbor.

Shall I describe the painful object that met my sight? It was three days since I had seen the little sufferer; but oh! how it had changed in that brief time. Its face was sunken, its eyes far back in their sockets, and its forbead marked with lines of suffering. The whole of its breast was raw from the blister, and its mouth, lying open showed with painful distinctness, the dreadful injury wrought by the mercury thrown, with such a liberal hand, into its delicate system. All the life seemed to have withdrawn itself from the skin; for the vital forces, in the centre of its body, were acting but feebly.

The doctor came in wile I was there. He said but little. It was plain that he was entirely at fault, and that he saw no hope of a favorable issue. All his "active treatment" had tended to break down the child, rather than cure the disease from which it at first suffered, There was a great deal of heat about the child's head, and he said something about having it shaved for a blister.

"Wouldn't ice do better, doctor?" I felt constrained to suggest. He turned upon me quickly, and seemed annoyed.

"No madam!" he replied with dignity.

I said no more, for I felt how vain my words would be. The blister, however, was not ordered; but, in its stead, mustard plasters were directed to be placed over the feet and legs to the knees, and a solution of iodine, or iron, I don't now remember which, prescribed to be given every half hour.

I went home, some time after the doctor left, feeling sick at heart. "They are murdering that child," I could not help saying to myself. My own dear babe I found full of health and life; and I hugged it to my breast with a feeling of thankfullness.

Before the day closed, Mrs. Lee's poor child died Was it a cause of wonder?

A SUPPLEMENT to an Act entitled 'An Act concerning Wills.'

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That all wills and testaments of persons dying after this act shall take effect, or who may have died since the fourth day of July, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and fifty, and shall be signed by the testator, which signature shall be made by the testator, or the making thereof acknowledged by him, and such writing declared to be his last will, in presence of two witnesses present at the same time, who shall subscribe their names thereto as witnesses, in the presence of the testator; and all wills and testaments of persons dying since the day above mentioned, made in the manner herein prescribed, by any person competent by law to make such will, shall be sufficient to devise pass and bequeath all estates and property, real or personal, and all rights of any kind, and to appoint a guardian or guardians to any child of the testator during infancy.

2. And be it enacted, That all written revocations of wills shall be executed in the same manner as wils are hereby required to be executed, and when so made, shall be sufficient to revoke any last will or any part thereof.

3. And be it enacted, That real estate acquired by a testator after making his will, shall pass by any general or special devise or sale under any power of sale contained in the will of any person dying after the fourth day of July, in the year eighteen hundred and fifty, sufficient to include it, had the same been acquired before the making of the will, unless a contrary intention be manifest on the face of the will.

4. And be it enacted, That in any case of bequest of real or personal estate in the will of any person dying after this act shall take effect, the words 'die without issue,' or 'die without lawful issue,' or 'have no issue,' or any other words which may import a want or failure of issue of any person in his lifetime or at his death, or an indefinite failure of his issue, shall be construed to mean a want or failure of issue in the lifetime, or at the death of such person, and not as a definite failure of issue, unless a contrary conclusion shall otherwise appear by the will.

5. And be it enacted, That no will of personal estate made after the fourth day of July in the year eighteen hundred and fifty, by any person within the age of twenty-one years, shall be good or effectual in law.

7. And be it enacted, That nothing in this act contained shall be held to change or affect the existing law relative to nuncupative wills.

8. And be it enacted, That the act approved on the seventh day of March, in the year eighteen hundred and fifty, entitled, an act entitled, an act concerning wills,' be and the same is hereby repealed.

9. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Approved, March 12, 1851.

A year or two since, an edition of the almanac was printed without the usual prognostics regarding the winds and sunshine, but it proved a complete failure; an almanac that told nothing about next year's weather nobody cared to buy, and it was found expedient to restore these important predictions concerning the future snow, hail, and sunshine.—Public opinion demanded it.

OBEYING ORDERS.—A certain General of the United States army, supposing his favorite horse dead, ordered an Irishman to go and skin him.

'What, is Silver Tail dead?' asked Pat.

'What's that to you?' replied the officer. 'Do as I bid you, and ask no questions.'

Pat went about his business, and in an hour or two retured.

'Well, Pat, where have you been to all this time?' asked the General.

'Skinning the horse, your honor.'

'Does it take nearly two hours to perform such an operation?'

'No, yer honor, but then you see it tuck 'bout half an hour to catch him.'

'Catch him! fire and furies! was he alive?'

'Yes, yer honor—and you know I couldn't skin him alive.'

'Skin him alive! did you kill him!'

'To be sure I did; you know I must obey orders without asking any questions.'

"Lizzie," said a little curly-headed boy of som five years, "isn't Sam Slade a buster?"

"Why, Charley?"

"Because the grammer says, positive buss, comparative buster; and I did see him gin you such a positive buss," Lizzie Swooned.

"Why is dis hat like de United States?" said Pompey to Squash, holding up his dilapidated beaver. "Cos, cos, donno, nigger." "Well, cos it's not subject to a crown. Yah, yah!"

PLAINFIELD GAZETTE.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Thursday; May 1, 1851.

☞ Mr Albert D. Drake is our authorised agent to receive subscriptions and advertisments.

☞ Mr. E. W. Carr, Third street, Philadelphia, opposite the Exchange, is our authorised agent for that city.

We understand that the Rev. E. H. Chapin of New York, will deliver a Temperance Lecture in this place, on Tuesday evening, May 6th. Let those who wish to hear one of the most finished orators of the day be present on the occasion.

We have received from the publishers, Robert Carter and Brothers, No 285 Broadway N. Y., a very neatly bound and well printed volume of 305 pages, entitled, "The Authority of God;" or The true barrier against Romish or Infidel Aggression; Four discourses, by the Rev. J H. Merle D'Aubigne D. D., President of the Theological Institute, Geneva.

Christians of course, in this enlightened age, should be prepared by the study of this and similar works, to defend the fundamental principles of their faith. Infidels, as it is seen hereabouts, are ever ready by examination, by sophistry if you will, to attack Revelation; the Christian should therefore be prepared to repel it.

☞ Our neighbor of the Union, like some others who have attempted to ride the stubborn mule of Bigotry and Proscription, being thrown therefrom, or, having learned the propensities of the beast, and fearing the "Slough of Despond" into which his companions were dumped by the same ungovernable brute, has wisely dismounted; and, though his mind is still embittered by the fancies suggested by the conduct of the animal he rode, we are glad to percive that the sad fate of his companions has proved a timely warning, and that he is endeavoring, as fast as the recent state of his mind will admit, to regain his lost position. We are indeed pleased to see him again endeavoring to mount on that better dispositioned, and more easily governed and therefore less dangerous travelling pony, Free Toleration; and we trust yet to see him, when fairly mounted, through the assistance of that keen switch, full and free discussion, aided by reason and common sense, arrive safely at the glorious journey's end of knowledge and truth. We trust, when fairly mounted, he will let us know, that we may travel on pleasantly together to the journey's end.

☞ In the Somerset Whig of April 26th, the editor of that paper, in a leader specially addressed to us, very gravely informs us that the "discrepencies" between himself and coadjutors, in regard to "Democracy and Reform," are a natural conseqence of and are perfectly consistent with the course the Whigs usually pursue! He declares in relation to that course, "we are not very anxious to have it otherwise." It would thus appear that he is perfectly satisfied with the "discrepencies," infering therefrom the consistency of Whig principles! Not so however with "Democracy and Reform;" having done his best to defeat and kill it, it appears to haunt him as the ghost of Banquo did the guilty soul of Macbeth, continually rising up before him in condemnation of the evil deed. Now, as claimed, we are willing to admit, that the "discrepencies" are all perfectly natural and consistent with the various doctrines advocated as Whig, but being known to us before, and also that true Democracy advocated the Reforms, and that the Whig was opposed to both, we are at a loss to conceive why this gratuitous acknowledgment is made to us. Can it indeed be, (it is the only inference we can draw from the article, and we know of nothing from which we can draw a different conclusion) as is more than intimated—we should call it a receipt in full to the Monopoly—that the editor has a "free ticket in his pocket," and being unduly elated by becoming 'one of 'em, or by the "champagne" bestowed along with it, that he thus boldly and ambitiously, a la "Com. Stockton," avows it?

In a seperate paragraph, in the same paper, in elucidation of his leader we presume, as it is also especially dedicated to us, stands the following:

"We may as well state, for the edification of the Plainfield Gazette, that a remonstrance against Household Exemption, numerously signed, went to Trenton last winter from the "Democracy" of the upper part of this county."

Why the above paragraph, or the leader referred to, are for our especial "edification," other than for the reasons we have above given, we are somwhat at a loss to understand. As of the leader, so of the paragraph, we were made well aware before, through the columns of the Whig and its coadjutors, that Whig "Democracy," and perhaps also some patent loco foco democracy, not only in the upper part of Somerset, but throughout the state, generally, with some few honorable exceptions. were opposed, not only to "Household Exemption," but to any beneficial reform. Therefore we must suppose, in the absence of other evidence, that the paragraph, like the leader, was written under the above alluded to, or some other equally potent excitement. If we should be wrong in our surmises, will our neighbor, in his next developments, be more explicit?

Infidelity has always been ranked in our mind with the greatest of crimes—and the more we reflect upon it, the more just does this veiw of it appear to us.—Plainfield Union.

Of course, what can be more wicked and perverse, than for a person who has been 'brought up' a Baptist, and always taught to beleive that the ordinance of Baptism was not only a saving ordinance, but that it can only be performed in accordance with the laws of God by immersion; what can be a greater crime than for such a person to believe so, or likewise, not to believe, at the mere dictation of others, that it is more correctly adminisintered by sprinkling! or, as many believe, that it is not essential to be performed at all? Again, assuming that the Mahomedan is the true religion, what can be more obstinately perverse and criminal than for a person who has been born under a Christian government, and always taught to believe in Christianity as the only true religion, than for such a person so to believe, and not rather to believe the only true religion of which Mahomet is the Prophet? How wicked even to be born in such a country! Belief, which no man can change, but in accordance with the evidence his own mind perceives the truth of,—which he invariably and inevitably, unless he is a fool or a madman, follows;—is thus made the condition of salvation! To simply be good and do good, is too simple, it must be wicked, it does not cost enough money!

But, again, if such persons are wicked, and such belief a crime, how much more wicked and how much greater the crime of him who has learned the the trade of a blacksmith, and who, when he has heated a bar of iron to a cherry red, or white heat, if a child who having never seen, or having no other knowledge of the effect, should attempt to lay hold of it, he should obstinately persist in believing and telling it, in accordance with the evidence of his senses, aided by that perverse reason which God has enabled him thus to acquire—"that he might believe and be damned." (2 Thes. 2: 11, 12.)—that said iron is hot and will burn, and wickedly persist in believing, in accordance with his own and the universal experince of man, that this is an immutable law, and accordingly disbelieving in the divine authority of either Mahomedanism or Christianity because they teach that they are not? How awful the crime and how wicked such a person must be, who, without saying his prayers, can lie down to sleep in the full confidence of the immutability of the laws of nature and of the power that governs the whole. Such a man, undoubtedly, upon a close examination of his forehead, with his hat off, will be found to have horns! such a wicked and perverse wretch deserves—will the editor of the Union say what?

At the Annual Conference of the Methodist E. Church, at Jersey City, which adjourned on Tuesday last, resolutions were adopted in favor of the American Bible Society—requesting each preacher to take up a collection for it in his congregation—and cordially reccommending Rev. Geo. Sheldon the Agent of the Society, to the confidence of the people.

Rev. S. McCarroll is appointed for Plainfield for the ensuing year. Rev. Wm. E. Perry is stationed at Paterson.

Cuban Excitement in New-Jersey.

It would appear, according to a correspondent of the Newark Daily Advertiser, of April 26th that some 50 men landed from the steamer John Potter, and 150 more expected by the Philadelphia trains, were prepared, and were about to be taken off by a Sloop, which was prepared with signals, &c., to a steamer in waiting at Sandy Hook, but the design was frustrated by the Deputy Collector of the Port, who ordered the sloop into Perth Amboy until further orders. The President issued his Proclamation on Friday last warning all person of the illegality of such proceedings.

FATAL CAUSALITY.—Mr. JOHN KING, of Liberty Corner, N. J. while crossing the river bridge at Bound Brook, upon a load of shingles, his horses became frightened, shied off, bringing the wheel in contact with the brace of the bridge, up which it ascended, causing the wagon to capsize, throwing Mr. King against and over the railing of the bridge into the river, he was drowned. He was about 50 years old, and leaves a wife and family to mourn his loss.

The New Tax Law.

The friends of "Equal Taxation," in this State, must gird on their armor to repel the attacks of those who from private interest or political association, may attempt to defeat the law passed at the late sitting of the legislature. The whig papers, with but one exception we believe, (the "Newark Mercury") lend the influence of their columns, to make the law odious or ridiculous. If these schemes be successful, and it is repealed, as was the case with the law which taxed mortgages some years ago, it will be many years befor we can arrive again at the first step towards equalizing the system of taxation,—in which light we regard the law of 1851. The attacks upon it are not direct and open, but against particular provisions, and those chiefly the "amendments" made in the Senate upon the motion of whig Senators, after the democrats of the House of Assembly had shaped the bill to suit themselves. It would be strange, indeed, if a bill making so radical a change in the system of assessing taxes, as this, should be exactly perfect in its first enactment. It may need several amendments; but the principal feature—the taxation of every man according to the protection he receives, and his ability to pay—is popular, because it is right, and it must be sustained.—For many years past, the democratic party in New-Jersey have inscribed this measure upon their banner, and as early as was in their power, in good faith they have redeemed their word. It would be a crazy act on the part of professed friends to this measure, now merely an experiment, to join hands with its foes, and decry particular features, while they lose sight of its main and beneficient objects; or to commit the task of its amendment, where obvious amendment may be necessary, to the hands of a party, who year after year defeated it, and whose opposition at this moment, is as emphathic as ever.—Somerset Messenger.

☞ THE BUSINSS OF THE ASSESSORS.—A thousand different impressions are afloat in the community as to the effect of the new tax law, which it is no part of the business of our Assessors to answer or meet. Their duties are sufficiently plain, and if they will, to the best of their knowledge, tax each of the individuals of this city, with the amount of real estate owned in this State, and with the amount of personal property owned everywhere, with such deduction as the law allows, they will have fulfilled their duties. The principle of the law is sound and practical, and although some defects should be expected in it, they will be remedied without disturbing its essential feature, viz. the equalization of taxes.—Newark Mercury.

A Good Time Coming!

The people of New Jersey are awaking to the importance of a liberal system of common schools. The Legislature, at the last session, doubled the school fund—and in various townships, at the town meeting last week, voted the largest amount authorized by the new school law, ($3 for each sholar,) as an additional sum, in order to establish free shools.

The sum of $1400 was voted by Paterson, which, with the amount received from the State, will probably sustain a free school in each of the three wards. Manehes voted $800. The several townships of Sussex county, we learn from the Herald, with few exceptions, voted the highest sum allowed by the law. Belvidere, Warren county, did the same. So also New Brunswick, which voted the liberal sum of $7,200 for shcool purposes. Trenton voted $5,400, From these and other indications, we infer the cause of education is progressing among us. We rejoice in the evidences of an increased appreciation of the benefits of a common school education, and hope the time is near at hand, when every child will be able to avail himself of a free school system.—Paterson Guardian.

☞ We would refer our readers to the adbertisement of Mr Jaques Vanderbeek, in another column, announcing to our citizens and others, that he has established a Marble and Stone Yard and Manufactory of Monuments, Headstones &c. Those wishing to purchase will find Mr. V disposed to accommodate them promptly and on reasonable terms. Give him a call.

☞ Mr D Bullman, has a few superior Gold Watches. Those who would know the time, must go in time, for time, especially of this description, "waits for no man."

From the Banner of the Union.

Local and Secular Prejudices.

One of the chief causes of misery and suffering, is prejudice, Attachment to home and country, is natural and commendable—fraternal feelings in families and neighborhoods, and a love of one's race, are virtues that exalt those who cherish those kindly attachments; but prejudice against those who are not bound to us by any of those ties, are unworthy, and degrading to all who live in an age of intelligence especially the inhabitants of a country that acknowledges the divine injunction, 'do unto others as ye would they should do unto you' in like circumstances. Attachments and prejudices are frequently formed in infancy, which cling to those who admit them to a place in their minds through life. Parents transmit to their children the sentiments which find favor in their own estimation: thus fequently trivial causes of quarrel—often only imaginary—are made the basis for bitter and vindictive animosities and handed down from generation to generation.

Country school-boys frequently join in clans, those living in one direction fom the school, wage war against those coming from an opposite direction. If prejudice was effaced from the mind as knowledge increased, it would not be a cause of so much regret, but unfortunately it too often is increased and strengthened by age; the thoughtless animosities of youth become the confirmed sentiments of age; the discords of school are transferred to town, state, nation, and the world. Hence we see town councils endeavoring to throw an undue proportion of county authorities shrinking from a participation in the burdens of the State and States throwing obstacles in the way of the advancement of sister States. Nations also watch each other with jealousy, and often, much too often, oppose each other from feelings of envy, than from a sense of injury sustained or anticipated—they estimate their own value upon the standard of others, instead of immutable, unchangable, right, honor, and justice; they imagine that, as their neighbor rises in the estimation of others; they diminish in the ratio; but the error is palpable and mischievous. One tree, by being pruned of withering and rotten branches, may rise in vigor and beauty; while another, upon which no thought or labor is bestowed, remains encumbered with useless, if not vicious, appendages, attracting attention only by its forbidding appearance.

Nor is local the only or even the worst prejudice existing among men—a demon of unnatural form and most horrid mien, stalks over the earth. On his front is written fanaticism, and on every side intolerance his breath is pestilence, withering everything within its reach, and his path desolation; he feeds upon the weeds of envy, hatred, and malice, and tramples in the dust the beautiful flowers of faith hope, love, and charity. Yet this vile monster has in his train countless worshippers, who close their eyes against his ugly carcass open their ears to his smooth, lying, voice and falling prostrate before him call him 'religion,' and sing hosannahs of praise, 'ascribing might, majesty, and dominion, now and forever.' At the command of this 'beast' the 'sword of destruction' has laid low in death the hoary-head of reverend age, has scattered over the plains the bowels of helpless infants, and roasted at the stake inoffensive mothers, sisters and daughters. By this desire, at the dead of night, the torch of the incendiary has fired the dwellings of peaceful inhabitants, and made merry over the groans of the strong, shrieks of the weak, and moans of helplessness, as the 'devouring element' wrapped them in sheets of fire, and 'licked up' the fountains of life.

These things and much more have been done, and are still being practiced, and that, too, in the name of that GOD who hath declared that he 'loveth all that he hath made,' and who has commanded us to 'do good unto all men,' to 'strengthen the weak, lead, the blind, and visit those in prison.' Man may divide the world as he will into districts; he may seperate its inhabitants into classes, and poison their minds with the drugs of superstition and hate—erring mortals may clasp to their bosoms the teachers of proscription, and the workers of revenge; but the High and Holy One, will put to shame these rebellious servants who would be greater than the master. With him there is but one people and they all the children of men. The wild, untutored Indian and the educated divine, are equal objects of his care, and dear in his sight. He formed them for his purpose, and will do unto them as Almighty wisdom shall direct.

It becomes us to cast aside every prejudice, and unite to promote the happiness of all. Those who are above us, we should strive to imitate; those below, we should endeavor to elevate. We may relieve, but never oppress—we may raise up, but never cast down. If we make war, it should be against the vices of men, and not against men; and we should always remember that we did not fashion ourselves. What we are, is the work of the Creator, GOD. Had our lot been cast in Turkey, we might have been a follower of Mohomet; in India, a worshipper of Budah; or had we been born in Africa, or the islands of the Pacific, we might have believed it right to devour the flesh and drink the blood of our fellow-men. 'Let him who is wise in his own conceit,' remember that he is but dust, and must to dust return—that though a speck of creation, yet he must be blotted out, or transferred to other spheres—that when he raises his hand against any creature, he raises it against that creation of which he is a part, and under any other circumstances, he might have been the victim, instead of being the oppressor. If we believe others entertain erroneous opinions, it is our duty to persuade, but never to coerce, and all who are honest in their belief, though their views are apposite to our's as are the poles from each other, are entitled to the same respect, as though agreeing with our own. In short we should have no local or secular prejudices; we should recognize one conntry, the world; one people all the children of men.

FOUND DROWNED.—The body of a man was found lying on the Wacake shore, (Raritan township Monmouth co., N. J.) about a quarter of a mile east of the Store house, where it had drifted. On examination of the body, there was a slight bruise found on the forehead. His pockets were searched, but nothing was found whereby his residence or name could be ascertained. He had $1 and a few cents, and a small piece of a newspaper, printed in a foreign language. He was a short, stout man, apparently about the age of 30 or 35 years. It is supposed he had been in the water a week or ten days. If any person should wish to view the body, or any further particulars, inquire of J. W. Murphy, Justice of Peace for Berthany, Monmouth co., N. J. Other papers please copy.—Middletown Banner.

MASSACHUSETTS SENATOR.—Mr. Summer Free Soil Democrat, was elected U. S. Senator from Massachusetts, on Friday afternoon, after a contest of some months. He had 193 votes, Winthrop 166 scattering 25.

Fearlessly do what you believe to be right.

Durability of Wood,

The piles under the london Bridge have been driven 500 years, and upon examining them in 1846 they were found to be little decayed. They are principally elm. Old Savoy Place in the city of london, was built 950 years ago, and the wooden piles consisting of oak, elm, beech and chestnut were found upon recent examination to be perfectly sound. Of the durability of timber in a wet state, the piles of the bridges built by Emperor Trajan, over the Danube, afford a striking example. One of these piles was taken up, and found to be petrified to the depth of 3-4 of an inch; but the rest of the wood was not different from its former state, though it had been driven 1,600 years.—Scientific American.

INSTINCT OF THE TURTLE.—It has been observed that turtles cross the ocean from the Bay of Honduras to the Cayman Isles, near Jamaica, a distance of 450 miles, with an accuracy superior to the chart and compass of human skill, for it is affirmed that vessels which have lost their latitude in hazy weather, have steered entirely by the noise of the turtles in swimming. The objects of their voyage, as in the case of the migration of birds, is for the purpose of laying their eggs on a spot peculiarly favorable.—Bishop Stanley on Birds.

MARRIED.

On Tuesday April 29th by the Rev. Thomas McCarroll, Mr. NELSON PEARSALL, son of Mr John Pearsall, Amityville Long Island to Miss SARAH E GAMBERTON of Plainfield.

☞ Among the inventions of modern science, few confer a greater benefit on the community than that contribution of Chemistry to the healing art, known as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. In our advertising columns may be found the evidence of distinguished gentlemen, that shows their confidence in its peculiar efficacy to cure distempers of the Throat and Lungs.

The Perils of the Lungs.

These delicate organs are always in peril, and life is in peril when they do not properly perform their functions. If inflammation interferes with their regular action, the blood is imperfectly purified, the circulation is irregular, and the whole system suffers. In the combined tonic, expectorant, and healing properties of Dr. Rogers' Syrup of Liverwort, Tar, and Canchalagua, lies the remedy for all this mischief. DELAY IS DANGEROUS. While the patient is considering tubercles may be forming, or worse still, may be bursting in the Lungs. But if this remedy by promptly applied, the Couh, Cold, or Catarrah is at once removed, and to use the word of Daniel Webster, the sufferer "breathes freer and deeper." The only thing required is promptitude. See pamplet in the hands of Agents, and advertisement in another column.

All so, no braggadocio; at

I. S. DUNHAM'S Cheap Store.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS,

or Medicated Compound.

INFALLIBLE for renewing, invigorating, and beautifying the HAIR, removing the scurf, dandruff, and all affections of the scalp; and curing eruptions on the skin, diseases of the glands, muscles and integuments, and releieving stings, cuts, bruises, sprains, &c. With this preperation "there is no such word as fail." The first journals in America, medical men of the highest eminence, prominent citizens of all professions, and ladies who have used it for years in their dressing rooms and nurseries, admit with one accord, that for imparting vigor, gloss, luxurience and curl to the hair, eradicating scurf and dandruff, healing wounds, curing contusions, sprains, stings, &c., and relieving diseases of the skin, the glands and the muscles, it has no equal, among the multitude of compounds advertised in the public prints, or used in private practice. In cheapness as well as efficacy, Barry's Tricopherous is unrivalled The immense cash sales of the article have enabled the Inventor to supply it at retail, at 25 cents per bottle, which is from 50 to 100 per cent. less than the price of any other preperation for the hair now in use. The scientific treatise on the hair and the skin, (embracing valuable directions for the culture and preservation of Nature's choicest ornament,) in which each bottle is enclosed, is alone worth the money.

The affinity between the membranes which constitute the skin, and the hair which draws its sustenance from this triple envelope is very close. All diseases of the hair originate in the skin of the head. If the pores of the scalp are clogged, or if the blood and other fluids do not circulate freely through the small vessels which feed the root with moisture, and impart life to the fibres, the result is scurf, dandruff, shedding of the hair, graveness, dryness and harshness of the ligaments, and entire baldness, as the case may be. Stimulate the skin to healthful action with the Tricopherous, and the torpid vessels, recovering their activity, will anihilate the disease. In all affections of the skin, and of the substrata of muscles and integuments, the process and the effect are the same—It is upon the skin, the muscular fibre, and the glands, that the Tricopherous has its specific action, and in all affections and injury of these organs, it is a sovereign remedy

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York; and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States and Canada. [134is

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

Among the numerous discoveries Science has made in this generation to facilitate the business of life—increase its enjoyment, and even prolong the term of human existence, none can be named of more real value to mankind, than this contribution of Chemistry to the Healing Art. A vast trial of its virtues throughout this broad country, has proven beyond a doubt, that no medicine or combination of medicine yet known, can so surely control and cure the numerous varieties of pulmonary disease which have hitherto swept from our midst thousands and thousands every year. Indeed, there is now abundant reason to believe a Remedy has at length been found which can be relied on to cure the most dangerous affections of the lungs. Our space here will not permit us to publish any proportion of the cures affected by its use, but we would present the following opinions of eminent men, and refer further enquiry to the circular which the Agent below named, will always be pleased to furnish free wherein are full particlars, and indisputable proof of these facts.

From the President of Amherst College, the celebrated PROFESSOR HITCHCOCK.

"James C. Ayer—Sir: I have used your CHERRY PECTORAL in my own case of deep-seated Bronchitis, and am satisfied from its chemical constitution, that it is an admirable compound for the relief of laryngial and bronchial difficulties. If my opinion as to its superior character can be of any service, you are at liberty to use it as you think proper.

EDWARD HITCHCOCK, L. L. D.,
From the widely celebrated

PROFESSOR SILLIMAN, M. D., L. L. D., Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, &c., Yale College, Member of the Lit, Hist. Med. Phil. and Scientific Societies of America and Europe.

"I deem the CHERRY PECTORAL an admirable composition from some of the best articles in the Materia Medica, and a very effective remedy for the class of diseases it is intended to cure."

New Haven, Ct., Nov. 1 1849

MAJOR PATTISON, President of the S. C. Senate, states he has used the CHERRY PECTORAL with wonderful success, to and inflammation of the lungs.

From one of the first Physicans in Maine.

SACO, Me., April 26. 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell. Dear Sir: I am now constantly using your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, and prefer it to any other medicine for pulmonary complaints. From observation of many severe cases, I am convinced it will cure coughs, colds, and diseases of the lungs, that have put to defianice all other remedies.

I invariably reccommend its use in cases of consumption, and consider it much the best remedy known for that disease.

Respectfully yours, I. S. CUSHMAN, M. D.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels; such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt.

RUPTURES, are always to be treated with the surgical instruments known as Trusses and Supporters, and these require to be skillfully applied. With this view, the HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE, now established some thirty years, has under the various managers, presented to the public both male and female attendants to apply its instruments directly to the persons, which is preferable in all cases, and has also made improvement at different times, showing that advancement which study and practice only yield toward the relief of this malady.

With much pleasure the fact is now published, that recent improvements BUTLER'S TRUSS PADS have been made, and sufficiently tested upon numerous cases to warrant, through the cures already affected, their submission to the public, as being in adaptation and efficiency superior to any heretofore made known.

These improvements, recently patented, are now being applied at this office, 4 Vesey street, in cases of rupture, gravitation of the bowels, prolapsus uteri, prolapsus ani and piles.

The public may rely upon that care being made in their application, which will most likely tend to the final cure of the several complaints.

Hull's Truss Office, 4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St. Paul's Church, New-York.

FRED'K M BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The ladies' department is attended by a female qualified to fit the instruments, having so attended this office for many years.

Children trussed when only two weeks old, and invariably cured. [145is.

Electro-Magnetic Remedies

AND PRACTICE.

OF THE LATE

DR. H. H. SHERWOOD,

The preparation of Dr. H. H. SHERWOOD'S well known Electro-Magnetic Remedies of Compound CHLORIDE OF GOLD, which have obtained a success so remarkable in the cure of CHRONIC DISEASES, is continued as usual at his late residence, in accordance with his last will and directions, by his son-in-law, WM. LARNED, with competent medical assistance, under the name of H. H. SHERWOOD'S SUCCESSORS.

They also continue the medical practice of Dr. Sherwod and the publicatian of his various medical works.

His MAGNETIC MACHINES which are admirably adapted for medical use, are also manufactured by them, and can be sent by express or otherwise to any part of the world.

All communications should be addressed to
H. H. SHERWOOD'S SUCCESSORS.
102 Chamber-street, New York.

We would caut on the public against spurious imitations of Dr. Sherwood's Remedies, none being genuine unless prepared by ourselves, the receipts of Dr. Sherwood being in our sole possession by his last will and testament.

If sold by our authorized agents they will always be accompanied by Dr. Sherwood's valuable treatise on the Motive power of the Human System, a work of about 200 pages duly secured by copyright.

We would call attention to the following abstract of Dr. Sherwood's theory of medical practice.

From the Manhattan Souvenir.

THE ELECTRO-MAGNETIC THEORY OF MEDICAL PRACTICE.

We are not of the number who at once enter a NIL UTILI upon the promulgation of a new theory, or one differing from the dogmas of the schools. Nay, we derive a positive pleasure from the examination of ideas above the plane orthodox and gray bearded sciences. At this present writing we owe no little satisfaction to the examination of a pamphlet containing the RATIONALE of the late Dr. SHERWOODS' practice in acute and chronic diseases. The pamphlet gives a concise history of the rise and progress of the magnetic practise, and the theory appears well supported by analogy and proved by conclusive experments.

All the organs of the body are, without exception covered with a kind of skin called a serous membrane in which are an immense number of minute glands, with ducts terminating in open orifices on the surface. These glands excrete a watery fluid by which the surfaces are kept constantly moist. The internal part of the body, the mouth, œsophagus, stomach, and intestines, are also lined with a membrane differing from the one above mentioned in having a villous instead of a serous surface. The membranes enclose glands and numerous cavities opening also upon the surface. These ducts and cavities are filled with a semi fluid, or mucus, which is constantly issuing from them; and hence these are called mucous membranes. In the human body there are also four hundred and thirty six muscles arranged for producing motion. These muscles are also covered with a membrane, the outer side of which has a serous and the inner a mucus surface.

There are thus two surfaces in the human organization disposed in different ways exuding each its own fluid. Repeated experiments have demonstrated that each of these exudations gives out its peculiar electric force; the serous giving the negative and the mucus the positive; thus forming a magnetic battery in which the nerves are wires conveying the current to the brain.

In a state of health these secretions and forces are in a state of equilibrium. In a state of disease there is a predominace of one force over the other—Upon this discovery Dr. Sherwood's theory is based, his Remedies being electric in their action, and restoring the positive, and negative currents in the body to a healthy equipose

PATENT INDEPENDENT HORSERAKE,

In the Counties of Somerset, Middlesex, Essex, Hudson, Bergen and Passaic, and will have them ready ready by the 1st of May.

This Rake was patented by Calvin Delano, of East Livermore, Maine, Feb. 27 1649. It is fitted to the hind wheels of a Single Horse Wagon, and attended by a man or boy who can RIDE AND RAKE, and manage the horse with ease and certainty.

Each Tooth acts separately and independently, its head being suspended on a rod or hinge over the Axletree, one Tooth being attached to each head. It is equally applicable to ROUGH AND SMOOTH LAND, and applies with equal pressure on each kind of surface.

Premiums and Diplomas were awarded it in the Fall of 1847 and 1848, by the Kennebec and Franklin Counties Agricultural Societies. Its utility has been tested by more than 100 Farmers in the State of Maine, who have certified to its superiority over all other Horse Rakes.

Francis F. Haines of East Livermore, authorized by the Patentee, will dispose of the Patent Right, within and for the States of New-Jersey and Pennsylvania, by Counties or Towns on very liberal terms.

☞ All infringements on the Patent Right of the above Invention will be prosecuted, without favor, to final judgment. CALVIN DELANO, Patentee.

MECHANICAL MEDICINE.

Dr. Banning, formerly of this city, asks to announce that he has returned to 341 Broadway; for consultation and management of weakneses of the vocal, pulmonary, digestive, nervous, spinal and female systems; and also of the drooping, languor and physical deformities, which are so destructive of both health and beauty at the present day.

As these and kindred maladies are usually the result of a violation of the laws of physical organization, he will treat them chiefly by those exercises, mechanical appliances and reformatory habits of body, in conjunction with hydropathy galvanism and other discoveries of the day, which, united with the cooperative efforts of the subject, are calculated to relieve and restore the energies of the suffering and neglected organs.

Having spent several years in traveling for investigation and practical experiment on the subject, he has, at length, greatly improved and multiplied his surgical and mechanical appliances for the purpose. In addition to his new supports for female and spinal weaknesses, are some combining the properties of a universal hernial truss and an effective general support, with which he challenges cases of general debility, constipation, piles and prolapsus, ani, leucorrhea, prolapsus uteri and every variety of hernia.

The distinctive peculiarity of these devices is, that they do not weaken or restrain the motions or growth of the suffering parts, but act imitatively and concordantly with the mathematical genius of the body's forces. Hence, by a most comfortable and gentle pressure, they at once give great support and render the oppressed system eligible to its own restoration.

Feeble invalids coming from a distance will command prompt and faithful attention.

For more definite information, see his revised edition of "Animal Mechanics," and also his circular, which will be sent gratuitously when requested.

His improved body-braces, spinal supports and supporter trusses applied at his office (341 Broadway) and to be had wholesale and retail. City and country physicians and druggists are invited to call and examine Office hours from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. [121.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazzetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impetency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cordial cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure. Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without off-spring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co. of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper.

WONDERFUL CURES!

AND

CANCHALAGUA;

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to

CONSUMPTION.

NO OPIUM.

This syrup contains no Opium, Calomel, or any mineral whatever, but is composed entirely of those Roots, Herbs, and vegetable substances which have a specific influence upon the Lungs, and their connected organs Its immediate effect is to allay all irritation, and gently remove the phlegm and other morbid secretions from the Throat and Air-Passages; thus relieving the Cough, by subduing the inflammation and other causes which give rise to it It also stimulates and imparts a healthy tone to the lungs themselves, thereby enabling them more thoroughly to remove from the blood those impurities and diseased particles, which, if retained, do so much mischief in the system, and lay the foundation for incurable CONSUMPTION. It also exerts a decided action upon the skin, and assists nature in expelling, through the Exhalents, much of that morbid matter which would otherwise be thrown back upon the Lungs, thus relieving them of a part of their work, and rendering the system pure and healthy. When tubercles are forming, it checks their development and further progress: or if ulceration has taken place, it assists the Lungs in throwing off the corrupted matter, soothes the irritation, heals the ulcerated cavities, and restores them again to healthy action This Medicine, therefore, is not a palliative merely, which only relieves for the time being, but is a thorough curative, as it strikes at the very root of the disease, and by removing it, removes at once all its remote and attendant consequences This is its distinguishing characteristic—a property possessed, in equal power, by no other medicine of like nature, now before the public.

CIRCULARS, &c

As no ordinary-sized advertisement can fully explain the nature and merits of this article the Proprietors have published a new Circular, giving the history of this Medicine; the description, nature &c., of its principal ingredients; the effect they are designed to have upon the Lungs and Liver, and a copious reference to the persons who have been cured by it—giving their names and residences, even to the street and the number. Those who are troubled with a Cough, or whose Lungs are in the least affected, are earnestly desired to call upon the Agents named below, and procure one of these Pamphlets. It can be had gratis, and will well repay a perusal. The "Hints on Health," and "About taking Cold," may be worth to yourself and family, in the the shape of Doctors' Bills saved, besides being the means of prolonging many a valuable life.

HUNDREDS OF DOLLARS,

WARRANTY.

Such is our confidence in its virtues, that we are willing to warrant this Medicine in every case of recent Cold, (where used according to the Directions on page 7th of the pamphlet, inside the wrapper of each bottle,) and where the person is not satisfied that he is deriving benefit from it, by returning the bottle within 24 hours' time, will be returned. ☞ See page 3d of the pamphlet inside the wrapper of each bottle.

☞ Be sure to ask for Dr A Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, and CANCHALAGUA, and let no other be palmed on to you.

CAUTION—None genuine, unless there is on the buff wrapper a note of hand, signed with a Pen, by A. L SCOVILL & CO.

BUILDING AIR-CASTLES.

A Sketch From Life,

BY ROBERT JENNESS.

Eldad Rawlings had a habit—which was not so very strange a habit, either—of building "castles in the air." To such an extent, and with such assiduity did he push the business of ærial architecture, that his whole life became, at length, a sort of dream Snuggled away, on a winter's day, in the warmest corner of his old fireplace, with one of his feet resting upon the huge fire-dog, and the other elevated to a well understood niche in the mantle, he gave a free rein to his waking fancies, and wrought at his imaginary carpentry with unabated enthusiasm.

Eldad Rawlings was a man, furthermore, who had a wife; and if ever antipodes, in every respect, had the profound pleasure of meeting each other, it was manifestly the case when Eldad and Nacy met each other, in the capacity of husband and wife.

Mrs Nancy Rawlings, by the side of her husband, was decidedly the "man of the house." Possessing no confidence whatever in the tact or ability of her husband as a getter of a livelihood, she had schooled her heart to the rough determination to occupy at once the place in the family, which she saw plainly enough was vacant So Nancy Rawlings took the lead, and wore the boots and all. This, too, without so much as the murmer of a protestation on the part of her meekly submissive, and kind hearted husband, Eldad.

They lived on quite a snug little place in the country, occupying a house which was properly their own, and cultivating—we mean Mrs Nancy Rawlings cultivating—land enough to afford them quite a comfortable income. There wasn't a neighbor, far or near, who did not know—and what do neighbors not know, in the country?—that if Eldad would but "put his shoulder to the wheel," himself, his affairs would be amazingly improved The opportunities he suffered to slip through his idle fingers, only because they were not large and golden opportunities, were abundantly sufficient to have doubled his estate in the few years he had spent in just keeping it snugly together, and—dreaming.

"If I only owned twenty cows, Nancy," said he, one day, rubbing the shin that was supported by the warm fire-dog with the heel of his other foot. "if I only owned twenty cows——."

"Twenty fiddle-sticks!" interrupted his usually aimable spouse, in a very un-amiable tone and temper indeed; "and what would you do with twenty cows, pray? Haven't you got two good cows a-ready? and you don't no more'n half take care o' them! Twenty cows!" repeated she, contemptuosly, while she rested her palms on the end of the broom-handle, and settled her somewhat sharp chin upon the backs of her hands.

There ensued a silence of some minutes.

At length Eldad came to himself again.

"I could make me a fortune," continued he, finishing the sentece he had begun, with as much consecutiveness and regularity as if his better half had not interrupted him at all

"What's to hinder you doin' well enough now?" demanded Nancy, giving her broom two or three emphatic flirts towards the fire, as if her vigilat eyes suddenly espied a small pile or two of stray dirt upon the hearth.

"Then I'd have me a market-nigger," said Eldad, undisturbed in the least by the discordant sentiments his wife had seen fit to offer; "and I'd have as nice a horse as there was in all the country; and wouldn't folks run to their doors, when they found that the milk was a-comin' from from the dairy, or diary,—which is it, Nancy?—of Eldad Rawlings, Esq.—hem! What do you say to that, wife? eh? What do you say to that?"

"I say that I think you'd orter be a-doin of somethin' else, than to be a countin' chickens afore they're enny ways near hatched! What's a-goin' to come of it, I should like to know?"

"A fortune, Nancy—a large fortune!"

"A fiddle stick!" replied she, with a contemptuous expression.

"Fiddle-stick" seemed to be a familiar word with her tongue, and by dint of a continued use of it she had come to invest it with quite half an ordinary volume of meaning.

"Fiddle stick as much as you're a mind to, Nancy," said Eldad; "if I had twenty cows,—yes, or only fifteen cows,—I should be on the high road to fortune!"

"Then how are you a-goin to git 'em?"

"That's the trouble!" replied he.

"Yes, and what are ye a goin to keep 'em on, arter you've got 'em? here's a lot o' pints to be considered, mind ye, Eldad, before your fortin's made, that you've planned so much upon!"

"All that's true enough," added Eldad, falling suddenly into a deep fit of musing, from which no words of his wife could during all that morning arouse him.

Eldad Rawlings, baffled by the vigilant spirit of a woman in his first attempt at castellated architecture was busily engaged at making another He was in no wise to be driven from the steady pursuit of his favorite calling If his wife was eminently practical Eldad was quite as much given to the contemplation of the intangible and the unreal. Relapsing, therefore, into his old moods, he began to build, while his faithful spouse began to get in the wood and water, and feed the swine and cattle.

So things went on for a long and weary time: just as long as Nancy would slave herself to do just so long Eldad might sit down and dream away in the chimney corner. Nancy began to grew weary of it at last, and she determined to make one woman's effort (always irrestible) to bring about a new order of things.

Her husband had been gone into town one day, and did not return until quite into the evening. When he got home, it wouldn't be surprising at all if he was extremely tired and hungry. He was so.

He found Nancy sitting up by the fire-place, in the corner opposite his own accustomed one. No table was set, and no supper had been got for him.

"Eat supper, Nancy?" inquired Eldad, stopping short in the middle of the room, and dismally contemplating the prospect before him.

"Supper?" repondended she, surprisedly, "no; I haven't thought o' supper! I've been a-thinkin' how I should like to ride in a carr'age! There's the Browns, now, that ride round in their beautiful coach, and how much they must enjoy it! I say I'm a-goin' to ride in a coach myself?"

"But where'll you get it, Nancy?" pursued her husband, not a little excited with the unaccountable novelty of her manner.

"Then I'll have a driver, too!" continued she, pretending not to notice his words, "and we'll go into town just as often as I please, O, wont them Browns wish they didn't live here! Eh, Eldad?"

"But I'm hungry, Nancy," said he, urgently: "I've rode a long ways, and I'm tired, too. Come, where's your supper?"

"I don't know whether I'd have the inside of the carriage trimmed with yaller, or blue; which would ye, Eldad?" said she by way of reply.

"Supper, Nancy! It's supper, that I want!"

"Ha! ha! ha!" laughed she, continuing to gaze abstractedly into the fire; but wont them Browns be mad! But then, we shall have to move into a bigger and a newer house than this, and I shan't do no more work, neither! I'll soak my hands a fortnight in pearl ashes, or what they call it, so's to make 'em look as white as any lady's; no more hogs to feed,—no more cows to milk,—no more wood to git in—lots o' new dresses, and ridin' about in a splendid carriage! Did anybody ever think that Nancy Rawlings would come to quite that! I rather guess the Browns didn't, at any rate"

"Nancy!" bawled out the hungry and impatient Eldad.

"Let's see!" said she, gazing farther and deeper, if possible into the fire; "I shall want some new gowns to wear, and—

"Nancy! Nancy Rawlings!" screamed Eldad in a louder voice.

"What, Eldad?" askedshe, relenting just enough to avert her gaze momentarily from the fire and its fanciful realms to his face, which she beheld wrought up to a wonderful express on of wonderment and terror.

"Come! I want supper!"

"But I don't get supper now; call your girl, Eldad!"

"Come, come, Nancy! Get me some supper but this once, and let this all go!"

"Let what all go?" inquired she, inwardly jumping at the most distant prospect of having effected a cure in her husband.

"I'll never build no more castles in the air, if you'll quit this now."

"Surely?" asked she, half afraid.

"Most solemnly I promise you!"

It was enough! Eldad had a good supper for his promise that night, but he forever ceased his carpentering in the air. Taking hold stoutly with his wife, he accumulated a snug fortune, worth more to him than the increse of twenty cows, or the pleasure to be derived from riding in as many carriages.

The School Fund.

The Trustees of the School Fund of this State, met on Wednesday, at the State House, to apportion the Fund appropriated among the several counties.

The following persons were present—Gov. Fort, Attorney General Elmer, Thomas S. Alison Esq. Secretary of State; Hon. Silas D. Canfield, President of the Senate, Hon John H. Phillips Speaker of the House of Assembly. Dr Theodore F. King, School Superintendent, was also present

After consultion, it was resolved, that one half (40,000) of the amount appropriated by the law passed at the last session of the Legislature, be paid to the several county Collectors by the Treasurer, on or before the first day of May, ensuing; and that the other half be paid in similar manner on or before the first day of October next.

The State Superintendent was directed to have 2500 copies of the existing School Laws, together with such instructions as may be deemed advisable, printed for distribution among the superintendents and Trustee of the State.

The following is the apportionment of the $40,000, to be paid on the first of May—the same proportions will be paid on the first of October. The apportionment is based on population and not on taxes as heretofore:

Atlantic,	$732 20
Bergen,	1201 33
Burlington,	3528 99
Camden,	2988 53
Cape May,	525 38
Cumberland,	1388 84
Essex,	6044 07
Gloucester,	1196 89
Hudson,	1786 71
Hunterdon,	2374 02
Mercer,	2226 37
Middlesex,	2341 92
Monmouth,	2469 58
Morris,	2464 60
Ocean,	820 33
Passaic,	1844 14
Salem,	1592 80
Somerset,	1606 52
Sussex,	1877 87
Warree,	1826 86

It will be recollected that $80,000 was appropriated by the last Legislature for School purposes. One half is to be paid out of the School Fund, and the other half from the general funds in the Treasury.—Trenton True American.

The Lever—its Principles.

Many people suppose that there is power in a lever. This is an error. A lever is but a stick or crow bar which is totally inert except when power is applied to it. A long lever has no more power than a short one, not one bit. It is true that a man exerting a pressure of 200 lbs. constantly will lift the same weight with as much case as a man with a lever of half the length exerting a pressure of 400 lbs, but then the man with the short lever will move the weight through twice the space of the long lever in the same time A screw propeller with a shaft and blade one half the diameter of another, will move the vessel just as fast, if it receives double velocity,—the lever is smaller but the velocity is greater. "Velocity and psessure," the golden rule of mechanical science.—Scientific American.

A Yankee Temperance Lecture.

The New York Sunday Times furnishes a very graphic report of a temperance lecture, that purports to have been delivered at Horseneck, Long Island, by a long, shingled sided Yanke, with a face 'that was all angels in outline,' just as if nature had whittled it out with a dull jack-knife, and had lacked the necessary fragment of glass or scrap of sandpaper, to round off the corners Here is the lecture verbatim, according to the report:

FELLER-MEN—I desire to say there's no safety in moderate drinking. When vice takes a start, it does'nt often stop half way, but generally goes on continually vriy worser. Whiskey will whisk you off before you know it; brandy will brand ye with disgrace; the commonest gin is a snare to the feet of the unwary; and even hydrog*in* and oxyg*in* is destructive to human life, except when jined, in the form of water; in fact feller-men, no gin ought to be used except the cotton-gin. If the still-men were all destroyed, we should have quiet in the land.—Thousands are brought to an early bier by the brewers, and 'a little more grape' is the death of many Captain Braggs. The grain and the fruits of the airth were not intended to have the liquor wormed out of 'em, and it is a mistake to suppose that the contents of the horn of plenty should be converted into plenty of horns. Every Jack must have his gill the proverb says: but there is no reason to believe it means a gill of apple-Jack Never drink rum to drown afflictions—you had better drown it in water, by jumping off the dock. If your inclinations should get such a command over your legs, as to carry you to a porter-house door, pause, think, reason with yourself—you will then put down the fatal cup, and go off with a rectified spirit Try—should you even be tempted to imbibe forbidden floids—not to persevere in ill doing; for Shakespeare says, and I believe it, that the eighth glass shows you many more. Therefore, feller-men, beware of the eighth glass.—Drunkenness, feller-men, is the official guide to poverty and the devil The temperance man redeems his pledge; but the drunkard seldom gets his watch out of pawn. If he has any jewels, they go the same way, and the carbuncles which he gets instead of 'em, are neither so ornamental nor so valuable as those you read about in the Rabian Nights. Don't for Massy's sake, take your bitters in the morning before breakfast—if you du, it will soon be all day with you. But, as I said before, I go for total abstemiousness—which mean's, as you are aware, the total absence of steam Look, feller-men, at that tempting sheet of water—[pointing to the dirty pool]—that is your natural element. [Here a perceptible twinge ran through the convocation.] What says Isaiah? You that thirsts, come to the waters, and drink free gratis for nothing Think, feller-men, how much cheaper it is to drink water than alkihol—and water's a liquid that no man hankers arter, which is not the case with the latter. Do you 'spose that if the rock Moses smote with his pick had spouted hot whiskey punch, the children of Israel would ever have been satisfied? Never, my feller-men! I know it by personal ex——I mean I know it by many excrooshiating scenes that I have personally witnessed.

Feller-men, I have nothing more to add, except that the hat is going round for the good of the cause and however much you may drop into it, will not be a drop too much.

Such was the discourse. We leave it to the reader to judge whether it was uttered by a sincere disciple. All that the transcriber can say is, that the lecturer's countenance did not make the faintest approach to a smile, from the first word to the last—We thought, however, there was a twinkle in his eye as he emptied the contents of the hat in one of the pockets of his linsey-woolsey coat.

SUSPICIOUS CASE.—The Pennsylvanian relates the case of a Mr. Samuel Peabody, who was arrested by the watchmen on suspicion of being intoxicated. The Mayor desired to know what was Samuel's opinion of the matter. With some appearance of embarrassment he gave the following narrative:

"Well, sir, I mout have been drunk, and I mout not—I can't pretend to say for certain.

The fact is, I've done so little that way, that I'll be blamed if I know when I am drunk. I dare say some of these police gentlemen are better judges than I am, when it comes to that. But I'll tell you exactly what I did and how I felt, and if your honor concludes I was drunk, why I'll pay the fine and say no more about it You see I was troubled with the wind, and took four glasses of lavender brandy to start it. Soon after, I felt a buzzing in my ears, and the he cups was awful troublesome, but that I thought was the wind coming off—Then it seemed to me, as I walked along the street that an awning post or water plug, every now and then would jump before me, as if they meant to head me off. I was mad at this and struck one or two of them with my knuckles, but it was no use, for my first got the worst of it. It seemed like all the gas lights had faces to them; some winked and others grinned at me, and one that stood before a hotel nodded as if to say, "Go in, Sam, and get something to drink," which I did—When I came out, there was the greatest ado that I ever saw! I was sure there was an earthquake, for the houses and steeples were all staggering about, and the street was rocking just like a cradle. It was a most sublime spectacle; so I fetched up against a pump and held on while I took a good look at the magnificent scene. No panorama could come up to it; houses, trees, fences—all rearing and plunging like wild horses. The sight was worth a dollar and a half. If I have to pay a fine I don't care, for I got the full value of my money. And so, if your Honor's any way suspicious that I was drunk, I'll foot the bill right away without any grumbling" His Honor was a little suspicious, and Mr Peabody, being a man of his word, promptly pulled out his wallet and made a satisfactory settlement.

WHITE AND BLACK.—A white man, not long since, sued a black man, in one of the courts of a free State and while the trial was before the judge, the litigants came to an amicable settlement, and so the counsel stated to the court.

"A verbal settlement will not answer," replied the judge, "it must be in writing"

"Here is the agreement, 'in black and white,'" responded the counsel, pointing to the reconciled parties, "pray, what does your honor want more than this?",—Knickerbocker.

PLAINFIELD GAZETTE.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Thursday; May 8, 1851.

☞ Mr Albert D. Drake is our authorised agent to receive subscriptions and advertisments.

☞ Mr. E. W. Carr, Third street, Philadelphia, opposite the Exchange, is our authorised agent for that city.

☞ THE REV. E. H. Chapin's lecture on Temperance at the M. E Church on Tuesday evening was listened to by a large and intelligent audience with most profound attention. Being unable to do it justice we will simply state our convictions, as we doubt not we do those of the entire audience, that the arguments advanced were not only, as was to be expected, logical and sound, but were brought home to the hearts and consciences of all. Therefore we trust that the effects will be as lasting at the arguments were happy and true.

☞ "Fire will burn and water will run down hill," therefore there is no God—the Bible is a fable, and Christianity is a lie.

The substance, nearly, of the above premises is ours; the inference or conclusions, as drawn, whether true or false, are by the editor of the Plainfield Union. From the premises we inferred—it being a self evident axiom, which any man can prove, and which no man can disprove, being constantly verified by his experience and corroborated by the universal experience of man—that, the laws of nature are immutable, and therefore, as there can be no exceptions to an immutable law, whatever conclusions can be legitimately drawn therefrom must be true; hence the opposition of the editor of the Union and his coadjutors thereto; hence also, although he professes to believe—this is evidently affected—the position a weak one; his evasion being good evidence, proving plainly, in his case at least, that it is easier to assert that it is weak or false than to prove it to be so.

Our neighbor, as well as his assistant "Quiz," does not appear to like the idea that our readers, especially christians, should read, think and judge for themselves; intimating plainly, both of them, by denying their readers an opportunity, that they are not, neither are ours, so capable as they are to reason and judge for themselves; therefore that they should not permit themselves to be contaminated by any argnment on the subject. Being accustomed themselves to obey authority, to beleive what is dictated to them, they scorn argument as the folly of fools, and would by dictation make equal slaves of all men. We would advise them to keep cool, not to be alarmed, as it is pretty evident that readers hereabout, especially those of the Gazette, when a subject is under discussion, do not take assertion for proof; and, as we are perfectly content to let our arguments rest upon the evidence we bring to sustain them, ever inviting investigation thereof, we would advise them to ease their minds and let their readers, through their arguments, their evidence, as well as ours, "Prove all things and hold fast that which is good."

☞ The attention of the reader is directed to the advertisment of Messrs Lane & Webster, in another column. These gentlemen have purchased the property between Mr. Bullman and Mr Pruden's stores, neatly fitted it up and filled it with New Goods. We doubt not, as they have become citizens among us, that they will offer fair inducements for a share of the public patronage. Call and see.

☞ See in another column a notice of "The Pocket Companion for Machinists, Mechanics and Engineers." This little work filled with valuable practical information, should be in the hands of every person who would become practically acquainted with the subjects of which it treats.

☞ We would hereby acknowledge (tardy though they are, referring to Feb 20) the compliments of "Quis," in the Plainfield Union, and inform him that we would be obliged if he would give us the reasons or arguments whereon "Newton (Did he (Newton) infer from the fall of the apple—an illustration by which he proved the immutability of the laws of nature—that water would "Stand up as a wall on either side?") and thousands of far better judges" founded their belief; that possibly we also may be convinced; premising however, that they are not all—"Quis" ()

Tremendous Gale on the Lakes,

BUFFALO, May 2.

We were visited yesterday by a gale of greater severity than has occurred on the lakes since 1844. Its approach was not indicated by the barometer, and hence it caugt the shipping outside unprepared, and we fear involves a severe loss of propety if not of life. The morning was cloudy and chilly, with a light wind from the N. E. At about 10 o'clock it chopped round to W S W blowing with great force, accopanied with snow hail and rain. It continued with great fury throughout the day and during the early part of last night. The sudden change of wind brought a great volume of water into our harbor covering the low lands, filling the cellars and nearly submerging the docks. The extent of damage to property in the vicinity of the habor is quite severe.

NEW-ORLEANS, Saturday, May 3.

The Cuban expedition here has been broken up, owing to obstacles interposed by Government. The men have been disbanded, and all the officers and leading spirits have returned to their homes in the West and elsewhere.

South Carolina Convention.

BALTIMORE, Saturday May 3.

The Charleston Courier says that members of the State Convention, to be held in that city, are arriving in Great numbers. The whole number of members is 167, of whom 78 are opposed to separate State action, and 89 are for secession.

If you would relish your food, labor for it; if you would enjoy your raiment pay for it before you wear it; if you would sleep soundly, take a clear conscience to bed with you.

A Terrible Tragedy.

The Philadelphia papers of Modday bring us the particulars of some of the most startling murders ever committed in this country. Valentine Bartle, a thrifty German who had retired to a farm near Roxborough, 9 miles from Philadelphia, with his wife and an infant child, were the victims to some fiendish spirit on Friday night, when the horrid deed is supposed to have been committed by a German or Italian, a workman formerly in their employ, and with whom the family appear to have quarrelled some time before. Their bodies were found terribly mutilated, and the most intense excitement ensued, but the murderer is, as yet, at large, though he has pursuers in every direction. The Inquirer says:—

The house where the deed was committed is a rough built two story dwelling, is situated in a little vale of meadow land, on a very lonely by-road. It seemed to us that nature had chosen the spot for the foul deed, and the cruel wretch who committed it knew that his victims were beyond the reach of human aid.

Mr. Bartle was found about yards from his dwelling, in the meadow, a lifeless corpse. His brains were beaten out and his back and shoulders hacked in an awful manner. He evidently had been the first assailed, and must have been retreating when the blows were given.

Mrs. Bartle was found lying at the back door step, with her brains also beaten out.

The infant, about twelve months old, was lying in one corner of the room and must have been killed by two blows, inflicted on the forehead, front and back It had no doubt crept into the corner, and when discovered, was lying upon its face, with its feet drawn up. Its countenance was that of a most interesting character. From appearances, the little innocent must have been in its mother's arms, from the fact that one of her fingers were broken.

A table was set in the room, as if the family had been all at supper the previous evening, and there were evident appearances of an attack then having been made.

Every place, including all the drawers, was ransacked, and everything of the least value carried away. A chest up stairs, where the three children were sleeping, had been forced open with an axe, and rifled of its contents.

The instruments of death were an axe, and a large club. An axe, covered with blood, and the club, were found upon the premises. A new bucher knife wrapped in a Madras Hankerchief, was found in the meadow, near the dead body of Mr. Bartle. This instrument had not been used. The knife had no doubt been prepared to do this wholesale butchery.

The supposed murderer is about 19 years of age, of rough make, 5 ft. 7 or 8 inches in height, dark complexion, dark clothes, slim built, and a little stooping—has dark hair, rough flat face, and speaks broken English. The brother of the deceased was present during the investigation, and his feelings can better be imagined than described. The bodies of the murdered victims were handed over by order of the Coroner, to the brother for interment.

A CHURCH AND CONGREGATION STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.—An illustration of the Immutability of Nature's Laws:—A most appalling event occurred on Wednesday, showing the incalculable importance of having lightning rods attached to tall steeples. The accident occurred to the Methodist Church at Danville, and the Lewisburgh Chronicle says;

The Congregation were kneeling in prayer, just before the sacrament was to be administered. There were no previous indications of a storm, except a slight sprinkle of rain, and a cloud which seemed to be gathering in a northerly direction. The steeple was first struck, and much shattered. After reaching the main building, the electric fluid divided into two separate currents—one passing through the ceiling and along the chain by which one of the lamps was suspended, (both of which latter were demolished) directly down into the midst of the crowded congregation; tearing up the floors and pews considerably and instantly killing Mrs. Pencil, and inflicting alarming injuries upon her sister Miss Vastine, and eight or nine others, mostly females, besides stunning and otherwise partially affecting many other persons

The ladies dresses were much torn as well as set on fire, and in some instances ripped completely open to the flesh by the force of the terrific bolt. Mrs. Pencil's person bore no external marks of injury, but most of the others were scorched and discolored to a greater or less extent. The other current passed out through the brick wall by the front door, tearing off the facings and prostrating a young man named Jones, who was just at that moment in the act of entering.—The lightning struck his right shoulder, tore his rigt boot to fragments, and blistered his flesh from shoulder to heel so badly that the skin peeled off when his clothes were removed

Our informant, a gentlemen of this place, who was in the chapel at the time, says it was the most appalling scene of concentration and distress he ever witnessed.

The chapel is a new building, and the entire elevation of the steeples or dome, is about eighty feet, and had no lightning rod; though we understand one had been contracted for, and was expected to be put up in the course of the summer.

In this connection, it may be proper to remark, that tall pointed steeples, with suitable lightning rods affixed, are an important protection to a whole city. They draw down the electric fluid from a great height and distance around, not as might be supposed in a sudden shock, but in a gradual invisible currrent. It is incalculable how many violent strokes of lightning upon our own city have been prevented by the tall steeples among us.

TAKE WARNING.—The great excitement continues at the celebrated cheapest carpet establisment in the United States, No. 99 Bowery, Hiram Anderson's, in consequence of the unparalelled low prices affixed to the most elegant patters of English Patent Tapestry, Three-Ply and Patent Tapestry, Ingrain Carpeting, Floor Oil Cloths, Rugs, Window Shades, Table Covers, Stair Carpetings, &c. Housekeepers far and near, anxiously embrace this rare opportuniiy of selecting bargains from the largest, handsomest, and cheapest assortment to be found in this country. Families visiting the great metropolis should, by all means, examine those handsome and cheap carpets. They are dislayed in eight spacious sales rooms, worthy of the attention of purchers.

It is quoted as a proof of the progress of civilization in Turkey that the Grand Seraskier, Mehemet Ali Pasha, who about seven years ago had three of his own wives sewed up in sacks and thrown into the Bosphorus, has just handed over his brother to the police for sewing up one of his!

An oil dealer sold some winter oil that was warranted to stand the severest cold, but it froze stiff. The purchaser went to the vender with loud complaints. "I told you it would stand the coldest weather," said he; "I did n't tell you it would run. You see that it stands perfectly still, and you can't make it budge."

Late from California.

NEW ORLEANS, May 2.

The steamship "Alabama" has arrived here in six days from Chagres, with 170 passengers and a large amount of gold dust. The steamers "Cresent City," "North America" and "Georgia" have arrived at Chagres. The dates from San Francisco are to the 1st of April. The news generally is unimportant. From the mines and Dry Diggings the reports are very favorable, and new discoveries are continually being made; in fact, the prospects from all quarters appear to be encouraging

The decision has been given in the District Court of Sacramento sustaining the suitors of claims on all lands on which the city is located. No further attempts have been made to dislodge them, nor is it likely there will be.

The steamers Tennesee and Columbia had arrived at Panama with a million and a half of gold dust.

The exports from San Francisco of Gold Dust on the day the steamer Tennessee left, amount to $2,000,000.

There has been freequent rains in the valley and snow on the mountains, thus enabling miners to renew their digging operations.

Gold from quartz rock has been procured with better success, but no machinery is suitable for the purposes.

Agriculture, this year, will be an important feature in California. A large portion up the population having turned their attention that way If Congress passes any law by which the farmer may know he has a good title to the land he improves, the State will supply her consumption in a few years.

The Indian difficulties are not yet definitely settled.

Politics are exciting attention, and the people are marshaling for a contest. The Legislature is still in session, but no further attempts have been made to elect a U. S. Senator. Probably something will be dome this session

A great many murders are reported as having occurred in different parts of the country, the most cruel of which is the murder of Capt. Jarvis of Texas The papers literally teem with fights, murders and robberies.

By the burning of Nevada City, the loss is estimated at $2,000,000.

The Legislature attaches the penalty of death for grand larceny. The Committee of the Legislature have reported in favor of impeaching Judge Parsons.

Extensive preparations are making to rebuild Nevada.

LIBERATION OF PRISONERS.—The poor and unfortunate once in a great while have their days of unexpected pleasure, but they are few and far between, like angels' visits Some 16 convicts received the favorable consideration of the Court of Pardons, which was in session on Wednesday night, and were liberated yesterday. The bright sun and pure air must have produced strange sensations on him who has spent twelve long years within the limits of a narrow cell. These unfortunates were overjoyed at their release. Many of them had nearly served out their terms of sentence, and others were pardoned in consequence of some physical or mental disability One was an idiot, another deranged, another subject to fits, and some in the last stage of consumption.—True American.

HUMAN LIFE.—The average duration of human life is gradually lengthening. A careful examination of numerous statistics has established the fact that from the time of the Roman empire, an increase of average longevity has been taking place among civilized nations. The medical profession claim the credit of this change, as induced by the improvements of medical science; but it may with more reason be attributed to the general advance of civilization, of the industrial classes, and the multiplication of social comforts

THE LUNGS.—The following simple experiment is said to be a test of the soundness of the lungs. Let the patient draw in a full breath, and then begin to count as far as he can, slowly and audibly, without inflating the lungs. The number of seconds he can continue is then to be carefully noted. In confirmed consumption the time does not exceed eight, and is often less than six seconds. In pleurisy and pneumonia it ranges from nine to four seconds. But when the lungs are sound, the time will range as high as twenty to thirty seconds.

PANIC AT SEA.—A green lad from Alabama, who was a passenger on board one of the steamboats navigating the Gulf of Mexico, suddenly bolted into the cabin one morning, before the passengers had fairly rubbed their eyes open, exlaiming "We are lost?" Lost? replied his nearest neighbor. "Lost?" exclaimed another. Lost?" screamed out the whole crowd. "Yes, lost!" said the lad, astonished at the alarm he had created. 'I know we ar lost, cause the cap'tins' on the top o' the house, and another man's up on the mast, a-lookin' to see war we ar."

KNOLEDGE cannot be acquired without pains and application. It is troublesome and like deep digging for pure waters; but when you once come to the spring, they rise up and meet you.

THE LANCET.—The proposition before the Legislature to make bloodletting in diseases penal is unopposed The lancet is without a defender Judgment must be taken against it pro confesso. When we remember the unanimity with which the indispensability of this insidious instrument was insisted upon, less than six years ago, the revolution is most extraordinary.—N. Y. Sun. Courier.

The Russian Government has decided that the thousandth anniversary of the Russian empire shall be celebrated next year with the greatest pomp in all the cities and large towns of Russia.

A lady hired a Western country girl for a family "help," and was surprised to see her poke her head into the parlor one afternoon when visiters were present, and ask, "Marm did you call just now? I thought I hearn a yell."

The Perils of the Lungs.

These delicate organs are always in peril, and life is in peril when they do not properly perform their functions. If inflammation interferes with their regular action, the blood is imperfectly purified, the circulation is irregular, and the whole system suffers. In the combined tonic, expectorant, and healing properties of Dr Rogers' Syrup of Liverwort, Tar, and Canchalagua, lies the remedy for all this mischief. DELAY IS DANGEROUS. While the patient is considering tubercles may be forming, or worse still, may be bursting in the Lungs. But if this remedy by promptly applied, the Cough, Cold, or Catarrah is at once removed, and to use the word of Daniel Webster, the sufferer "breathes freer and deeper." The only thing required is promptitude. See pamplet in the hands of Agents, and advertisement in another column.

DEWITT & DAVENPORT, PUBLISHERS

Tribune Buildings New York,

THE Publishers have spared no exertion or expense to make this compendium everything that it purports to be. In order to effect this they engaged the services of OLIVER BYRNE, celebrated in Europe as the author of a large number of the best scientific works in the language, and already favorably known here as the author of the Dictionary of Mechanics and Engineering

It has been the author's endeavor to make the work eminently practical, and to condense the most information into the least possible space; and, after a careful examination, we do not hesitate to say that it is, in our opinion, infinitely superior to any Treatise of the kind now in use, and one that should be in the hands not only of the mechanic and working man but of every person desirous of much information, in a small compass, on almost every useful subject. We find no long columns of figures of no use except to encumber the book, but in place of this, Tables are used, as far as necessary, by which the reader is taught how to produce the necessary results himself.

It would far exceed our limits to give even an idea of all it contains.

Many very useful things will be found in it which are peculiarly the author's, and not to be met with in any other treatise of the kind We can mention only a few. In the first place the work is embellished with three Steel Engravings of Steam Engines,—the Stationary, Locomotive, and Ship Engine, in the very best style of Engraving, all the parts of which are accurately pointed out and explained by numbers, so that any persons perfectly ignorant of their use would be able to learn how to manage one.

ALSO

An ALMANAC FOR ALL TIME, a very useful as well as curious arrangement, peculiarly the author's

A UNIVERSAL THERMOMETER, showing the sensible heat of many substances according to the three most approved Thermometers By inspection the degrees of one of these thermometric scales are converted into degrees of either of the others. This has been got up at great expense, and is only to be found in this book

How Logarithms are applied to facilitate the calculations of the Mechanic, Machinist, and Engineer

The most accurate Planetary Tables.
Tonnage of Ships
The Thickness of Water Pipes of Iron, Cast Iron, Copper, Lead, &c
Dilatation of Solids by Heat.
Wind and Windmills—pressure of the wind moving at given velocities.
The Weights of different countries compared
Torsion, Twisting, and Cohesive powers of Bodies.
Alloys and Compounds
The Retardation of Railway Trains.
Mechanical Powers.
Wheels, Drums, and Pulleys.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S

TRICOPHEROUS,

or Medicated Compound.

INFALLIBLE for renewing, invigorating, and beautifying the HAIR, removing the scurf, dandruff, and all affections of the scalp; and curing eruptions on the skin, diseases of the glands, muscles and integuments, and relieving stings, cuts, bruises, sprains, &c. With this preparation "there is no such word as fail." The first journals in America, medical men of the highest eminence, prominent citizens of all professions, and ladies who have used it for years in their dressing rooms and nurseries, admit with one accord, that for imparting vigor, gloss, luxurience and curl to the hair, eradicating scurf and dandruff, healing wounds, curing contusions, sprains, stings, &c., and relieving diseases of the skin, the glands and the muscles, it has no equal, among the multitude of compounds advertised in the public prints, or used in private practice. In cheapness as well as efficacy, Barry's Tricopherous is unrivalled. The immense cash sales of the article have enabled the Inventor to supply it at retail, at 25 cents per bottle, which is from 50 to 100 per cent less than the price of any other preperation for the hair now in use. The scientific treatise on the hair and the skin, (embracing valuable directions for the culture and preservation of Nature's choicest ornament,) in which each bottle is enclosed, is alone worth the money.

The affinity between the membranes which constitute the skin, and the hair which draws its sustenance from this triple envelope is very close. All diseases of the hair originate in the skin of the head. If the pores of the scalp are clogged, or if the blood and other fluids do not circulate freely through the small vessels which feed the root with moisture, and impart life to the fibres, the result is scurf, dandruff, shedding of the hair, graveness, dryness and harshness of the ligaments, and entire baldness, as the case may be. Stimulate the skin to healthful action with the Tricopherous, and the torpid vessels, recovering their activity, will anihilate the disease. In all affections of the skin, and of the substrata of muscles and integuments, the process and the effect are the same.—It is upon the skin, the muscular fibre, and the glands, that the Tricopherous has its specific action, and in all affections and injury of these organs, it is a sovereign remedy.

Newark, April 3d, 1851. H. EILS.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequent occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels: such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any moment.

RUPTURES, are always to be treated with the surgical instruments known as Trusses and Supporters, and these require to be skillfully applied. With this view, the HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE, now established some thirty years, has under the various managers, presented to the public both male and female attendants to apply its instruments directly to the persons, which is preferable in all cases, and has also made improvement at different times, showing that advancement which study and practice only yield toward the relief of this malady.

With much pleasure the fact is now published, that recent improvements BUTLER'S TRUSS PADS have been made, and sufficiently tested upon numerous cases to warrant, through the cures already affected, their submission to the public, as being in adaptation and efficiency superior to any heretofore made known.

These improvements, recently patented, are now being applied at this office, 4 Vesey street, in cases of rupture, gravitation of the bowels, prolapsus uteri, prolapsus ani and piles.

The public may rely upon that care being made in their application, which will most likely tend to the final cure of the several complaints.

Hull's Truss Office, 4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St. Paul's Church, New-York.

FRED'K M. BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The ladies' department is attended by a female qualified to fit the instruments, having so attended this office for many years.

Children trussed when only two weeks old, and invariably cured. [145is.

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

Among the numerous discoveries science has made in this generation to facilitate the business of life—increase its enjoyment, and even prolong the term of human existence, none can be named of more real value to mankind, than this contribution of Chemistry to the Healing Art. A vast trial of its virtues throughout this broad country, has proven beyond a doubt, that no medicine or combination of medicine yet known, can so surely control and cure the numerous varieties of pulmonary disease which have hitherto swept from our midst thousands and thousands every year. Indeed, there is now abundant reason to believe a Remedy has at length been found which can be relied on to cure the most dangerous affections of the lungs. Our space here will not permit us to publish any proportion of the cures affected by its use, but we would present the following opinions of eminent men, and refer further enquiry to the circular which the Agent below named, will always be pleased to furnish free wherein are full particulars, and indisputable proof of these facts.

From the President of Amherst College, the celebrated PROFESSOR HITCHCOCK.

"James C. Ayer—Sir: I have used your CHERRY PECTORAL in my own case of deep seated Bronchitis, and am satisfied from its chemical constitution, that it is an admirable compound for the relief of laryngial and bronchial difficulties. If my opinion as to its superior character can be of any service, you are at liberty to use it as you think proper.

EDWARD HITCHCOCK, L. L. D.,

From the widely celebrated

PROFESSOR SILLIMAN, M. D., L. L. D., Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, &c., Yale College, Member of the Lit, Hist. Med. Phil. and Scientific Societies of America and Europe.

"I deem the CHERRY PECTORAL an admirable composition from some of the best articles in the Materia Medica, and a very effective remedy for the class of diseases it is intended to cure."

New Haven, Ct., Nov 1 1849.

MAJOR PATTISON, President of the S. C. Senate, states he has used the CHERRY PECTORAL with wonderful success, to and inflammation of the lungs.

From one of the first Physicians in Maine.

SACO, Me., April 26, 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell. Dear Sir: I am now constantly using your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, and prefer it to any other medicine for pulmonary complaints. From observation of many severe cases, I am convinced it will cure coughs, colds, and diseases of the lungs, that have put to defiance all other remedies.

I invariably recommend its use in cases of consumption, and consider it much the best remedy known for that disease.

Respectfully yours, I. S. CUSHMAN, M. D.

PATENT INDEPENDENT HORSERAKE,

In the Counties of Somerset, Middlesex, Essex, Hudson, Bergen and Passaic, and will have them ready ready by the 1st of May

This Rake was patented by Calvin Delano, of East Livermore, Maine, Feb. 27 1649. It is fitted to the hind wheels of a Single Horse Wagon, and attended by a man or boy who can RIDE AND RAKE, and manage the horse with ease and certainty.

Each Tooth acts separately and independently, its head being suspended on a rod or hinge over the Axletree, one Tooth being attached to each head. It is equally applicable to ROUGH AND SMOOTH LAND, and applies with equal pressure on each kind of surface

Premiums and Diplomas were awarded it in the Fall of 1847 and 1848, by the Kennebec and Franklin Counties Agricultural Societies Its utility has been tested by more than 100 Farmers in the State of Maine, who have certified to its superiority over all other Horse Rakes

MECHANICAL MEDICINE.

Dr. Banning, formerly of this city, asks to announce that he has returned to 341 Broadway; for consultation and management of weaknesses of the vocal, pulmonary, digestive, nervous, spinal and female systems; and also of the drooping, languor and physical deformities, which are so destructive of both health and beauty at the present day.

As these and kindred maladies are usually the result of a violation of the laws of physical organization, he will treat them chiefly by these exercises, mechanical appliances and reformatory habits of body, in conjunction with hydropathy galvanism and other discoveries of the day, which, united with the cooperative efforts of the subject, are calculated to relieve and restore the energies of the suffering and neglected organs.

Having spent several years in traveling for investigation and practical experiment on the subject, he has, at length, greatly improved and multiplied his surgical and mechanical appliances for the purpose. In addition to his new supports for female and spinal weaknesses, are some combining the properties of a universal hernial truss and an effective general support, with which he challenges cases of general debility, constipation, piles and prolapsus, ani, leucorrhea, prolapsus uteri and every variety of hernia.

The distinctive peculiarity of these devices is, that they do not weaken or restrain the motions or growth of the suffering parts, but act imitatively and concordantly with the mathematical genius of the body's forces. Hence, by a most comfortable and gentle pressure, they at once give great support and render the oppressed system eligible to its own restoration

Feeble invalids coming from a distance will command prompt and faithful attention.

For more definite information, see his revised edition of "Animal Mechanics," and also his circular, which will be sent gratuitously when requested.

His improved body-braces, spinal supports and supporter trusses applied at his office (341 Broadway) and to be had wholesale and retail. City and country physicians and druggists are invited to call and examine Office hours from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. [121.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impetency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cordial cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence It is of priceless value to those without off-spring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs Judson & Co, of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale: and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the wrapper

WONDERFUL CURES!

AND

CANCHALAGUA;

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to

CONSUMPTION.

NO OPIUM.

This syrup contains no Opium, Calomel, or any mineral whatever, but is composed entirely of those Roots, Herbs, and vegetable substances which have a specific influence upon the Lungs, and their connected organs. Its immediate effect is to allay all irritation, and gently remove the phlegm and other morbid secretions from the Throat and Air-Passages; thus relieving the Cough, by subduing the inflammation and other causes which give rise to it. It also stimulates and imparts a healthy tone to the lungs themselves, thereby enabling them more thoroughly to remove from the blood those impurities and diseased particles, which, if retained, do so much mischief in the system, and lay the foundation for incurable CONSUMPTION. It also exerts a decided action upon the skin, and assists nature in expelling, through the Exhalents, much of that morbid matter which would otherwise be thrown back upon the Lungs, thus relieving them of a part of their work, and rendering the system pure and healthy. When tubercles are forming, it checks their development and further progress; or if ulceration has taken place, it assists the Lungs in throwing off the corrupted matter, soothes the irritation, heals the ulcerated cavities, and restores them again to healthy action. This Medicine, therefore, is not a palliative merely, which only relieves for the time being, but is a thorough curative, as it strikes at the very root of the disease, and by removing it, removes at once all its remote and attendant consequences. This is its distinguishing characteristic—a property possessed, in equal power, by no other medicine of like nature, now before the public.

CIRCULARS, &c.

As no ordinary-sized advertisement can fully explain the nature and merits of this article, the Proprietors have published a new Circular, giving the history of this Medicine; the description, nature &c., of its principal ingredients; the effect they are designed to have upon the Lungs and Liver, and a copious reference to the persons who have been cured by it—giving their names and residences, even to the street and the number. Those who are troubled with a Cough, or whose Lungs are in the least affected, are earnestly desired to call upon the Agents named below, and procure one of these Pamphlets. It can be had gratis, and will well repay a perusal. The "Hints on Health," and "About taking Cold," may be worth to yourself and family, in the the shape of Doctors' Bills saved, besides being the means of prolonging many a valuable life.

HUNDREDS OF DOLLARS,

WARRANTY.

Such is our confidence in its virtues, that we are willing to warrant this Medicine in every case of recent Cold, (where used according to the Directions on page 7th of the pamphlet, inside the wrapper of each bottle,) and where the person is not satisfied that he is deriving benefit from it, by returning the bottle within 24 hours' time, will be returned. ☞ See page 3d of the pamphlet inside the wrapper of each bottle.

THE MONEY

☞ Be sure to ask for Dr. A. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, and CANCHALAGUA, and let no other be palmed on to you.

CAUTION.—None genuine, unless there is on the buff wrapper a note of hand, signed with a Pen, by A. L. SCOVILL & CO.

FOR SAAE, wholesale and retail, by A. L. SCOVILL & Co., Proprietors, at their Principal Depot, GOTHIC HALL, no 316. Broadway, New York, to whom all orders for the Medicine, and letters relating to agencies, should be addressed, post-paid.

"Spirit Rappings."

Have you ever heard the rappings?
Have you listened to the tappings,—
To the strange, mysterious clappings,
That are going on in town?
How the deuce it is they do it,
Or what the clue is to it,
No one knows, or can see through it,
But it's done, and "done up brown."

Soon! suddenly you hear 'em,
And you soon seem to be quite near 'em,
But shudder not nor fear 'em,
They're such pleasant kind o' chaps:
There's nothing about them shocking
Who these secrets are unlocking,
So you ask 'em "who dat knocking?"
And are answered by some taps.

And although they are our betters,
Their ideas move in fetters,
And are all spelt out with letters,
A process long and slow!
But ask 'em how they flourish,
Or what politics they nourish?
And their answer's never currish,
But just what you wish to know!

The spirits are all happy,
That is, all those who're "tappy,"
Though some, 'tis said, are nappy,
Not knowing all they might;
Hence, there's now and then a question
Too hard for the digestion
Of some addle-head blest one,
Which's to be expected, quite!

It's a mystery to us sinners,
How "things what don't eat dinners,"
And whose stomach never whinners
For want of proper food,
Or feels hunger's pointed rowels,
Should, with consonants and vowels,
Spell the action of our bowels,
Prescribing for their good!

But the business is a new one!
Perhaps their mode's the true one,
Of putting notions through one,
So, make it widely known!
And we hear there's preparation
To extend its operation,
Till each person in the nation
Has a "rapper" of his own.

A WOLF ADVENTURE.

A TEXAN'S STORY.

BY L. BURDICK.

It was towards the close of one of those hot, sultry days so peculiar to the southern climate, that a company of five or six old trappers and hunters were congregated together, some smoking, and others lounging, half asleep upon the benches on the broad stoop or piazza of a little tavern near the village of Henderson, in the north-eastern part of the now State of Texas. The sun already tipped the edge of the western prairie, yet the air was almost stifling; not a breath of wind could be felt and the heat was of the most oppressive kind.

Just at this moment a man was seen approaching upon a large powerful steed, covered with sweat and foam, and the traveller was sadly begrimed with dust collected from his long ride. He proceeded immediately to the aforesaid inn, and drawing up at the door, dismounted, and ordered his beast to be well cared for, after which he hastily brushsd the dust from his limbs, and seated himself among the loungers on the piazza.

"A warm day this," said one of the men, removing the pipe from his mouth as he spoke.

"Yes," grunted, rather than spoke the stranger.

"Come a long way, to-day, I should think?" continued the hunter, who seemed determined to enter into a conversation.

"Yes," he ansewered.

"From beyond the Brazos?" interrogated the inquisitive hunter.

"Yes!" answered the stranger, nervously moving in his seat, as if he wished to settle himself into a quiet sleep.

"Wall, you've had a hot ride over the prarie."

"Yes," and he closed his eyes.

The rest had now grouped around to hear the conversation, and one of them, an old trapper, commenced;

"I've known hotter days nor these, though."

"Guess not," interrupted the stranger, suddenly opening his eyes, as if giving up his intention of sleeping, now there was so much talking.

"But I have," the trapper continued, "but two years ago this month, I was trapping, down on a fork of the Colerado, for beaver. One afternoon, about two o'clock, I skinned twelve of the critters, and left their carcases layin' over a log. When I returned, in two hours, may I be chawed to death by a mink, if they hadn't melted, bones and all, and the grease soaked into the ground."

"Don't doubt it; don't doubt it at all," said the traveller, suddenly recovering from his fit and torpor into which he had seemingly fallen. "It anin't nothing to what has happened to me to day!"

"Eh! what was it?" they exclaimed quickly.

"Well, it's a short story, and if you wish it, I can soon let you know my day's adventure."

"Yes, let us hear it, certainly, they all answered.

"Well," he commenced, "I started about five o'clock this morning, from Ripley, and after pursuing the main track up the Brazos for four miles, I crossed the river, and struck strait across the open prairie. The sun had by this time arisen, and begun to cast its burning rays upon the plain. The heat soon became oppressive, and as I rode along, I thought I had never felt it more. It happened that I had filled the canteen which I always carry when travelling, with cold water from a spring close beside the river, before I attempted to cross the plain, or I should never have held out till I reached a stream some fifteen miles from the Brazos, for before going a mile on my way, my thirst had become intolerable. My canteen was made of tin, and held about three quarts; but before I reached that stream, the water was all gone. Yet, the heat of the day had hardly begun; so after resting for a short time, I took a cool draught from the limpid stream, then filling my canteen again with the pure beverage, I fastened it to the back of my saddle, exposed to the full glare of the sun, and mounting my horse, who was by this time so refreshed that it seemed as if a new spirit had been infused within him, I set off again on my lone road, in the direction of my destination.

The sun had by this time reached the centre of the horizon, and the fierce rays that were poured down upon me, I shall never forget. The prairie had, not long since, been swept over by fire, and the tall grass had given way before the devouring element. I had continued thus riding along leisurely, buried in my own thoughts, without paying attention exactly in which direction he was proceeding, until being startled by the sudden action of my horse; who picked up his ears and commenced trotting a livelier pace in another direction. I looked up, and there, about one hundred rods to the right, were three large wolves, who were busily engaged in tearing the little meat that remained, from the bones of a buffalo. They were large, gaunt, and hungry looking animals, and as I looked up, and turned my horse in a more southerly direction, one of the wolves espied me, and with a fiendish howl, started in pursuit, as likewise did the rest upon seeing the course of their companion's sudden departure.

I had neglected bringing with me any kind of weapon, thinking it needless, as it is very unusual for one of these cowardly creatures to openly attack a man in daylight, but being passed with hunger, and there being more than one of them, they made no hesitation in immediately pursuing me. I longed for my faithful rifle, that I might rid myself of my detestable enemy, but in my carelessness, I had set off on my lonely journey entirly defenceless.

I at once gave spurs to my horse, but he needed nothing but common instinct to acquaint him with the imminent danger he was near. The dust flew in torrents from his iron hoofs, as he thundred over the ground, and the foam flew in flakes from his distended nostrils. Few horses can equal him in a fair race, and well has he acted his part this day. But his speed could not last him long, at the terrible pace he was now going. I plainly saw the voracious wolves now nearly fifty rods distant, come on with a long steady gallop, their hot tongues lolling from their open mouths, exhibiting to my terrified gaze long rows of white, sharp teeth. I knew that if they came up with me all would soon be over, and I again urged my horse to his utmost speed. How far it was to my place of security, I knew not, but I felt certain that there could be none in the immediate vicinity.

Again I cast a glance behind me, and as if to dispel every earthly hope, I discovered that one, the largest and fiercest looking of the animals, was some rods in advance, of the rest. and now not twenty rods from me; his pace was unslacked, and occasionally a short howl would issue from his throat. I in vain endeavored to urge my horse to a faster run, and despair began to seize hold of me. I looked again; with a triumphant yelp the foremost wolf was rapidly coming up, followed by his more tardy companions a short distance in the rear, their savage eyes fixed with a gloating look upon me.

I had for the past few moments been ascending a gentle acclivity, and as I arrived at the summit, I saw, scarce half a mile from me, a large stream. I suddenly became possessed with the idea that if I could only gain the river I should be saved, by rushing in and gaining the opposite shore in advance of them, and I dug the spurs into the flank of my weary steed, up to the rowels, and dashed onward, but one hasty look behind me completely dispelled the hope, for there, not ten paces from me, came my fierce enemy, followed by the others. The perspiration poured from me in a torrent, and the sun cast its burning glare full upon me. I was now within a quarter of a mile of the water, when the wolf who had now gained my side, with jaws extended. and the hot breath issuing from his mouth and nostrils, gave a spring upon me!"

The stranger paused, and covered his face with his hands, as if to shut out from his imagination the horrid sight. His listeners drew a long breath, and with open ears they anxiously awaited the continuation of the narration.

"What next; for heaven's sake. stranger, how did you escape?"

The traveller looked up; a mornful shade was upon his countenance: with a firm, low voice, he proceeded:

"Gentlemen, my horse dashed aside, and that was the saving of my life, for the wolf missed his aim, and my left hand dashed around, hitting the canteen, which was suspended from the saddle, as it did so, and—

"What!" gasped out his heares.

"As I did so," he continued, unmindful of the interruption, "a new thought struck me. In an instant I tore the canteen from its place, where it had been exposed to the rays of that torrid sun, and when, in another moment, the wolf made a second spring at me, I threw the whole of the contents upon him."

"Well!"

"Why, gentlemen, the fact is, the water was boiling hot, and with a howl of agony, the blinded scalded wolf made off in the direction from which he had come, followed by his frightened companions!"

The stranger paused, and with a sorrowful countenance sank back into his seat. Each old hunter and trapper gave an exclamation of astonishment, and rose from their seats and entered the bar-room. The stranger meanwhile proceeded to take an easy nap undisturbed by the voice of any inquisitive person, and although he tarried for three days at that hospitable inn, yet when he departed, he found his account all settled, and was urged to call if he ever had occasion to pass that way again.

Improving Grass Lands.

The following is a valuable statement respecting raising of grass, which is taken from an agricultural journal, and is attributed to an old experiencee practical farmer:

"I will take an old piece of herdsgrass, that at present yields less than half a ton of hay per acre; and at the end of five years, without breaking up, fresh seeding, or manuring in any way whrtever, I will raise the crop to two and a half tons per acre; and this I will do by merely permitting the crop to stand and vegetate before cutting. By mowing the crop sooner than that, the roots bleed and die out, and that is the reason why a second crop does not spring for a long time after I once purchased a fifth part of a crop of timothy on one of the Islands of the Delaware, with the intention of cutting my lot at the same time the other four purchasers cut theirs; but I was called from home, and it was not done untill the seeds would vegetate. I thought my hay was spoiled, but it was preferred to that of all others for hor se feed; and behold! the next year my lot of land yielded double the crop of the others, and at the end of five years, it had increased to two and a half tons per acre, having overgrown all others' grasses—a uniform crop five fleet in height, and preferred before all other at the market. Since that I have never cut timothy until the seeds just vegetate; I will take a poor field that shows only a few spears of timothy growing in it, and by these simple means, engage in five years to cut two and a half tons of superior hay to the acre provided the land be suitable to the growth of the crop.

Honorable Employment.

Let the young man remember, there is nothing derogatory in any employment which ministers to the well-being of the race. It is the spirit that is carried into an employment that elevates or degrades it. The ploughman that turns the clod may be a Cincinnatus or a Washington, or he may be brother to the clod he turns. It is every way creditable to handle the yard-stick and to measure tape; the only discredit consists in having a soul whose range of thoughts is as short as the stick, and as narrow as the tape. There is no glory in the act of affixing a signatnre by which the treasures of commerce are transferred, or treaties between nations are ratified; the glory consists in the rectitude of the purpose that approves the one, and the grandeur of the philanthropy that sanctifies the other. The time is soon coming, when, by the common consent of mankind, it will be esteemed more honorable to have been John Pounds, putting new and beautiful souls into the ragged children of the neighborhood, while he mended their fathers shoes, than to have sot on the British throne. The time now is, when, if queen Victoria, in one of her magnificent "Progresses" through her realms, were to meet that more than American queen, Miss Dix, in her "circumnavigation of charity" among the insane, the former should kneel and kiss the hand of the latter; and the ruler over a hundred millions of people should pay homage to the angel whom God has sent to the maniac.—Horace Mann.

A HUNDRED YEARS AGO.—A hundred yrars ago, a stupid German monarch reigned over these United States—then colonies of Great Britain—and on the whole earth, with the exception of Switzerland, there was not a republic of any pretensions. A hundred years ago, the French lilies floated over Quebec, Pittsburg, and New Orleans. A hundred years ago, the old French monarchy existed—the Bastile reared its accursed towers—and Louis the XV. dallied with infamous wantons, squandered his subjects' money and blasphemed in his own person the name of man. Fifty years ago, the name of Napoleon was still comparatively unknown. Fifty years ago, cotton mills had, as it were, just invented, and rail roads, locomotives, and magnetic telegraphs were practically unknown. Fifty years ago, there were scarcely five millions of people in the United States, and Ohio was almost as much of a wilderness as Oregon is now. Fifty years ago, Washington had just died, Jefferson was still living, and Clay, Webster, and Calhoun were names as yet unknown to fame.

FRIGHTENED BY A COMET.—A. D. 1712, Whiston predicted that the comet would appear on Wednesday, 14th October at 5 minutes after 6 in the morning, and that the world would be destroyed by fire the Friday following. His reputation was high and the comet appeared. A number of persons got into boats and barks on the thame, thinking the water the safest placd. South Sea and Indian stock fell. A captain of a Dutch ship threw all his powder into tue sea that the ship might not be endangered. At noon after the comet had appeared, it is said that more than one hundred clergymen were ferried over to Lombreth, to request that proper prayers might be prepared there being none in the church service. People believed that the day of judgment was at hand, and acted on this belief, more as if some great temporary evil was to be expected. There was a prodigious run on the bank, and Sir Gilbert Heathcote, as the head director issued orders to all the fire officers in London, requiring them to keep a good lookout, and have a particular eye upon the Bank of England.—Southey's Common place Book.

HIT AT BARNUM.—The wags will never let the great Barnum alone. We see a paragraph going the rounds, in which it is stated that he has picked up, in his travels, a small pot of tar, supposed to have been left wher the Israelites pitched their tents.—N. O. Picayune.

"MERRY" INDEED.—In Great Britain there are only 103, 839 persons whose income is over $750 a year, while the number of paupers is fifteen hundred thousand. "Merry England!"

The Fundamental Principles of Justice and Truth Considered—The Pulpit and the Press.

Although we may not give light to those who already possess it, yet still, seeing so many who do not appear to possess a correct knowledge of these principles, and believing it important to their social well being, and seeing so much that we conceive to be erroneous, false, wicked; so much that is directly opposed to the best intererests of man, to his progress in knowledge, liberty and happiness, we cannot refain from expressing an opinion, from attempting to discuss a subject so vastly important to the well being of our fellow man.

Therefore that these objects may be promoted, that justice and Truth, Knowledge and Liberty may universally prevail, we must first ascertain in what they consist, or rather, the fundamental basis upon which they rest; which having found, shall be laid down as a guide, that all knowing the right may the right pursue.

Now many may be ready to contend that we already possess such a guide; that in the doctrines and precepts of the Bible man will find all that is necessary to guide him through this life, and to prepare him for it, if per chance there is another.—But is this so; does it infalliably teach all that it is necessary for man to know, unmixed with error? Is there not imperfections in it, error commingled with truth, which prevents its universal adoption as the guide to Truth and Life and which it is therefore important should be seperated therefrom? Truth is absolute, eternal; the same yesterday, to-day and forever, therefore does not fear investigation or discussion. Therefore let us test this matter; let us open this book and see what it does teach; or step into the churches and listen to those who are already prepared by study to give us instruction therein. What do we find or what does he say whose instruction we have sought? Well, on this page we are taught—we quote from memory—that, "He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved; he that believeth not shall be dammed!" On that page it says: "God will have all men to be saved and come unto a knowledge of the truth."—Again on this; "God will have mercy on whom he will have mercy and whom he will he hardeneth!" On that; "Every man shall be rewarded (saved) according to his deeds:" for, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these little ones ye have done it unto me—ye shall inherit eternal life." And, "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of these ye did it not unto me—depart from me ye cursed into everlasting punishment"

Thus it will be perceived that in one place it teaches not only that his temporal welfare and happiness but that eternal salvation comes of belief, or faith, and the performance of a certain ordinance; in another, that it is by the knowledge of the truth; in another, that it is by the will of God; in yet another, that it is by his (man's) works. However, whether it so teaches or is so taught is immaterial, as we have abundant unimpeachable evidence that it is so understood, by the existence of the various sects; all of whom, and each for itself, believing that their eternal salvation depends upon the correctness of their belief. Being thus proven by such a mass of disinterested evidence, by evidence which is interested in the very converse of the proposition, to be untrue or insufficient, to be a mixture of truth and error, we must seek some other, some more certain and less fallible guide than because the Bible says so; it must be ABSOLUTE TRUTH, independent of the Bible, intuitive, self evident, or it cannot stand; some principle that shall be independent of all books, creeds, sects or parties of men; one in which all the nations of the earth shall agree, or else shall we in vain hope to ever unite them to accomplish their universal emancipation from ignorance, degradation, miscry, slavery and sin. That there is such a principle, a fundamental principle in nature, upon, by and through which all can unite for the accomplishment of this grand object, who can doubt? But that the Bible teaches this principle, independent of error, is an assumption too bold for any to attempt to defend.

No man, we think, can or will deny, being unable to disprove, that there is implanted in the mind of every man, by and in conformity with the laws of nature, which are also the laws of his being, an infalliable and all-sufficient guide to judge of wright and wrong, truth or falsehood. This law of natnre is universal, everywere the same, pervades all things, all things being part and parcel of it, and as it is constantly working impressions on the mind of man it becomes his unerring guide and protector, and has ever led him aright when he pays attention to its dictates; but whenever men have forsaken this guide they have been tossed about like a ship on the ocean without compass, chart or pilot; and in attempting to make faith—"the evidence of things not seen, the substance of things hoped for—" their guide, have been shipwrecked upon the quicksands of superstition and error.

Nature ever acts by IMMUTABLE LAWS. Man, like all things else, is subject to those laws; and he knows by his experience, through this teacher, that whatever is a law of nature to-day, ever has been and ever will be; and therefore, the laws of nature being immutable, whatever they teach must be true. The truth of this proposition is proved by the confidence man places in them; it has thus become a universal axiom. All assertion to the contrary, backed by all the testimony in the world, is constantly refuted by his experience, by mens acting unhesitatingly in accordance with them.

It will be perceived from the above that this immutable law not only governs or pervades the physical but also the moral universe. Man, both in his physical and moral nature, in common with all things in nature, is subject to this immutable law, is part and parcel of it, and hence independent of time, place or person, he deduces from it, for the government of the moral universe, that fundamental principle of right and wrong; "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you do ye even so to them." It thus intuitively follows, as Christ taught, that "this is the fulfilling of the Law and the Prophets."

This principle, being coexistent with man on the earth, being deducible from nature's immutable law, thus becomes an absolute principle, a fundamental law, or guide, which always has existed independent of any person, place or book; yesterday, to-day and forever the same; it thus becomes an unerring guide to judge of right and wrong, truth and falsehood; it is thus shown to be the only basis of all true religion and of all just civil government; being the only test of Truth, the only assertor of Liberty. All men, aside from the selfishness of sect or party, whether Christians, Pagans, Mahomedans, Jews or Infidels, or any of the political or religious parties into which these may be subdivided, will candidly acknowledge this. This being the case, we can readily perceive why the minds of men have been distracted. Instead of following the immutable laws of nature in the moral as in the physical world, they have FORSAKEN THE TEACHINGS OF THIS UNERRING GUIDE, and become shipwrecked upon the quicksands of superstition and error. Instead of granting to man his inalienable rights—which like water flowing in obedience thereto, is deducible from this immutable law,—the right to life, to the means whereby he may live, a portion of the earth; instead of granting him his personal freedom, instead of giving him knowledge to enlighten his mind, that he may become a MAN and bear some faint resemblance to the likeness of Him by whom he was created, the REASON he is endowed with by observing the effects or teachings of the immutable laws of nature, around about and within him, has been perverted. He has been taught to believe that the devil created;—no, that can't be, for the devil didn't create anything—but, that God endowed man with REASON that he (the devil) might delude his soul! Beginning at the cradle, man has been taught by the crafty and designing, by the idle and corrupt priests and kings of the earth, that this ignus fatus, which has no existence but in the imaginations of fools, this idle bugbear of priest craft, this bug-a-boo of the nursery, this theological devil has power giv him, and that too by God! to delude and destroy his most perfect work, the bodies and souls of men!

Thus alas! has it ever been; instead of following the dictates of reason and common sense; instead of teaching man through those axioms or self evident truths of nature's immutable laws, FACTS, TRUTHS deducible therefrom, the pulpit and the press has but too often lent their powerful influence to delude, degrade, oppress and enslave him. Instead of being the faithful guardians, protectors and defenders of man's rights they have but too often been their greatest and most bitter enemy. Instead of teaching that men are brothers, that their rights are equal and inalienable, that pure democracy and genuine religion alone consists in doing unto others as they would have others do to them, they have, from its first utterance on earth, denounced the doctrine as blashhemy, and stigmatised as seditious persons and infidels those who have taught it; prefering thereto the dogmas of party and sect, the doctrines and commandments of men!

How often, being blinded by the god of this world, pride and self interest, seeking solely their own aggrandizement—which is the basis of party democracy and sectarian religion--do they teach, (too notoriously, through all time, has this been made the pretext, the instrument of oppression; even in this boasted enlightened age has sectarian and tyranical priests taught it) that "The powers that be—whether good or bad—are ordained of God!" If there is or can be a precept or doctrine taught that is blasphemous, this doctrine, which is subversive of every principle of justice and truth, of the inalienable rights of man, must be so. This doctrine bears unmistakable evidence in itself that it was invented by the priests and kings of the earth to sustain them in their tyranny over their fellow men. This doctrine was intended to delude, degrade, oppress and enslave the bodies and minds of men, which no docorine ever does that is deduced from nature's immutable laws; and, being contrary to the spirit, it cannot therefore be the law of God. It is not only directly opposed to this immutable law, but to that deduction of it which it is said Christ made and taught, and therefore to the fundamental principles of Liberty, Justice and Truth. Yet this doctrine, although scorned and contemned with an intense hatred by our forefathers, has recently been advocated by sectarian priests, and reiterated by a corrupt party press, as the law and will of God! Our forefathers declared that ALL men were INALIENABLY ENDOWED with LIBERTY by their CREATOR. That Liberty, the inalienable right, being the free gift of God to man, might be enjoyed, was this government established. For the rectitude of their intentions in establishing the government for this purpose did our forefathers appeal to God. For this purpose did they pledge their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor. Tyrants would reverse this fundamental principle of Democracy, of Truth, of Justice, and declare that Slavery, although in express violation of these principles, of the fundamental principles of our government, of religion, was established by the law and will of God!

This doctrine, the offspring of tyrants, of corrupt teachers of a corrupted religion and of a spurious democracy, if persisted in in this enlightened age, will rather tend to hasten than to retard the emancipation of man from bondage. Let a corrupt priesthood therefore continue to teach it and let a corrupt government through its ambitious satillites continue to send freemen back into Slavery; for, by this plan will they most certainly and effectually hasten the emancipation from bondage of the whole human race.

The Pulpit and the Press are most powerful levers for good or evil. That they have accomplished much good no man can question. That they have not accomplished more, in our humble opinion, is, because of their sectaran and party tendencies; because of the bigotry and intoleranee of the sects and parties by whom they have been filled and to whom they are made subservient. So long as the pulpit is filled or the press conducted by men who are slaves to a creed or the dogmas of a party, so long as they are restricted to teach that all that there is of righteousness justice and truth is circumscribed within the narrow bounds of their sect or party, just so long will the true aim and end of man's being remain unaccomplished; just so long must he wander on through the mists of ignorance error and sin.

It must be evident to all that the pulpit as well as the press, and wholly through these causes, has wandered wide of promoting the best therefore the true interests of man. Instead of endeavoring to promote their united universal welfare, they have edeavored, by the sacrifice of the interests of the mass, at the expense and to the detriment of the good of the whole, to advance the interests of the few, to aid sects and parties; rather seeking through their aggrandizement to aggrandize themselves; thus has knowledge, justice and truth been trampled under foot of men. This, certainly, at times, when hearing creeds advocated as religion, especially when not their own, cannot have escaped the notice of the most thoughtless and superficial observer. Yet, when the thought is suggested of the worse than folly, the wickedness of such a course, present advantage or profound ignorance has blinded its advocate to its ultimate evil effects. Such, we think, will all observant and candid men acknowledge to be the great source of ignorance, error. oppression, misery and sin.

To counteract and abolish these evils is the desire of every good man; and is the special duty and legitimate businesr, as we conceive, of the pulpit and the press. Therefore, reader, if you believe that religion consists in what Christ made it to consist, and not in idle forms and ceremonies, the observance of feast days and fast days, nor yet in the sanctimonious observance of the sabbath or the enlarging the borders of thy phylacteries, all of which he denounced, but rather in observing the precept which his example as well as words taught, of doing unto others as you would, under like circumstances, that they should do to you; if you believe that pure religion alone consists in being good and in doing good to your fellow men; then you cannot fail to perceive that civil and religious liberty, which is so intimately and indissolubly connected must also be based upon the same fundamental principle of absolute Truth. Therefore, reader, if you wish to see, if you wish to feel, that all men are free, that they are brothers; if you wish them to possess such democracy and such religion; and if you fill the important and responsible position of teacher, either from the pulpit or the press, then indeed is yours a noble task to brush away the cobwebs of superstition and ignorance, to banish bigotry, intolerance and oppression. Let it be your first, your last, and in this character your whole duty, to dispel ignorance, to raise up and sustain the oppressed by instructing and enlightening their minds, diffusing knowledge from the least unto the greatest, that all men may know and enjoy the truth and their rights. Or, should you occupy a different porsition from either of these; should you perchance be a mechanic, merchant or farmer, of whatever other position you may fill, you will still find in so glorious a cause abundant opportunities to turn to profit the talent committed to your care.

☞ The editor of the Plainfield Union, in the last number of his paper, adds another proof to the many he has already given, that he esteems the dogmas of party and sect of more value to the world than Truth; as it can hardly be possible that he fears truth will suffer from investigation. Were this not so, the insignificance of our position might easily be shown to belong to the "insignificance of the accuser."

It may be more congenial to that spirit of Christianity, which he has given us the evidence he possesser, to denounce than to convince, to call it infidel and ourselves the "Great apostle of Infidelity" than to prove to his readers that we are in error. Now this, we would inform our neighbor, does neither injure nor offend us, knowing that better men than we are have been denounced for teaching what they believed to be Truth. Denunciation we know will not deter a thinking man from searching after truth; and were men generally as tenacious of truth as they are of sectarian dogmas their experience of the want of it would not now be so sensibly nor so sadly felt.

☞ The attention of our merchants and consumers is called to the advertisement of J. H. Schoonmaker, in another column. The superior quuality of the Crackers and Biscuit manufactured by Mr. S. are universally acknowledged by those who have used them. Merchants would undoubtedly find it to their advantage to keep an assortment on hand.

☞ Mr. J. B. Miller, 134 Canal-st New York, respectfully invites the Ladies of Plainfield who may visit the city, if in want of Gaiter Boots, Shoes, Slippers &c, to visit his establishment. He has a very large and splendid assortment which he will sell at reasonable prices and warant good. His advertisement will be found in another column.

☞ We would call public attention to an advertisement in another column headed "Emigrant Intelligence office. and Labor Exchange." As it is often found difficult to procure Help it will undoubtedly be of advantage to know that it can there be had on the instant that application is made.

Democracy.

It must be conceded by every intelligent political economist that Democracy is the only true form of Government; the only form of government that can be enduring. A government based on any other principles, must sooner or later end in anarchy and confusion. Democracracy exists in this in two forms; direct and representative, or indirect. The first is when the people are their own representatives, as at our Town Meetings, and the second when they choose others to represent them, as our State and National Legislatures. The nearer circumstances will allow us to approach the first of these, the more independent and happy we shall be, and the more secure will be our rights, for "it is the best government that governs least," or in other words, to carry it out in its fullest sense, "it is the happiest and best government where the people govern themselves." It is not to be supposed however that we can attain this exalted position, in the present state of society. The public mind we admit is not sufficiently enlightened, nor is the morals of the community sufficiently sound; but these are not sufficient reasons why we should not be progressing; it is our duty to be pressing towards this great desideratum. There are many reforms which ought to be carried out, and it is the duty of the people to see that they are carried out, and not allow any man to be placed on the ticket, for the State or National Legislatures, who will not pledge himself to carry them out. This is the only true method for the people to obtain and maintain their rights—rights that were transmitted to them by their illustrious sires—rights that were purchased by the toil, pain, sweat, and blood of the most patriotic men that ever lived—rights which it is our duty to transmit to our posterity, unspotted and unimpared. If we pursue this course, we have done our duty. If we do not, we shall render ourselves unworthy to be called the progeny of those great men, whom God raised up for the liberation of a down-trodden and oppressed people.—Middletown Banner.

Force of Waves.

It is dificult to conceive of the immense force which is exerted by the waves of the sea, when driven on by a strong wind. The late catastrophe at Minot's Rock, gives us some idea of this tremendous power, and shows us how feeble are the strong works of man when opposed to the fury of this element. At the last meeting of the British Association, Thomas Stevenson, civil engineer, gave the results of his observations on the force of the waves, made by means of the marine dynometer.

The greatest result registered in the Atlantic Ocean, was at Skerryvore Lighthouse, during a westerly gale of the 29th of March, 1845, when the force was 6,093 lbs. or three tons per square foot. The greatest result registered in the German Ocean was 3,013 lbs. or about one and a half tons per square foot. On the 20th of November 1827, in a heavy ground swell after a storm, solid water rose at the Bell Rock Lighthouse 106 feet above the level of the sea, irrrespective of the depth of the trough of the wave. Such an elevation is due to a head of water of the same height. The force then, which urges the lower courses of Bell Rock must have been nearly three tons the square foot, a force which, when exerted upon a large extent of surface becomes almost inconceivably great.

The editor of the Gazette said that he coincided with Christ in a certain "great moral truth" which he says the latter taught. I simply asked him how he found out that Christ taught that same truth—since he rejects as spurious the only book from which the information could have been derived. Is the question intelligible, or not?—"Quis."

We rather think "Quis" must have been cautioned by the editor of the Union not to argue the question; seeing that it was a difficult matter to make "divine truth," until they can be shown to be "moral truths," out of the contradictions and absurdities, which we have shown does exist in the "very word of God." Therefore, as he has not attempted this, neither in his first communication, in which he alludes to them, nor yet in this, we have simply to reply to the question reiterated in the above, which in the wonders he did give we had overlooked. In answer to his query we would say: The "great moral truths" we spoke of are independent of any words of Christ; therefore it is immaterial to us, as it is to their truth, whether he taught them or not; that being independent of any particular book, person or place; they do not therefore belong exclusively to the Bible, or to Christ. The errors, absurdities and contradictions which we find in all books which pretend to claim authority from God, conclusively prove that such part of them at least could not have been authorised by God. For instance, 2 Chron. 36: 22, 23.—Ezra 1: 1, 2, 3. the first ending, both verse and chapter, "let him go up," (up where?) prove that the words in the Bible, like all other books, were uttered, written, printed and entitled by man; therfore liable to error. No thinking man will accept blunders like the above as authority from God; and, as we have elsewhere said, they prove that some prefer the dogmas of sect to the truth. For a further answer to his question, although written before his reply, we would refer "Quis" to remarks in another column, entitled, "The Fundamental Principles of Justice and Truth Considered."

The Perils of the Lungs.

These delicate organs are always in peril, and life is in peril when they do not properly perform their functions. If inflammation interferes with their regular action, the blood is imperfectly purified, the circulation is irregular, and the whole system suffers. In the combined tonic, expectorant, and healing properties of Dr. Rogers' Syrup of Liverwort, Tar, and Canchalagua, lies the remedy for all this mischief. DELAY IS DANGEROUS. While the patient is considering tubercles may be forming, or worse still, may be bursting in the Lungs. But if this remedy by promptly applied, the Coub, Cold, or Catarrah is at once removed, and to use the word of Daniel Webster, the sufferer "breathes freer and deeper." The only thing required is promptitude. See pamplet in the hands of Agents, and advertisement in another column.

THE
FOR MACHINISTS, MECHANICS, AND ENGINEERS,

BY OLIVER BYRNE,

Editor of the Dictionary of Machines and Mechanics, &c., Professor of Mathematics in the College of Civil Engineers, London, &c.

Pocket Form, Tucks, Gilt Edges. Price $1.

DEWITT & DAVENHORT, PUBLISHERS,
Tribune Buildings New York,

THE Publishers have spared no exertion or expense to make this compendium everything that it purports to be. In order to effect this they engaged the services of OLIVER BYRNE, celebrated in Europe as the author of a large number of the best scientific works in the language, and already favorably known here as the author of the Dictionary of Mechanics and Engineering.

It has been the author's endeavor to make the work eminently practical, and to condense the most information into the least possible space; and, after a careful examination, we do not hesitate to say that it is, in our opinion, infinitely superior to any Treatise of the kind now in use, and one that should be in the hands not only of the mechanic and working man but of every person desirous of much information, in a small compass, on almost every useful subject. We find no long columns of figures of no use except to encumber the book, but in place of this, Tables are used, as far as necessary, by which the reader is taught how to produce the necessary results himself.

It would far exceed our limits to give even an idea of all it contains.

Many very useful things will be found in it which are peculiarly the author's, and not to be met with in any other treatise of the kind. We can mention only a few. In the first place the work is embellished with three Steel Engravings of Steam Engines,—the Stationary, Locomotive, and Ship Engine, in the very best style of Engraving, all the parts of which are accurately pointed out and explained by numbers, so that any persons perfectly ignorant of their use would be able to learn how to manage one.

ALSO

An ALMANAC FOR ALL TIME, a very useful as well as curious arrangement, peculiarly the author's.

A UNIVERSAL THERMOMETER, showing the sensible heat of many substances according to the three most approved Thermometers. By inspection the degrees of one of these thermometric scales are converted into degrees of either of the others. This has been got up at great expense, and is only to be found in this book.

How Logarithms are applied to facilitate the calculations of the Mechanic, Machinist, and Engineer.

The most accurate Planetary Tables.
Tonnage of Ships.
The Thickness of Water Pipes of Iron, Cast Iron, Copper, Lead, &c.
Dilatation of Solids by Heat.
Wind and Windmills—pressure of the wind moving at given velocities.
The Weights of different countries compared.
Torsion, Twisting, and Cohesive powers of Bodies.
Alloys and Compounds.
The Retardation of Railway Trains.
Mechanical Powers.
Wheels, Drums, and Pulleys.
Gearing, and the teeth of wheels.
Dimensions of Wheels in actual use.
Moduli of Elasticity. &c.

The index to the book is very copious and well arranged and to that we refer the reader for a further synopsis of its contents.

Newark, April 3d, 1851. H. EILS.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels; such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt.

RUPTURES, are always to be treated with the surgical instruments known as Trusses and Supporters, and these require to be skillfully applied. With this view, the HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE, now established some thirty years, has under the various managers, presented to the public both male and female attendants to apply its instruments directly to the persons, which is preferable in all cases, and has also made improvement at different times, showing that advancement which study and practice only yield toward the relief of this malady.

With much pleasure the fact is now published, that recent improvements BUTLER'S TRUSS PADS have been made, and sufficiently tested upon numerous cases to warrant, through the cures already affected, their submission to the public, as being in adaptation and efficiency superior to any heretofore made known.

These improvements, recently patented, are now being applied at this office, 4 Vesey street, in cases of rupture, gravitation of the bowels, prolapsus uteri, prolapsus ani and piles.

The public may rely upon that care being made in their application, which will most likely tend to the final cure of the several complaints.

Hull's Truss Office, 4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St. Paul's Church, New-York.

FRED'K M BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The ladies' department is attended by a female qualified to fit the instruments, having so attended this office for many years.

Children trussed when only two weeks old, and invariably cured. [145is.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S

TRICOPHEROUS,

or Medicated Compound.

INFALLIBLE for renewing, invigorating, and beautifying the HAIR, removing the scurf, dandruff, and all affections of the scalp; and curing eruptions on the skin, diseases of the glands, muscles and integuments, and releieving stings, cuts, bruises, sprains, &c. With this preperation "there is no such word as fail." The first journals in America, medical men of the highest eminence, prominent citizens of all professions, and ladies who have used it for years in their dressing rooms and nurseries, admit with one accord, that for imparting vigor, gloss, luxurience and curl to the hair, eradicating scurf and dandruff, healing wounds, curing contusions, sprains, stings, &c., and relieving diseases of the skin, the glands and the muscles, it has no equal, among the multitude of compounds advertised in the public prints, or used in private practice. In cheapness as well as efficacy, Barry's Tricopherous is unrivalled. The immense cash sales of the article have enabled the Inventor to supply it at retail, at 25 cents per bottle, which is from 50 to 100 per cent. less than the price of any other preperation for the hair now in use. The scientific treatise on the hair and the skin, (embracing valuable directions for the culture and preservation of Natuie's choicest ornament,) in which each bottle is enclosed, is alone worth the money.

The affinity between the membranes which constitute the skin, and the hair which draws its sustenance from this triple envelope is very close. All diseases of the hair originate in the skin oi the head. If the pores of the scalp are clogged, or if the blood and other fluids do not circulate freely through the small vessels which feed the root with moisture, and impart life to the fibres, the result is scurf, dandruff, shedding of the hair, graveness, dryness and harshness of the ligaments, and entire baldness, as the case may be. Stimulate the skin to healthful action with the Tricopherous, and the torpid vessels, recovering their activity, will anihilate the disease. In all affections of the skin, and of the substrata of muscles and integuments, the process and the effect are the same.—It is upon the skin, the muscular fibre, and the glands, that the Tricopherous has its specific action, and in all affections and injury of these organs, it is a sovereign remedy.

DELANO'S

PATENT INDEPENDENT HORSERAKE,

In the Counties of Somerset, Middlesex, Essex, Hudson, Bergen and Passaic, and will have them ready ready by the 1st of May.

This Rake was patented by Calvin Delano, of East Livermore, Maine, Feb. 27.1649. It is fitted to the hind wheels of a Single Horse Wagon, and attended by a man or boy who can RIDE AND RAKE, and manage the horse with ease and certainty.

Each Tooth acts separately and independently, its head being suspended on a rod or hinge over the Axletree, one Tooth being attached to each head. It is equally applicable to ROUGH AND SMOOTH LAND, and applies with equal pressure on each kind of surface.

Premiums and Diplomas were awarded it in the Fall of 1847 and 1848, by the Kennebec and Franklin Counties Agricultural Societies. Its utility has been tested by more than 100 Farmers in the State of Maine, who have certified to its superiority over all other Horse Rakes.

Francis F. Haines of East Livermore, authorized by the Patentee, will dispose of the Patent Right, within and for the States of New-Jersey and Pennsylvania, by Counties or Towns on very liberal terms.

☞ All infringements on the Patent Right of the above Invention will be prosecuted, without favor, to final judgment. CALVIN DELANO, Patentee.

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

Among the numerous discoveries Science has made in this generation to facilitate the business of life—increase its enjoyment, and even prolong the term of human existence, none can be named of more real value to mankind, than this contribution of Chemistry to the Healing Art. A vast trial of its virtues throughout this broad country, has proven beyond a doubt, that no medicine or combination of medicine yet known, can so surely control and cure the numerous varieties of pulmonary disease which have hitherto swept from our midst thousands and thousands every year. Indeed, there is now abundant reason to believe a Remedy has at length been found which can be relied on to cure the most dangerous affections of the lungs. Our space here will not permit us to publish any proportion of the cures affected by its use, but we would present the following opinions of eminent men, and refer further enquiry to the circular which the Agent below named, will always be pleased to furnish free wherein are full particlars, and indisputable proof of these facts.

From the President of Amherst College, the celebrated PROFESSOR HITCHCOCK.

"James C. Ayer—Sir: I have used your CHERRY PECTORAL in my own case of deep-seated Bronchitis, and am satisfied from its chemical constitution, that it is an admirable compound for the relief of laryngial and bronchial difficulties. If my opinion as to its superior character can be of any service, you are at liberty to use it as you think proper.

EDWARD HITCHCOCK, L. L. D.,
From the widely celebrated

PROFESSOR SILLIMAN, M. D., L. L. D., Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, &c., Yale College, Memqee of the Lit, Hist. Med. Phil. and Scientific Societies of America and Europe.

"I deem the CHERRY PECTORAL an admirable composition from some of the best articles in the Materia Medica, and a very effective remedy for the class of diseases it is intended to cure."

New Haven, Ct., Nov. 1 1849.

MAJOR PATTISON, President of the S. C. Senate, states he has used the CHERRY PECTORAL with wonderful success, to and inflammation of the lungs.

From one of the first Physicans in Maine.

SACO, Me., April 26, 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell. Dear Sir: I am now constantly using your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, and prefer it to any other medicine for pulmonary complaints. From observation of many severe cases, I am convinced it will cure coughs, colds, and diseases of the lungs, that have put to defianice all other remedies.

I invariably reccommend its use in cases of consumption, and consider it much the best remedy known for that disease.

Respectfully yours, I. S. CUSHMAN, M. D.

MECHANICAL MEDICINE.

Dr. Banning, formerly of this city, asks to announce that he has returned to 341 Broadway; for consultation and management of weakneses of the vocal, pulmonary, digestive, nervous, spinal and female systems; and also of the drooping, languor and physical deformities, which are so destructive of both health and beauty at the present day.

As these and kindred maladies are usually the result of a violation of the laws of physical organization, he will treat them chiefly by those exercises, mechanical appliances and reformatory habits of body, in coujunction with hydropathy galvanism and other discoveries of the day, which, united with the cooperative efforts of the subject, are calculated to relieve and restore the energies of the suffering and neglected organs.

Having spent several years in traveling for investigation and practical experiment on the subject, he has, at length, greatly improved and multiplied his surgical and mechanical appliances for the purpose. In addition to his new supports for female and spinal weaknesses, are some combining the properties of a universal hernial truss and an effective general support, with which he challenges cases of general debility, constipation, piles and prolapsus, ani, lencorrhea, prolapsus uteri and every variety of hernia.

The distinctive peculiarity of these devices is, that they do not weaken or restrain the motions or growth of the suffering parts, but act imitatively and conconcordantly with the mathematical genius of the body's forces. Hence, by a most comfortable and gentle pressure, they at once give great support and render the oppressed system eligible to its own restoration.

Feeble invalids coming from a distance will command prompt and faithful attention.

For more definite information, see his revised edition of "Animal Mechanics," and also his circular, which will be sent gratuitously when requested.

His improved body-braces, spinal supports and supporter trusses applied at his office (341 Broadway) and to be had wholesale and retail. City and country physicians and druggists are invited to call and examine Office hours from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. [121.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impetency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cerdial cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without offspring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co., of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper.

WONDERFUL CURES!

AND

CANCHALAGUA;

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to

CONSUMPTION.

NO OPIUM.

This syrup contains no Opium, Calomel, or any mineral whatever, but is composed entirely of those Roots, Herbs, and vegetable substances which have a specific influence upon the Lungs, and their connected organs. Its immediate effect is to allay all irritation, and gently remove the phlegm and other morbid secretions from the Throat and Air-Passages; thus relieving the Cough, by subduing the inflammation and other causes which give rise to it. It also stimulates and imparts a healthy tone to the lungs themselves, thereby enabling them more thoroughly to remove from the blood those impurities and diseased particles, which, if retained, do so much mischief in the system, and lay the foundation for incurable CONSUMPTION. It also exerts a decided action upon the skin, and assists nature in expelling, through the Exhalents, much of that morbid matter which would otherwise be thrown back upon the Lungs, thus relieving them of a part of their work, and rendering the system pure and healthy. When tubercles are forming, it checks their development and further progress; or if ulceration has taken place, it asssists the Lungs in throwing off the corrupted matter, soothes the irritation, heals the ulcerated cavities, and restores them again to healthy action This Medicine, therefore, is not a palliative merely, which only relieves for the time being, but is a thorough curative, as it strikes at the very root of the disease, and by removing it, removes at once all its remote and attendant consequences This is its distinguishing characteristic—a property possessed, in equal power, by no other medicine of like nature, now before the public.

CIRCULARS, &c

As no ordinary-sized advertisement can fully explain the nature and merits of this article the Proprietors have published a new Circular, giving the history of this Medicine; the description, nature &c. of its principal ingredients; the effect they are designed to have upon the Lungs and Liver, and a copious reference to the persons who have been cured by it—giving their names and residences, even to the street and the number. Those who are troubled with a Cough, or whose Lungs are in the least affected, are earnestly desired to call upon the Agents named below, and procure one of these Pamphlets. It can be had gratis, and will well repay a perusal The "Hints on Health," and "About taking Cold," may be worth to yourself and family,

WARRANTY.

Such is our confidence in its virtues, that we are willing to warrant this Medicine in every case of recent Cold, (where used according to the Directions on page 7th of the pamphlet, inside the wrapper of each bottle,) and where the person is not satisfied that he is deriving benefit from it, by returning the bottle within 24 hours' time,

D. BULLMAN.

Plainfield, March 15, 1851. 1210.

Both Sides of the Picture.

"Is the boy sick?" asked Mr. Lindley, with a look of anxiety and alarm, as he entered the room, and saw his young and beautiful wife sitting by the side of her sleeping infant, weeping most bitterly. "Is the boy sick?"

"No," answered the affected lady, "he is quite well."

"Then what is the matter, my dear Emily? what occasions this flood of tears?" Mr. Lindley seated himself beside his wife, and took her hand while speaking.

"I am worn out with this perpetual confinement," answered Mrs. Lindley: "this unvarying round of dull domestic care."

"Perpetual confinement, my dear?" said Mr. Lindley; "did you not spend yesterday with your mother; and take a drive into the country the day before? Come, dearest, dry up your tears, and listen to an interesting book I have brought home with me, purposely to read aloud to you."

"Your book would be but a poor substitute for society." said Mrs. Lindley, who still sat with her head inclined, looking the very picture of sorrow and discontent: "I am suffering for society—suffering to mingle again with the world, as I used to do." After a momentary pause, she continued—"Sophia was in just now, dressed so beautifully:—on her way to Whitewell's party All the world will be there—poor I excepted!" A fresh gush of tears called anew for the use of her 'kerchief.

"Young ladies have little else to do than to attend parties," said Mr. Lindley; "we happily, have better engagements, and more precious pleasures."

"Married ladies seem no more confined than single ones," said Mrs. Lindley, who seemed to have heard only the first part of her husband's remarks. "Mrs Bank and Mrs. Southwell, and indeed all of my friends, are to be at Mr. Whitewell's to-night. No one but myself is in bondage. Every one besides can have a nursery maid, and all else that is necessary to make them comfortable and happy."

"I am sorry that we cannnot have a nursery maid, since you think it would conduce to your happiness: though, for my own part, I would rather that my dear Emily should have the charge of our darling boy than entrust him to the care of any hireling that could be found."

Again the first part only of what Mr. Lindley said seemed to meet the ear of his wife. Her voice was never harsh—never loud—but it certainly did not sound sweetly, as in a kind of low guttural she replied:—"Some gentleman choose to think they can afford but very little to make a wife happy."

Mr Lindley dropped the hand he had till then held in his, and rising, walked the floor rapidly. He did not whistle—he did not sing—but he just made the notes of a tune audible, as he inhaled and exhaled the air between his scarcely parted lips. After some ten of fifteen minutes spent in this manner, he suddenly seized the volumes he had mentioned, and seating himself near the lamp began to turn the leaves. Meanwhile Mrs. Lindley neither spoke nor moved. Her head rested on her hand, and her eyes sought the carpet, but no tear fell, for her feelings were too highly excited to permit them longer to flow. The disturbed husband found his book a vain resource; and after twirling, the leaves a few minutes, he threw it on the table, and left the room. The next moment his wife heard the street door close behind him.

Then indeed came a fresh flood of tears. "This," she exclaimed, as she covered her face with her hands. "This is the sympanthy he feels for me! To leave me thus to perfect solitude!" Mrs. Lindley was now wrought up to real agony. The infant at this moment awoke, and clasping him to her bosom, she cried:—"Yes, darling, your father's feelings are such towards your poor mother, that to avoid her society, he is even willing to leave you, dearly as he loves you!"

With the unconscious infant cradled in her arms, the mother indulged herself in looking back on the gilded scenes of her youth; or rather her unvaried life: for her youth was yet in all its freshness and beauty. Her freedom from care—from confinement—the parties—the balls—the concerts—the drives—all come upon her:

"While memory, covered with flowers, Restored every rose, but secreted its thorn."

In the retrospect, the picture was all brightness; all gladness; and what was her present lot. How great was the contrast? No variety; no pleasure; "all her days are twins;" a perpetual round of petty household cares, and a helpless infant always by her side or in her arms! How dark did a disturbed imagination render the review! She thought and wept until she verily believed herself the most wretched woman alive; while at the bottom of all lay a feeling of displeasure against her husband, as if he was the wilful cause of all her troubles.

For nearly an hour Mrs. Lindley indulged herself in these purely selfish musings, murmurings and regrets, when the clock, in a neighboring street, striking the hour of nine, aroused her. "Where can George be?" she cried. She felt some alarm; and laying her again sleeping infant in the cradle, she went to the window, and thence to the door, to learn if he were coming. The street was quite still, not a footstep was to be heard; and with conflicting feelings she seated herself beside her child. "O, he is cruel," thought she; "where can he be? In his office or where? Oh, where? Oh, that he would come."

On the whole, Mrs. Lindley was not only a rational creature, but a reasonable and reasoning woman; and the period had now arrived for a revulsion of feeling. Other views began to present themselves to her mind.

"It is I, I myself that am cruel!" thought she; "how happy we might have been this evening, had I not driven him from me! How tender he was; and how kind to kring a book purposely to read to me! He is willing to forego his society for my sake; and cannot I mine for his? And after all, what is there so desirable about a party? Did I ever attend one, hower gay where, from some source or other, there was not as much suffered as enjoyed?" Did I ever attend one in which I did not hear or see expressed the working of envy, or jealousy, or contempt, or ridicule? In such scenes did I not experience quite as much pain as pleasure, unless, indeed, I could secure the individual attention of George? And now he is all my own, and I drive him from me? What did I not endure when doubtful whether he loved me? whether he would ask me to be his? What were my thoughts when he once said to me, 'that with his present fortune, he should not dare to ask the woman that he loved to unite her fate to his, on account of the privations she must undergo?' Oh, did I not think, with him for a companion, the most humble establishment would be a paradise! and that no self-de-nial would be severe? and now that I am his wife, I drive him from me by cruel repinings. Oh, where can he be!"

Again she went to the window—to the door; but in vain; no husband was to be seen or heard. How gloomy, how desolate, did her comfortably and well furnished little parlor appear, as she re-entered it. "Oh!" cried she, "what sunshine would his smile shed around! but I have displeased, grieved, wounded forced him from me!"

Never had an hour in Mrs. Lindley's life dragged itself along so slowly as the present; and it was not until after the clock had struck ten that the well-known footsteps of her husband met her listening ear. With a bound, she met him in the entry.

"O, my dear George, how glad I am you are come."

Her husband made no distinct answer, entered the parlor, and advancing to the mantel, rested his elbow upon it, and leaned his head upon his band—His countenance was clouded, yet more in sorrow than in anger.

"Dearest George, will you forgive me?" said the trembling wife, while she twined her arm in his and looked imploringly in his face; "will you, can you forgive my folly, my cruelty?"

"Yes, Emily, I can do any thing you ask of me."

"O, George, don't speak so coldly; so sadly Alas! I have made you very unhappy!"

"You have, Emily; for I fear your union with me requires sacrifices you are unable cheerfully to make."

"O, say not, think not so, my dearest husband! for, notwitstanding appearances are so much against me, it is not so. Since you left me this evening," she added, while a faint smile strove to chase away the gathering tears—"since you left me I have had ample time for reflection—for retrospection. I have reviewed my married and my single life; and my cruelty, and ingratitute, my childish perverseness to-night, have caused me the most bitter self-upbraidings. May you never now a pang like that which shot through my heart when the thought struck me that the great Disposer of events might free me from care, as he had freed poor Charlotte, by taking from me husband and child! I cannot forgive myself—but oh, say that you forgive me!"

"Forgive you, dearest Emily? I have nothing to forgive, if you will only be happy."

"O, I am most happy—blessed in having such a husband. This bitter—bitter evening has taught me that all my joys cannot be crowded into one state or period; and I do think I can never again regret the giddy pleasures of my youth, while in possession of those so much more precious. Henceforth it shall be my pleasure to strive to make you as happy as you make me; and to educate our boy as much like his father as possible. O, say once more that you forgive me—for depend upon it I can never again be so foolish; so cruel; so wicked."

The husband bent forward and imprinted a long long kiss on the forehead of the supplicant. She looked up, and his eyes, beaming with love and renewed confidence, gave her perfect assurance that all was forgiven—forgotten!

Shifting the Responsibility.

While attending Court, recently, in the adjoining County of Randolph, a friend, who is fond of jokes of all sorts, and who relates them almost as humorously as "His Honor," gave us the following vouching, for the substantial, sublunar existence of the parties, and their present residence "in the county aforesaid."

Brethren Crump and Noel were both members of the Primitive Baptist Church, and both clever, honest men, who paid their taxes and debts as the same annually accrued, with a regularity at once Christian and commendable. If, when settling day came round, Brother Noel was "short," Brother Crump was sure to be in funds; and, on the other hand, it almost seemed providentially how, if Brother Crump fell "behind," Brother Noal always had a surplus. Thus borrowing from and lending to each other, worshipping at the same church, and living only a mile apart, an intimacy gradually ripened between them, so that at last they did not hesitate to speak in the freest and most familiar manner to each other, even in regard to their respective foibles.

Now it came to pass, that Brother Crump, during the liveliest period of the cotton season, drove into Wetumpka and disposed of his "crop" of ten bales, at the fair price of 12 cts per pound. It was more than he expected, and as the world was easy with him, he determined to invest, and did actually invest, a portion of the proceeds of the sale of his cotton, in a barrel of Western Whiskey; paying therefor at the rate of precisely two pounds of middling cotton for one gallon of "ditto," whiskey. Of course it was narrated in the settlement that old man Crump had brought a whole barrel, and after a few weeks people began to observe that his nose grew redder and his eyes more moist. The idea that Brother Crump was "drinking too much" diffused itself in the neighborhood, until, as one might say, it became epidemical. People talked and talked; more especially what few of other denominations of Christians that dwelt thereabouts.

Brother Noel was "sore troubled" at the scandal which circulated about his brother and friend, and especially regretted the injury it brought to the "society" at Sharon. So, one morning he stepped over to Brother Crump's, and found the old man in a half-doze in his little porch.

"Won't you take a drink?" asked Brother Crump, as soon as he was aware of the presence of his neighbor.

"Why yes, I am not agin a dram when a body wants it."

Brother Crump got his bottle, and the friends took a drink a piece.

"Don't yo think Brother Noel," said Crump "that sperits is a blessin'?"

"Y-e-s!" responded Noel; "sperits is a blessin', but accordin' to my notion, its a blessin' that some of us abuses."

"Well, now, Brother Noel, who do you think abuses the blessin'?"

"Well, it's hard to say; but people talk—don't you think you drink to much, Brother Crump?"

"It's hard to say!" it's hard to say!" returned Brother Crump. "Sometimes I've thought I was drinking too much; then agin, I'd think maybe not!

What is man? A weak wurrum of the dust! What the Lord saith that shall be done! So I left it to the Lord to say whether I was goin' too fur in sperits. I put the whole 'sponsibility on him! I prayed to him ef I was drinkin' too much, to take away my appetite for sperits!"

Here Brrother Noel groaned piously, and asked "What then, Brother Crump?"

"And," replied Crump, "I've prayed that prayer three times, and he hain't done it! So I am clear of the responsibility, any way!"

"The Lord's will be done!" ejaculated Brother Noel; and after taking another dram he went home thinking all the way how cleverly Brother Crump had shifted the responsibility.

Diversity of Opinion.

That all men should think alike is impossible.—And if it were possible it would still be very undesirable. The light of the sun is ever the same in its essence, but yet as it falls upon the earth it gives back all varieties of color. These varieties are consequent upon the nature, structure, and relative position of the enlightened objects. So while truth is ever the same, men from unlike temperaments, circumstances and degrees of knowledge, must entertain dissimilar views upon any given subject. Indeed the same individual from, natural progress and his ever changing relative positions, must be constantly changing in degrees of knowledge. We may hazard nothing then in asserting that there never were two individuals who, in all respects, held precisely the same notion on any one subject.

This diversity of opinion is a necessary and happy arrangement. Were it otherwise, a sameness and gloomy monotony would be imposed on all the face of society. All men would engage in the same pursuits for the same ends. There would be no agitation, inquiry, or research, for these are inseparable from intellectual diversity. There would be no competition or emulation, without which there could be no mental expansion, and progression.

But this happy law of diversity of opinion is often sadly abused, and we are inclined to think in most cases, grossly misunderstood. Difference of opinions need not involve difference of principle. While the principle remains unalterable, views may be unlike, as views of a natural object are different from differing positions and varying distances. There are but few distinct elements in the material world, yet of these there are almost countless combinations. So while there are but few distinct principles there may be great varieties of opinion.

Now these differing opinions are too generally construed into hostile principles: and hence the ten thousand little and imaginary enmities, jealousies and evil surmisings with which the world is replete.—Thus our ignorance and our obstinacy are our greatest curses. That man possesses a manly and ingenious mind who, while he maintains his own sentiments, respects those of others. He is a noble and true man who loves truth above every thing else and who will embrace it whether found with friend or foe. If you are right, right manfully maintain your position. If your opponent thinks he is right respect him, in his love of truth, for the truth's sake. Let opinion generously meet opinion that truth may be elicited and honored.

There is not a surer indication of a narrow, weak, ignoble mind than that of construing every petty difference of opinion into a hostility of principles. That man is an intellectual pigmy and coward who cannot strenuously advocate his own opinions and at the same time shake hands with his opponent as with a friend. Certainly he that pretends to all knowledge is a fool, hence his opponent may be right. He that tamely sacrifices his convictions is a slave. As by taking all the different views of an object we may the better arrive at a clear and just conception of that object; so by carefully studying various opinions upon the same subject we may the more easily and certainly arrive at the truth. "Liberty of the Press."

To conduct a paper upon the principles which some men would have us, would be to convert the editorial function into a machine. We take it that the vocation of an editor calls for something more than the mere chronicling of the passing events of the day; and to confine him to the simple task of collating and publishing news items only, would be to dispossess him of that which is, so to speak, the fundamental principle of the 'Liberty of the Press' viz: the expression of opinion on all matters of public concern.

The editor has certainly a right to express himself freely and unreservedly on all subjects which come within the pale of public discussion; and to shackle the press, to crib and confine it to such and such limits for fear of offending this and that individual, is to convert an instrument of value and importance into a mere nothing—a body without a soul. The editor of a public journal had better lay aside his pen at once, rather than submit to the terms which some persons would prescribe.

"He is the freeman whom the Truth makes free,
And all are slaves beside."

The Press has its duties to perform, and when occasion requires, it should not hesitate to do its duty, irrespective of what are called "party considerations." Every editor has his office to fulfil, and while he takes care that his judgement is not biassed—that his opinions are the result of patient labor or serious thought—he should never fear to record his convictions. It is his prerogative to give expression to his sentiments, and he who faltars in the course marked out for him, is recreant to his trust and false to his vocation.

"Twere a base
Abandoned of reason to resign
His right of thought," and a dereleliction of duty to possess, and not bear to exersise it.—Newark Eagle.

To Our Mechanics—"Come Let us Reason Together."

It is an undeniable fact, that the great majority of our mechanics are not reading men, that is, they do not read useful and instructive works. We do not mean to say that our mechanics cannot, and do not read at all, far from it, for there are but few among us who have not received the elements of a common education; but we do say that the majority do not make a practice of reading works which expand the intelect and improve the mind. The works which they make a practice of reading, tend to grossify and puddle the mind. This is one reason why there are so few among our mechanics capable of taking charge of and managing the business they have learned as trades. It is also a reason why so many of them are rough in speech, and uncorteous in manner. There are many, very many men in our country who were once journeymen mechanics, but who now occupy high and important positions in the republic. We rejoice at this, but we are not a little sorry to add that the majority of them had to leave their trades, and become lawyers,—they at least did not move out from the workshop direct to the House of Representatives, or the Senate Chamber. Fillmore, our President, and Douglass, Senator from Illinois, were once tradesmen, but they arose to their present positions, not through the tailor's or cloth-dresser's bench, but the lawyers bench. There is not a solitary individual in our country, who has, from a lowly, elevated himself to a high position in society, but has been and is a reading man,—one who has read and does read books that are books.

Those mechanice who rise to foremen and employers, are the reading men of the mass; they aspired to be something and adopted the best means to secure the desired ends. Worth and intelligence always command respect from those whose respect is worth striving for. We are not pleading for a gross struggle for wealth, although a reasonable amount of it—as a provision for sickness or old age, is a laudable desire, but we plead first of all for an elevation of moral character as a means to a social elevation among men of real worth. Wealth without worth will never make a man pass among gentlemen, as a current coin, but the man who is industrious, intelligent, trusty, and courteous, will always pass for the genuine metal.

Industry, honesty, and intelligence are qualities of character more valuable than gold seven times purified. A talented, first rate handy mechanic, without such qualities will never rise, for he cannot be trusted. It is not the smartest man who is always selected to be the superintendant among his fellow workman; it is he who combines the greatest amount of abilities with those qualities which give his employers confidence in his moral worth. We have often been solicited to furnish compenent mechaics to take charge of new establishments, and have found it very difficult to secure' at any time, the proper man; and no further back than last week a gentleman writing to us from the South, uses the following language: "Last summer, I visited the North and purchased machinery for the manufacture of chairs, and after considerable trouble hired a man alleged to be competent to superintend the whole business. Phave not yet been able to commence operations, owing to the incompetency in every respect, of the man in whom I trusted to superintend my business; can you send me a man with the requisite qualifications, and above all let him be a gentlemen?" We cannot send him the kind of man he wants and requires. Our real good men are scarce,—they soon find situations, and we believe there would be more good situations for men (manufacturing establishments would increase) if we had more men capable of filling them honorably and well.

We have now preached a sermon long enough for a week's calm reflection, and next week we will point out the the way whereby young mechanics are sure to rise.—Scientific American.

"We propose in our next to say something of the editor's proposition that "Nature ever acts by Immutable Laws," and the syllogism by which he establishes it. We promise to show that the editor's premises are false—and then granting his premises, that his conclusion is false." QUIS.

As our neighbor, the editor of the Union, in his last number nearly overcomes the laws of gravitation, and will undoubtedly—as he has intimated that he will do something "ugly"—(we must give him time to arrest their downward tendency)—set all onr brooks running up stream; and as "Quis" has promised in the above to finish the business completely, it would be a supererogation in us to attempt to refute what they themselves thus acknowledge was a mere toot on a penny whistle to keep up their courage. Accordingly we patiently await the grand demonstration which is to reverse at least if it does not totally annihilate the "Immutable laws of Nature."

☞ He who advertises judiciously and extensively, can afford to sell to his customers to better advantage than he who does not; because he adopts the correct means to multiply their number and secure to himself a much larger amount of business. He who does the largest business can do it at the smallest percentage of profit.

NEW-HAMPSHIRE.—The Governor and Council, having opened and counted the votes for Senators, have declared officially that seven Opposition and two Whig members are chosen, and that there are three vacancies to be filled by the Legislature.

The Prospect of Disunion.

This subject, the principle stock in trade of ambitious aspirants to the Presidency, is completely 'cock't into a knoc't hat' by the following extracts from the N. Y. Tribune.

We have been told, yes, seriously told, over and over again of late, that this Union is in imminent danger of dissolution, and this Government in peril of destruction. Nay, the very jaws of gaping ruin have been pictured as wide open to swallow us. And these dangers have been depicted by people of all qualities. The country has been bid to be alarmed by those in high station and in low. The seats of learning and seats of religion have sent forth their tin-pan alarmists. We have had warnings from above and below—from the Godlike and the Satanic.

Now who are the men that are to dissolve this Union and overturn this Goverment? Is it those millions who are hastening hither to escape the oppressions of other Governments, and who seek this as a refuge and a home, a land of peace, of liberty, of democratic equality? Do they wish to lend a a hand in tearing down the roof that shelters them, and which they have sought at the sacrifice of all the ties held most dear by man? Do they come with such revolutionary projects in their heads!—Such questions can have but one answer. They are too preposterous to be asked. Who then are the men that propose to do this work of folly—to commit this gigantic crime against the name and the cause of freedom?

Is it the people of the free States? Where is the man in the North that desires the dissolution of the Union? We do not know him. We have never seen him. We hear of a set of men whose motto is "No union with slaveholders." They, we suppose, must be taken to be disunionists. Yet even they are not for disunion per se. They simply prefer a dismemberment of these States to being associated in a federal government with slaveholders. But however this may be, they are but a handfull and a handful they are likely to remain. But they are not only insignificant in numbers but in position. They are too pure to associate with evil, too pious even to vote. They are not a power in the State. Their professions are a felo de se upon their acts The disunionists of the North are really nowhere, and when found they are nobody. The doctrine of disunion has no foothold whatever throughout the free States, North and South, East and West. From the Ohio river on the South, to Keeweenaw Point in the North; from the sources of the St. John in the East, to the mouth of the Columbia in the West, all classes, all interests, all trades, all professions, and all callings, unanimously and without exception, are attached and devoted, ardently attached and ardently devoted to the Union. They are in favor of it out and out, and will stick to it through thick and thin.

Who then is to dissolve the Union? Is it the people of the Slave States? It is they if anybody, for it is not they of the free. And here is the rub. Here begins to loom the lantern visage of the frigtful bugaboo, of which we have heard so much. Here peers from the land, syphnx-like' the grim, horrid front of dissolution, so alarming in the distance to the timid nerves of College Ex-Presidents, and servile Professors, mercenary presses and politicians, and those clad in the purple and fine linen of trade and commerce. Yes; all the talk and apprehension, and vage alarm about disunion, when sifted and examined, leaves just residuum, only this and nothing more: that the imminent danger of the dissolution of this Union, and the destruction of this Government, arises wholly and solely from the apprehensions entertained of the action of the Slave States.

What of these dangers? What are the people of the Slave States saying and doing, or what have they been hitherto saying and doing that should alarm even timidity and cowardice itself? Has not the whole burden of the song of the South always been that the North should have nothing to do with Slavery, except to return the runaways? And have they not always insisted upon the diesharge of this latter duty? In a word, does not the South stand now just where it has always stood on this whole question? Wherein is the differenee between the state of things the last year and that of former years, exepting that the Southern men swore a little louder than common when California was admitted, and subsequenly when Northern men declared the Fugitive Slave Law should not be executed? And excepting, too, (and a most important exception it is,) that certain political interests and certain trading interests in the North, warmed into life a new brood of dough faces, (Mr. Webster once called such people "dough heads" and "dough souls,") who very suddenly discovered the Union to be in danger, and have been ever since preaching and praying to Northern men to support and execute that law and to save it. Taking a fair historic survey of the whole field of Slavery affairs, it is nothing less than a sham and a humbug to declare that the American Union and Government has been in any greater peril during the last year than it has been any time these ten years, and that is just no peril at all.

And what is the execution of this Fugitive Slave law upon which we are gravely told the issues of life and death to this Union and Government hang? Does not everybody know that it amounts to nothing, practically? Does it not cost a good deal more than it comes to for an owner of an absconding chattel to repossess himself thereof? Do not the fugitives fly in droves to Canada at its approach? Indeed did not Mr. Speaker Cobb himself declare here in New-Yosk, in effect, that it was only the name of the thing that they were after, and not the runaways themselves that they expected to get? And did they not get that in the passage of the law? Don't the South understand that they can't get their escaped slaves, no matter how many laws are crowded upon the statute book, or crammed down the unwilling throats of the North? Are not the flying blacks slid along to Canada, secreted, and otherwise kept out of the reach of their masters? Was the Union dissolved because Shadrach was rescued, or would it have been if Sims had escaped? The rescue was made the occasion of an extra ebullition of Southern scoriæ belched through 'Union' throats in various latitudes, and the escape would have had the same results, but this is all. It is no compliment that the peculiar friends of the South and the Union pay their Southern brethren, when they say the shadow of things satisfies them; that they are content with the Rejection by Congress of the "Wilmot," though they know that Slavery cannot go into New-Mexico and Utah, and that they are satisfied with the show of the execution of the Fugitive Slave law, though it does not secure the return of a single slave only at a cost of more time, trouble and expense than he is worth. And it is a still more significant intimation that they consider the Southern people destitude of all common sense, when they declare their belief that they will forthwith dissolve the Union if these phantoms should cease to adorn the wall where the shadows have been cast, to delight while they mock them.

We contemn utterly the whole gasconading and intimidating process. Yet we are so used to it that it fails to provoke the indignation it is naturally calculated to excite.

The upshot of the matter is, that over this whole vast and glorios country of ours, nobody talks of secession or dissolution excepting the South; and there, a real disunion movement cannot be got up. And the reason why, is this: When all is said, the Southren people are just as sensible as other men; they will not bite their own noses off to spite their neighbors. They will thunder and lighten, and storm and threaten, and talk big, and get very indignant on the surface, while at the bottom they are moderate, sensible, well-disposed specimens of humanity. The conviction among moderate men and men of sense at the South is uniform that the Slave States would in no way help their condition by going out of the Union, but quite the contrary; and another still more potent consideration that weighs heavily in the ballance is that they cannot get out if they would. The idea that the perpetuation of the Union hinges upon tripping up the heels of an escaping negro and trundling him back to his bondage whenever a slave-hunter says the word, is really to rediculous to be commented upon. The Union is afixed fact. It is a political and a geographical necessity. It is secured by the wants of the millions of the Old World who have already found it an asylum and a home— by the wants of the millions who are following and to follow—by the unanimous demands of the Free States, and by every consideration of love, duty and interest of the whole people.

Erom the Scientific American.

Knowledge is Democratic.

The few remarks which we are now about to make, are applicable to men of every age and in every condition of life. "Knowledge is power," wealth is only desirable because of these things which it can purchase to gratify the desires, but there are some things which cannot be purchased with wealth, and knowledge is one of them. Wealth can purchase houses, lands, adherents, and bauble honors, and a man may sit down and enjoy these things at once. An heir to an empire may be born, he may be the legal successor to thrones, armies and navies; over all these he may exercise dominion and be their possessor, but no man was ever born an heir to knowledge. An idiot may be born a prince or lord, a fool among beggars, while the son of a beggar may be more than a prince among kings and more than a titled lord among magnates. Books, teachers, money may be lavished to procure knowledge, but the individual cannot obtain it from teachers or books, without personal efforts. Knowledge can only be obtained by labor, and without this no man can obtain it; and however poor a man may be, if he labors to acquire knowledge, he cannot fail of success according—yes according—to the amount of labor he expends in the search of it. The nobles and magnates of European nations, are well aware of the "power of knowledge." This is the reason why they have endowed splendid colleges to which they send their sons to labor as any plebian's sons must labor, in acquiring knowledge. Knowledge therefore is democratic; it is true that more time and means may be at the command of the rich than the poor, and in this respect, the former have the decided advantage; but they are brought to the same level in one respect, they must work. One acquires knowledge faster than another, all have not the same faculties, but talents is in the mass. The majority of great men have sprung from the people Shakspeare, Newton, Franklin, Watts, Burns, Fulton, &c., were men of the people, the workers—plebians born, but kings of mind, while crowned monarchs beside them are but kings of mud.

There is another wrong notion abroad respecting "a learned man." Some suppose that a man cannot be learned unless he is a greet astronomer, or can speak twenty or thirty languages, and so on; and others that a man must be profoudly acquainted with all the sciences. There are very few who acquire a profound knowledge of more than one science, as a single science requires a lifetime of study. Such men as Humboldt and Henry are exceptions; but although a few men become eminent in a number of sciences, the fact is beyond dispute, that a man must pursue continually one branch of science to become profoundly versed and eminent in it.

We talk of this and that influence, levelling the mass of men upwards, but the great elevator the democratic reformer is knowledge. The well behaved intelligent man is respected although he may be poor, and we wish this fact to be spread far and wide, and to be felt by every man. The possessor of knowledge who enjoys the simple pleasure of reading, is more rich, strictly speaking, than the rich ignorant man and he feels conscious that he has the means of gratifying a desire—of enjoying an enjoyment (tautological though the expression be) of a more pleasurable nature than any which can be enjoyed by the most wealthy barbarian who cannot say his A B C.

Correspondence of the Germantown Telegraph.

Prepare Well the Soil for Your Seed,

Farmers should allow themselves to spare no pains or expense in the preparation of their cultivated lands whether designed for the production of grain, root, or grass crops. There is a false economy in this matter which requires to be corrected. Editors may write and lecturers declaim, till the former are blind and the latter deaf, yet unless farmers practice the precepts they inculcate, no reformation will result, and agriculture will remain as it is, to the end of time. In plowing, harrowing, manuring and planting, see that all is carefully and scientifically performed. If you are so unfortunate as to have "helps" who prefer to "have their own way." and will not obey your injuctions, set them adrift at once. Get good men—set them a good example by being precise and circumspect yourself, and allow them ample time to accomplish whatever they are engaged in, well.

Get the best seed, and the best roots, and do not be niggardly in providing whatever is essentially requisite for their comfort, or the success and welfare of your crops. In this way, farming in all its departments, will be a pleasant and profitable employment to all.

Said an aged Cultivator to us the other day:—"I never permit myself or those in my employ, to half do a thing. Experience is an expensive teacher, but the lessons derived from that source, are invaluable. When I cannot command the time and means to perform a job of work as I think it deserves to be done, I defer all attempts till I can. If I have proposed to plant an acre of corn, and find upon examination that I am deficient in manure, and in order to plant the acre, must necessarily diminish the quantity per hill, I choose to circumscribe the extent of the former, or augment the quantity of the manure"

This is the right policy. The thrifty condition of our aged and intelligent friend, proves it to be so.—In everything, thoroughness is highly essential; and one great reason, in my opinion, why so many poor farmers are to met with, and so many poor crops harvested, is, the details are not properly performed in anything pertaining to their work. System is no less essential in the field, than in the counting room, or study. To my farming friends, therefore, while I would take them kindly and encouragingly by the hand, permit me to say—do all things well. This is the great secret of success in farming, and all who try it for themselves, will find it so. S. P. W.

TRUE REFORM.—The State Gazette, says the Newark Mercury, gives the folling evidences of the great good effected by the recent laws in the vicinity of Trenton. If any one asks for "more" they should be started at, worse than the Beadle did at Oliver Twist.

The recent Legislature, in the passage of the exemption laws, have well-nigh broken up the business of the Justices of the Peace in the State. The litigation which on each Saturday or Monday brought whole neighborhoods before some august country magistrate, and a great deal of law and ceremony, hard swearing and eloquent pleading have died with them. Those Justices in the cities, who heretofore have made out to live upon the fees, have been compelled either to connect some other business with their offices, or resort to some other employment. We know of three Justices of the Peace in this vicinity who estimate that the business from suits in their offices will not amount to ten dollars per annum. In addition to the Justices of the Peace the Constables in the several townships have also, by the new order of things, been made of little account except in criminal business.

'You labor overmuch on composition, Doctor,' said a young clergymen to an eminent divine. 'I write a sermon in three hours, and make nothing of it.'

'Would it not be as well, meekly suggested the Doctor, if you were to employ a little more time and make something of it?'

☞ Green Peas, the first of the season, were quite plenty in Centre Market, on Saturday night. They were selling at eighteen pence the half-peck—Newark Mercury.

The Perils of the Lungs.

These delicate organs are always in peril, and life is in peril when they do not properly perform their functions. If inflammation interferes with their regular action, the blood is imperfectly purified, the circulation is irregular, and the whole system suffers. In the combined tonic, expectorant, and healing properties of Dr. Rogers' Syrup of Liverwort, Tar, and Canchalagua, lies the remedy for all this mischief. DELAY IS DANGEROUS. While the patient is considering tubercles may be forming, or worse still, may be bursting in the Lungs. But if this remedy by promptly applied, the Couh, Cold, or Catarrah is at once removed, and to use the word of Daniel Webster, the sufferer "breathes freer and deeper." The only thing required is promptitude. See pamplet in the hands of Agents, and advertisement in another column.

IS now opened, and may be found in the BRICK BUILDING in Front-st. nearly opposite the Post Office, where the Ladies and the public generally, will find a superior and splendid assortment of New and Fashionable
DRY GOODS,
Both Fancy and Staple, suitable for the season, consisting of a great variety, such as Barages, Berage DeLaines, Silk Tishas, Crape DeLains, plain, figured and changeable Silks, Ginghams, Prints, Gloves, Parasolls, &c. &c. We can't begin to name half of them. It is unnecessary for us to mention the Fancy Articles, as we have them and are ever ready to wait upon those who may favor us with a call.

We have also a select assortment of Cloths, Cassimers and Vesting, together with every article necessary for a gentleman's complete outfit. One of the firm being an experienced cutter will personally superintend that department, so that a complete suit or any part thereof can be furnished at short notice and warranted to fit. We don't like to talk much about Goods, as we trust by quick sales, small profits, and prompt attention to business to secure a share of the public patronage.

Newark, April 3d, 1851. H. ELLS.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels; such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt.

RUPTURES, are always to be treated with the surgical instruments known as Trusses and Supporters, and these require to be skillfully applied. With this view, the HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE, now established some thirty years, has under the various managers, presented to the public both male and female attendants to apply its instruments directly to the persons, which is preferable in all cases, and has also made improvement at different times, showing that advancement which study and practice only yield toward the relief of this malady.

With much pleasure the fact is now published, that recent improvements BUTLER'S TRUSS PADS have been made, and sufficiently tested upon numerous cases to warrant, through the cures already affected, their submission to the public, as being in adaptation and efficiency superior to any heretofore made known.

These improvements, recently patented, are now being applied at this office, 4 Vesey street, in cases of rupture, gravitation of the bowels, prolapsus uteri, prolapsus ani and piles.

The public may rely upon that care being made in their application, which will most likely tend to the final cure of the several complaints.

Hull's Truss Office, 4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St. Paul's Church, New-York.

FRED'K M BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The ladies' department is attended by a female qualified to fit the instruments, having so attended this office for many years.

Children trussed when only two weeks old, and invariably cured. [145is.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S
TRICOPHEROUS,
or Medicated Compound.

INFALLIBLE for renewing, invigorating, and beautifying the HAIR, removing the scurf, dandruff, and all affections of the scalp; and curing eruptions on the skin, diseases of the glands, muscles and integuments, and releieving stings, cuts, bruises, sprains, &c. With this preperation "there is no such word as fail." The first journals in America, medical men of the highest eminence, prominent citizens of all professions, and ladies who have used it for years in their dressing rooms and nurseries, admit with one accord, that for imparting vigor, gloss, luxurience and curl to the hair, eradicating scurf and dandruff, healing wounds, curing contusions, sprains, stings, &c., and relieving diseases of the skin, the glands and the muscles, it has no equal, among the multitude of compounds advertised in the public prints, or used in private practice. In cheapness as well as efficacy, Barry's Tricopherous is unrivalled. The immense cash sales of the article have enabled the Inventor to supply it at retail, at 25 cents per bottle, which is from 50 to 100 per cent. less than the price of any other preperation for the hair now in use. The scientific treatise on the hair and the skin, (embracing valuable directions for the culture and preservation of Nature's choicest ornament,) in which each bottle is enclosed, is alone worth the money.

The affinity between the membranes which constitute the skin, and the hair which draws its sustenance from this triple envelope is very close. All diseases of the hair originate in the skin of the head. If the pores of the scalp are clogged, or if the blood and other fluids do not circulate freely through the small vessels which feed the root with moisture, and impart life to the fibres, the result is scurf, dandruff, shedding of the hair, graveness, dryness and harshness of the ligaments, and entire baldness, as the case may be. Stimulate the skin to healthful action with the Tricopherous, and the torpid vessels, recovering their activity, will anihilate the disease. In all affections of the skin, and of the substrata of muscles and integuments, the process and the effect are the same.—It is upon the skin, the muscular fibre, and the glands, that the Tricopherous has its specific action, and in all affections and injury of these organs, it is a sovereign remedy.

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York; and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States and Canada. [134is

PATENT INDEPENDENT HORSERAKE,

In the Counties of Somerset, Middlesex, Essex, Hudson, Bergen and Passaic, and will have them ready ready by the 1st of May.

This Rake was patented by Calvin Delano, of East Livermore, Maine. Feb. 27 1649. It is fitted to the hind wheels of a Single Horse Wagon, and attended by a man or boy who can RIDE AND RAKE, and manage the horse with ease and certainty.

Each Tooth acts separately and independently, its head being suspended on a rod or hinge over the Axletree, one Tooth being attached to each head. It is equally applicable to ROUGH AND SMOOTH LAND, and applies with equal pressure on each kind of surface.

Premiums and Diplomas were awarded it in the Fall of 1847 and 1848, by the Kennebec and Franklin Counties Agricultural Societies. Its utility has been tested by more than 100 Farmers in the State of Maine, who have certified to its superiority over all other Horse Rakes.

Francis F. Haines of East Livermore, authorized by the Patentee, will dispose of the Patent Right, within and for the States of New-Jersey and Pennsylvania, by Counties or Towns on very liberal terms.

☞ All infringements on the Patent Right of the above Invention will be prosecuted, without favor, to final judgment. CALVIN DELANO, Patentee.

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

Among the numerous discoveries science has made in this generation to facilitate the business of life—increase its enjoyment, and even prolong the term of human existence, none can be named of more real value to mankind, than this contribution of Chemistry to the Healing Art. A vast trial of its virtues throughout this broad country, has proven beyond a doubt, that no medicine or combination of medicine yet known, can so surely control and cure the numerous varieties of pulmonary disease which have hitherto swept from our midst thousands and thousands every year. Indeed, there is now abundant reason to believe a Remedy has at length been found which can be relied on to cure the most dangerous affections of the lungs. Our space here will not permit us to publish any proportion of the cures affected by its use, but we would present the following opinions of eminent men, and refer further enquiry to the circular which the Agent below named, will always be pleased to furnish free wherein are full particlars, and indisputable proof of these facts.

From the President of Amherst College, the celebrated PROFESSOR HITCHCOCK.

"James C. Ayer—Sir: I have used your CHERRY PECTORAL in my own case of deep-seated Bronchitis, and am satisfied from its chemical constitution, that it is an admirable compound for the relief of laryngial and bronchial difficulties. If my opinion as to its superior character can be of any service, you are at liberty to use it as you think proper.

EDWARD HITCHCOCK, L. L. D.,

From the widely celebrated

PROFESSOR SILLIMAN, M. D., L. L. D., Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, &c., Yale College, Memqee of the Lit, Hist. Med. Phil. and Scientific Societies of America and Europe.

"I deem the CHERRY PECTORAL an admirable composition from some of the best articles in the Materia Medica, and a very effective remedy for the class of diseases it is intended to cure."

New Haven, Ct., Nov. 1 1849.

MAJOR PATTISON, President of the S. C. Senate, states he has used the CHERRY PECTORAL with wonderful success, to and inflammation of the lungs.

From one of the first Physicians in Maine.

SACO, Me., April 26, 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell. Dear Sir: I am now constantly using your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, and prefer it to any other medicine for pulmonary complaints. From observation of many severe cases, I am convinced it will cure coughs, colds, and diseases of the lungs, that have put to defianice all other remedies.

I invariably reccommend its use in cases of consumption, and consider it much the best remedy known for that disease.

Respectfully yours, I. S. CUSHMAN, M. D.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazzetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impetency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cerdial cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Leucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without off-spring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co, of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper

WONDERFUL CURES!

AND

CANCHALAGUA;

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to

CONSUMPTION.

NO OPIUM.

This syrup contains no Opium, Calomel, or any mineral whatever, but is composed entirely of those Roots, Herbs, and vegetable substances which have a specific influence upon the Lungs, and their connected organs. Its immediate effect is to allay all irritation, and gently remove the phlegm and other morbid secretions from the Throat and Air-Passages; thus relieving the Cough, by subduing the inflammation and other causes which give rise to it. It also stimulates and imparts a healthy tone to the lungs themselves, therereby enabling them more thoroughly to remove from the blood those impurities and diseased particles, which, if retained, do so much mischief in the system, and lay the foundation for incurable CONSUMPTION. It also exerts a decided action upon the skin, and assists nature in expelling, through the Exhalents, much of that morbid matter which would otherwise be thrown back upon the Lungs, thus relieving them of a part of their work, and rendering the system pure and healthy. When tubercles are forming, it checks their development and further progress; or if ulceration has taken place, it asssists the Lungs in throwing off the corrupted matter, soothes the irritation, heals the ulcerated cavities, and restores them again to healthy action. This Medicine, therefore, is not a palliative merely, which only relieves for the time being, but is a thorough curative, as it strikes at the very root of the disease, and by removing it, removes at once all its remote and attendant consequences. This is its distinguishing characteristic—a property possessed, in equal power, by no other medicine of like nature, now before the public.

CIRCULARS, &c.

As no ordinary-sized advertisement can fully explain the nature and merits of this article, the Proprietors have published a new Circular, giving the history of this Medicine; the description, nature &c., of its principal ingredients; the effect they are designed to have upon the Lungs and Liver, and a copious reference to the persons who have been cured by it—giving their names and residences, even to the street and the number. Those who are troubled with a Cough, or whose Lungs are in the least affected, are earnestly desired to call upon the Agents named below, and procure one of these Pamphlets. It can be had gratis, and will well repay a perusal. The "Hints on Health," and "About taking Cold," may be worth to yourself and family, in the the shape of Doctors' Bills saved, besides being the means of prolonging many a valuable life.

HUNDREDS OF DOLLARS,

WARRANTY.

Such is our confidence in its virtues, that we are willing to warrant this Medicine in every case of recent Cold, (where used according to the Directions on page 7th of the pamphlet, inside the wrapper of each bottle,) and where the person is not satisfied that he is deriving benefit from it, by returning the bottle within 24 hours' time, will be returned. ☞ See page 3d of the pamphlet inside the wrapper of each bottle.

THE MONEY

☞ Be sure to ask for Dr. A. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, and CANCHALAGUA, and let no other be palmed on to you.

CAUTION.—None genuine, unless there is on the buff wrapper a note of hand, signed with a Pen, by A. L. SCOVILL & CO.

FOR SAAE, wholesale and retail, by A. L. SCOVILL & Co., Proprietors, at their Principal Depot, GOTHIC HALL, no 316. Broadway, New York, to whom all orders for the Medicine, and letters relating to agencies, should be addressed, post-paid.

AN ADDRESS.

By Rev. Wm. Whittaker.

On the occasion of the presentation of a Bible by the Ladies of Plainfield, to the Sons of Temperance, delivered in the Second Presbyterian Church May 24th 1851.

SONS OF TEMPERANCE:—I have several times had the honor of addressing you in your associate capacity, but never before, have I responded more promptly and cheerfully to your kind invitation than on the present interesting occasion. The ladies of Plainfield in the benevolence of their hearts, have generously presented your society with a Bible, by which act, they have laid you under a lasting debt of gratitude, and for which, they deserve the thanks of this entire community. And here permit me to remark that Females have ever been foremost in works of faith and in labors of love. The influence of women is potent—it is irresistable either for good or for evil—it is a blessing or a curse.—The happpiness of generations yet unborn, hang suspended on her fiat—prosperity or adversity—the prison and the scaffold alike maintain her bidding. The strength of her affection and devotedness to the object of her love and the power and withering influence of her hate towards those who have abused her confidence is thus graphically described by the Poet

"Make her a slave, steal from her check
By needless jealousies; let the last star
Leave her a watcher by your couch of pain;
Wrong her by petulance, suspicion, all—
That makes her cup a bitterness—yet give
One evidence of love, and earth has not
An emblem of devotedness like hers.
But Oh! estrange her once, it boots not how,
By wrong or silence, anything that tells—
A change has come upon your tenderness
And there is not a high thing out of heaven
Her pride o'ermastereth not."

Innumerable are the instances in which her influence has been exerted to increase the moral lovliness of virtue—to strenghen the power of moral principle in the breast of man and to allure him by the force of her own bright example from sin to holiness, and from earth to heaven.

It is to be feared that woman has never yet awoke to an exercise of her moral power—to her highest destinies and to her holiest hopes. She has yet to learn the renovating—purifying—and heavenly influ nce which she is capable of exerting over the pride, and prejudice, and waywardness of man.—Though she may not teach from the Portico, nor thunder from the Forum yet in her secret retirement she may form, and send forth the illustrious statesmen—sages, and orators, who shall rule and bless the world. Though she may not gird herself for deadly conflict, nor sound the tocsin of war, yet she may enwrap herself in the panoply of love and mercy, and send a thrill of holy extacy through thousands of lacerated and bleeding hearts. Though she may not enter the lists in legal collision, and sharpen her intellect amid the passions and conflicts of the sterner sex, yet she may teach most eloquently the law of kindness, and by a meek and quiet spirit hush the storms and tempests of domestic life into a profound calm. The reign of the Amazons is over—women, are not warriors, or legislators, but the influence which they still wield is as great as ever—they weave around the heart a mystic chain forged by love—cemented by affection and durable as adamant. The reign of women, like that of the queen of night, is placid and serene, and as the one with silvery beams shines on the closed up flower, and refreshens those with dew which the burning sun had caused to droop and wither, so does the other shine upon man with beams full of tenderess and love, and over his misfortunes, the dew drops she sheds are tears of affection, and genuine heartfelt sympathy.

"The hour of dark adversity is woman's
In the full blaze of fortunes rich meridian
Her modest beam retires from vulgar gaze,
But when the clouds of woe collect around
And shades and darkness dim the wanderer's path
That chaste and lonely light shines forth to cheer
An emanation and an emblem of the heavens."

"It is not the language of flattery, but of truth, to say that the female sex are distinguished by acute sensibility—quick sympathy, and persevering patience in doing good. When the compassionate Redeemer humbled himself, and become obedient unto death, it is said that women "ministerd unto him of their substance." From constitution they are more susceptible—from habit more considerate—and from character more prompt than the other sex in promoting benevolent purposes. They require less urging to useful measures, and the flame of charity often burns with more brightness and perspicuity in their bosoms. The cause of Christianity has ever been highly indebted to the zeal and devotedness of pious females. In numberless instances they have been pre-eminently its honor and its support. The apostles speaks with marked distinction of "women which labored with him in the gospel"—and we read of "honorable women not a few." They have borne with heroic fortitude the reproach of Christ, and sustained with unbending constancy the pains of martyrdom. Women received their dead raised to life again; and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance that they might obtain a better resurrection." Some of the most devoted and self-denying philanthropists of modern times are to be found among the ranks of woman. Many of the benevolent institutions of the present day, which are the boast and glory of our land, owe much of their prosperity to the influence and active co-operation of zealous and disinterested christian females. Under their fostering care societies are springing up on every hand the object of which is to clothe the naked—feed the hungry— visit the widow and fatherless in their afflictions and light up the abode of want and wretchedness with a smile of contentment and joy. Yes—with cheerful hearts and willing hands, they move up and down in this sin-stricken world like angels of light and mercy entering the wretched hovels of sin and sorrow—binding up the broken hearts—drying up the scalding tear—relieving the pains of affliction—whispering words of hope and consolation to the desponding, and pointing the dying to that bright and blessed world where there is no more death, neither sorrow nor crying nor any more pain.

In primitive times we find that women were as active in labors of love as the men. Some were employed as deaconesses visiting the sick, and releiving the indigent from their own resources, as well as from the alms of the church. We have a beautiful example of true benevolence in the conduct of Dorcas recorded in the acts of the apostles. "She was full of good works and alms deeds which she did."

And when Peter, who was sent for on the occasion of her death, was introduced into the room where she was laid, all the widows were speedily gathered around her, weeping and showing the coats and garments which Dorcas had made while she was with them." Nor was Dorcas a solitary instance of female benevolence, for history makes us acquainted with multitudes whose lives were spent in doing good. Nazianzen says of his mother that an ocean of wealth would not have filled her unsatisfied desire of doing good. He also informs us that his sister Georgiana was immensely liberal—that like Job, she was eyes to the blind—feet to the lame, and a mother to orphans. Her delight was to scatter abroad her property in deeds of blessing and according to the counsel of her Saviour to lay up for herself treasuses in heaven.

Jerome tells us that Fabiola of Rome, a woman of considerable birth and fortune, sold her estate, and dedicated the money to the uses of the poor.—She built an Hospital, in which she maintained the infirm, afflicted, or any sick that she met with in the streets, and endeavored to cure them of their maladies. What a noble sight, to behold a vast multitude of helpless beings, afflicted with all kinds of diseases thus congregated together, and the generous hearted foundress of the Hospital attending to necessities in her own person. Sometimes she might be seen carrying her helpless charge in her arms—sometimes washing and dressing those sores from which the fastidious devotee of fashion would have shrunk with loathing—and at other times she was seen preparing food for the sick, or giving them medicine with her own hands. This hospital founded by this Christian female was the first erected for the poor and afflicted that we read of in the whole history of the world. Placilla the Empress, wife of the younger Theodosius, we are told was also very attentive to the infirm and needy. She was accustomed to take particular care of the lame or wounded—to go to their homes—carry them all necessary conveniencies and minister to their wants with her own hands. She also constantly visited the common hospitals—prepared medicines and cordials for the afflicted—prepared their bread—reached them their provisions—washed their cups and cheefully performed all other offices, which the humblest of her meniels might have felt unwilling to discharge.—Some of her courtiers having condemned her for what they deemed her degradation, in condescending to attend personally to the sick, she answered—"To distribute gold becomes the Emperor, but for my part, I think it my duty to do this for God, who raised me to honor."

Suffice it to say, that at whatever period in the history of the world, and especially the church we direct our attention we shall find that women have manifested more sympathy in the cause of suffering humanity and more devotedness to the interests of pure and undefiled religion than men. At home and abroad—in the church or in the world, she is constantly exerting an influenee for good—in instructing the ignorant—in reclaiming the wanderer—in elevating the degraded—in providing a home for the friendless—and in pouring the oil and wine of consolation into the agonized and bleeding bosom. In physical strength and active courage, she may be inferior to man but in fortitude—in devoted—patient and cheerful endurance of inevitable suffering, she is incomparably superior. In the passionate and headstrong violence of party and sectional controversy—on the field of battle where opposing armies meet in deadly conflict and frantic daring, man may soar far above the power of woman, but in those scenes which call for calm and deliberate investigation, and patient endurance—in all the terrible trials and heart-rending bereavements incident to this frail and imperfect world, the power of woman is unapproachable and almost incredible. And now, permit me to say to the female portion of my audience who are more particularly interested in the services of this evening, let it be your study and delight to cultivate and improve the benevolent affections of your natures. Let no part of the inward man be neglected, or unadorned, but let it sparkle with the precious and imperishable diamonds of wisdom—gentleness and love. These qualities will make you a blessing to the world—they will shed a delightful fragrance on the atmosphere in which you move, and will render you the objects of admiration and attraction while life shall last. Such accomplishments are not artificial, but real, and the female who possesses them—"Needs not the aid of foreign ornament but is when unadorned, adorn'd the most." These excellencies of the female character will survive the wreck and ruin of all her personal or outward charms and be "consigned as precious gems to memory's casket."

"Long long be your hearts with such qualities filled,
Like the vase in which roses have once been distilled
You may break, you may scatter the vase if you will
But the scent of the roses will hang round it still."

And now suffer me to address a few words to the individuals who compose this society, which has been made the depository of the richest blessing that God has ever bestowed upon the ignorant and guilty race of man. In presenting you with a Bible the Ladies of Plainfield have imparted to you a treasure infinitely more precious than all the gold of Ophir, or the gems of princely cabinets, and with which all the things you may desire are not to be compared. A more appropriate or significant memorial they could not have selected, for the teachings of the scriptures are in strict accordance with the genius and principles of your institution. The religion of the Gospel is distinguished by the disinterested benevolence which it teaches, and by the godlike and ardent charity which it breathes into the souls of all its true disciples. It strikes at the very root of selfishness—it teaches man to consult not only his own pleasure and profit, but the wellfare of suffering humanity in every portion of the habitable Globe. The principle of unbounded philanthropy—of universal brotherhood is taught no where but in the Bible. I know that the enemies of Christianity boast of the moral lessons inculcated by Socrates and Plato—Cicero and Seneca, and contend that many of the heathen Philosophers taught as noble and disinterested benevolence as Christ and his apostles, but such a declaration is as for from the truth as the light is from darkness. An attentive perusal of their writings clearly prove that they had no sympathy with the masses of mankind, and that they cared not for their welfare. The vast and Godlike conception of rendering a universe of rational and immortal beings wise, and good, and happy, never entered their minds. To visit the widow and the fatherless in their afflictions, is purely a doctrine of the Bible, and it was reserved for the benevolent founder of the Christian system to give a practical and glorious exemplification of its truth.

"Among the splendour and magnificence of the Grecian and Roman cities we discover no out-beamings of holy and ardent charity. There were temples and theatres—there were parks and palaces—there were groves and gardens—there were chariots and horses—there were diamons and pearls—there were gay attire, and ornaments of gold—there were triumphal arches and lofty pillars—there were shows of wild beasts and gladitorial exhibitions,—there were bridges and baths—all great and marvellous things in their way and patterns of splendor and magnificance, but in all this outward greatness, there was not one throb of sympathy felt for the wretched and forlorn, nor one drop of consolation thrown into their agonized and bleeding bosoms. There were no asylums for the blind—there were no hospitals for the sick—there were no almshouses for the aged and infirm, nor any schools of instruction for the children of the indigent. Self was the great idol that was every where worshipped, and the interests of suffering humanity were forgotten and trampled under foot. But how different the religion of the Bible. Here, we are taught to cultivate the most enlarged benevolence, and treat every human being as a brother. Here, we are taught to "weep with the afflicted—give food to the hungry—clothing to the naked—protection to the helpless—instruction to the ignorant—to bind up the wounds of the stranger—to be a father to the fatherless and a husband to the widow—to break the fetters of the captive and let the oppressed go free. The man who is influenced by the spirit of Christ, and makes the Bible his rule of charity, will live and breathe in an atmostphere of love.

Sons of Temperance, you have done well in receiving the bible not merely as an expletive, but as an explication of the principles of your Society in reference to this matter and I solemnly charge you to be faithful to the sacred trust reposed in you—imbibe the charity, and exemplify the spirit of the Gospel; and "while you have opportunity, do good unto all men. but especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Whereever there is a broken hearted wife who needs consolation, or a fatherless child who wants a protector, there go, and be a minestering angel of mercy to the sorrowful and distresed. Let your hearts overflow with love, and your hands be filled with blessings, and in the deep sincerity of your souls, say in the language of "Pope's Universal prayer"—

"Give me to feel another's use
To hide the fault I see
The mercy I to others show
That mercy show to me."

And no less explicit, I remark again, is the language of the Bible on the subject of temperance. It expressly forbids all "rioting and drunkennes," all revelling and sensual feasting—it teaches us to "live righteously, soberly and Godly"—to add to our knowledge temperance—to be temperate in all things, and to let our moderation be known unto all men. Wherever the Gospel has been permitted to exert its legitimate influence upon the hearts and lives of its possessors, it has constrained them to curb their extravagant desires and control their sensual appetites and passions As an illustration of this truth I would mention the following circumstance related by a correspondent of the "New York Spectator."—"One very warm evening, passing the house where Tom Paine boarded, the lower window was open, and seeing him sittlng close by, and being on speakable terms, I stepped in for half an hour's chat. Seven or eight of his friends were also present, whose doubts and his own he was laboring to remove by a long talk about the story of Joshua commanding the sun and moon to stand still, and concluded by denouncing the Bible as the worst of books, and that it had occasioned more mischief and bloodshed than any book ever prinled, and was believed only by fools and designing knaves. Here he paused and while he was replenishing his tumbler with his favorite brandy and water a person, who, I afterward found, was an intruder, like myself, asked Paine if he ever was in Scotland. The answer was. Yes. So have I been, continued the speaker; and the Scotch are the greatest bigots with the Bible I ever met; it is their schoolbook; their houses and churches are furnished with Bibles, and if they travel but a few miles from home, their Bible is always their companion; yet, continued the speaker, in no country I have travelled have I seen the people so comfortable and happy; their poor are not in such abject poverty as I have seen in other countries; by their bigoted custom of going to church on Sundays they save the wages which they earn through the week, which, in other countries that I have visited, is generally spent by mechanics and other young men in taverns and frolics; and of all the foreigners who land on our shores, none are so much sought after for servants, and to fill places where trust is reposed as the Scotch; You rarely find them in taverns, the watchhouse, almshouse, bridewell, or the State prison. Now, says he, if the Bible is so bad a book, those who use it most would be the worst people; but the reverse is the case." Now this was an Argumentum ad hominem, which Paine was not prepared to answer—it was an historical fact which could not be denied; so, without saying a word, he lifted a candle from the table and walked up stairs; his disciples slipped out one by one, and left the speaker to enjoy the scene.

If then, Sons of Temperance, You would relieve the necessities of the needy—if you would wipe away the tears of the disconsolate—if you would snatch the giddy youth from the whirl-pool of dissipation which is bearing him on with resistless impetiousity to inevitable ruin—if you would lesson the miseries of the world in all its various and complicated forms—if you would sanctify and strengthen all the bonds of society and raise our guilty race from its abyss of wretchedness and woe, to happiness and God, let the bible be your councellor and guide. In the language of Philip S. White and Rev. Dr. Ely, the authors of the vindication of the Sons of Temprance, "the Bible reveals the duty, and presents the highest motives to temperance in all things.

It exposes the dangers to which men are subject who indulge in strong drink; and the curse which attends and follows inebriation. Had not the Bible instructed us on these subjects, we may well judge that nothing of the temperance reformation would ever have been attempted or effected. The law of God has ever been, and will continue to be, the ultimate source of all such teachings and influences as can restrain men from the formation of bad habits, and the criminal indulgence of unnatural and acquired appetites. The most impresive forms employed by the Sons of Temperance in their meetings have been extracted from the sacred volume; and the most powerful incentive to temperance is found in the saying of him who alone could speak authority in the case, that no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God." In conclusion then, I would say to every member of this society, in the language of her who presented you with this Bible at the opening of the service, "read it regularly in your lodge—profit by its heavenly instructions—imbibe its benevolent spirit, and in your entire conduct and conversation, be governed by its infalliable directions. If this shall be your determination, our most sanguine hopes will be realized—the blessing of heaven will rest upon your order, and the cause of temperance will be promoted."

The cause you advocate is the cause of truth and righteousness, and deserves the sympathy—the prayers, and the active cooperation of every man who wishes well to his race. Your order has increased beyond the most sanguine expectation of its friends, and is now spreading with a rapidity unknown in the annals of benevolent enterprize throughout every portion of our widely extended territory. From small beginnings, it has already attained the magnitude and an importance that baffles all description, and bids fair to win its widening way until it shall embrace the entire circumference of the globe. It now numbers within its ample folds nearly half a million of intelligent members, and about two thousand ministers of the Gospel, of all denominations. Surely, with such a mighty, efficient, and persevering host, clad in the invincible panopy of eternal truth you may bid defiance to the embattled legions of intemperance and may say to every timid and faint hearted disciple, in the language of David to Saul, "Thy servant slew both the lion and the bear: and this uncircumcised Philistine shall be as one of them, seeing he hath defied the armies of the living God." A thousand voices from every quarter call upon you to be up and doing—God enjoins it—Christ expects it—motives drawn from three worlds plead for it—multitudes of widowed mothers—orphan children and wretched drunkards demand it—your efforts are indispensable to sustain virtue and religion in the earth and to prepare the way for that mellenial glory, which shall one day encircle the world.

"Oh! let all the soul within you
For the truth's sake, go abroad!
Strike! let every nerve and sinew
Tell on ages—tell for God."

THE RESULT OF KINDNESS.—The Jacksonville (Ill.) Journal says, that when the Superintendent of the Asylum for the Poor in that county first took charge of it, he found an insane man who had been loaded with heavy chains for years. Believing that this cruelty kept the man insane, he took the responsibility of taking them off, and gradually restoring him to liberty. The man at first raved, expecting fresh torture; then he doubted, and finally realized that he was free. He was overpowered with delight, exclaiming constantly as he looked upon the outer world of sunshine: "Oh how beautiful!" Then gratitude to his liberator prevailed. At length he voluntarily went to work in the garden, though he had nearly lost all his power of locomotion, and he became entirely recovered. He is now working on a farm.

Kindness in Little Things.

The sunshine of life is made up of very little beams that are bright all the time. In the nursery, on the play-ground, and in the school, there is room all the time for little acts of kindness that cost nothing, but are worth far more than gold or silver. To give up something, where giving up will prevent happiness—to yield where persisting will chafe and fret others—to go a little around rather than come against another—to take an ill word or a cross look quietly, rather than resent or return it—they are the ways in which clouds and storms are kept off and a pleasant and steady sunshine secured, even in very humble homes, and among very poor people, as well as in higher stations.

☞ Philander says the prejudices against color are very natural, and yet the prettiest girl he ever knew was Olive Brown.

☞ If an elephant can travel eight miles an hour, and carry his trunk, how fast could he go if he had a little darkey to carry it for him? asks the Day Book.

PLAINFIELD GAZETTE.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Thursday; May 29, 1851.

☞ Mr Albert D. Drake is our authorised agent to receive subscriptions and advertisments.

☞ Mr. E. W. Carr, Third street, Philadelphia, opposite the Exchange, is our authorised agent for that city.

☞ The Address of the Rev. Wm. Whittaker will be found on the first page. Although the address was most excellent and appropriate to the occasion which called it forth, yet in our estimation the few remarks after its conclusion, spontaneously uttered as they were, were also most appropriate; and will tend to have a most happy effect—to make the address of more practical benefit than it otherwise could have become. They were deeply felt, and we doubt not will long be remembered and cherished with kindly feelings and pleasurable emotions in the hearts of his hearers. It was evident from these remarks that a false impression had gone abroad in regard to the Sons of Temperance, as also of other kindred societies, in regard to their bearing upon society at large—that much of the good that they were evidently doing proceeded from evil motives and sinister designs upon the community. That this impression arose more from the lack of examination and therefore of a true knowledge of their principles, and perhaps of a prejudice or jealousy, that any good should be done out of Israel, than from any evil that they might do or had done, the learned gentleman expressed not a doubt, but expressly inferred and intimated that this was the case. As, from a more thorough examination of their doings and principles, having a more full and correct knowledge of what really pertained to the Order he felt constrained to recommend the society to the favorable consideration of the religious as well as to the civil community.

Although not one of the "household of faith," of any order or society, we can still feel and appreciate as we believe the entire audience did, the candid acknowledgment that we are not better than thou; all men feel and know that the spirit of Charity which thinketh nor doeth no evil has a more happy influence on the minds and hearts of men than that Pharisaical spirit which says "Thank God we are not as other men are." When men shall cherish that spirit of kindness which arises spontaneously in the heart, and exercise that true spirit of Charity for the waywardness of his brother which he feels he is justly entitled to,—freely tolerating him as though a part of his own bosom, to hold and express his opinions,—then shall he be able to reach and to conquer error, disarm oppression, and enable man to attain, to hold, to exercise and enjoy the inalienably rights pertaining to his nature; which it is intuitively evident to all he is endowed with by Almighty God.

Although called the "Great Apostle of Infidelity" and therefore not supposed to have a heart susceptible to human impressions, yet even we feel we could ever meet a true spirit of conciliation and kindness, and cheerfully extend the right hand of fellowship to and call that man brother, whether Christian or Infidel; whether Catholic, Protestant, Jew or Pagan; who could meet us with the pure spirit of Heaven-born Charity. These being the spontaneous suggestions and inferences of our own mind while listening to the address and remarks referred to, we impress them upon paper as a mite towards promoting that spirit of love and universal brotherhood which it was conclusively shown it is man's true interest to attain.

We trust that the address may tend to have a happy effect on the community, and that while they weigh and ponder the important lessons it inculcates that they will receive and consider these remarks in a kindly spirit, as an effort to draw attention therto, and that whatever there may be of good suggested will be received and retained, while the bad is thrown away; as it is our only wish that righteousness, justice and truth may be promoted thereby, and that peace and good will may universally prevail among men.

☞ The readers attention is directed to the advertisement of Mr. T. R. Lafoy, in another column. Mr. L. has the most splendid establishment of the kind that can be found in the city of Newark, if indeed its equal can be found elsewhere. His stock, like his establishment, is of the most tasteful and valuable description, consisting of an almost endless variety of Jewelry and Fancy articles as also of Music and Musical instruments. A call will satisfy the most fastidious in taste, as well as the prudent in purse, that Mr. L. is prepared to gratify their every desire.

Jenny Linds Farewell Concerts,

By reference to another column it will be perceived that an opportuity is now offered to the citizens of Plainfield, as likewise those of neighboring towns, to gratify their desire to hear the inimitable and far-famed songstress, Mlle. Jenny Lind. To-morrow (Thursday) afternoon at 1 1-2 P. M. there will be a Grand Concert given for the more special accommodation of those residing at a distance from the city. By this arrangement families are enabled to take a most delightful excursion, and return the same day, and at the same time enjoy one of the greatest pleasures that the human heart is susceptible of. As Jenny will soon depart for her own native land a more favorable opportunity cannot again occur. We doubt not therefore that all who can will cheerfully respond to and duly appreciate the accommodation.

FIRE.—On Sunday last, about 12 o'clock M., in this town, this invaluable servant of man rebelled against his authority, refusing to do his behests, meanly sneaked through a hole in a stove-pipe and commenced destroying the shingles of his master's roof. But thanks to the quietness of his natural allies, the winds, and the alacrity of our citizens, the rebellion was speedily quelled; it turned out to be a mere apology for a fire—simply an excuse to throw water, which soon compelled the wretch to surrender—just sufficient to spoil half a dozen good sermons, and perhaps a score or more of good dinners. The property damaged was situated on Main street and bolonged to Mr. Randolph Dunham. The loss was but trifling and was fully covered by insurance. We perceive by the Union, that Messrs. Lewis Runyon, Gershom Frazee, and James M, C Smith, merit the thanks of the community for the efficient aid rendered by them.

FIRE in Elizabethtown:—The Journal states that the morning services in all our churches were unpleasantly interrupted on Sunday, by an alarm of fire which was caused by the burning of a large quantity of salt hay on the premises of the late Stephen H, Woodruff in Bridge Street. It was thought to be the work of an incendiary; the Mayor has accordingly offered $100 reward for their detection.

"As we anticipated, the editor of the Plainfied Gazette does not meet the "ugly argument we poked at him" last week. Good reason why. However, let him ponder over it another week. We have merely to add, that his assertion that men know that the laws of Nature are immutable, was met by our assertion that men believed that Nature's laws were mutable by Divine Power. As it is impossible for men to know a thing and at the same time believe the direct contrary—his asertion our ours is false—which is false and which true, we leave to our readers to determine. We unqualifiedly deny his assertion—can he deny ours?"—Plainfield Union.

We have never denied the "Divine Power," but have repeatedly shown that the necessity does not nor cannot exist; for, to admit that it does exist is to admit that God's laws are imperfect, and therefore to destroy the strongest possible proof of that God's existence: for, from the perfection and immutability of these laws does the Bible and the most able christian divines deduce the proof of his existence. But further, the "Good reason why" we did not answer it was that it sufficiently refuted itself, as the most dull of apprehension could not fail to perceive—that if it proves anything, it proves that men will or do, without examination, or if you prefer it, through prejudice or ignorance believe contrary to the only evidence or knowledge they ever had or can have. Therefore, "As it is impossible for men to KNOW a thing and at the same time believe the contrary—his assertion or ours is false." Now we accept this issue, and candidly ask the reader to conscientiously decide for himself—"which is false and which is true"—that which he can prove by the whole experience of his life and that of all mankind, or that which rests solely upon tradition without any such proof? Are the readers of the Union content with its say so or would they prefer some of the evidence which it is said is so abundant to prove it? Which would be most in accordance with reason and common sense?

We now ask the editor again:

(1.) Whether he believes in the immortality of the soul?

(2.) What he means by the converse of a proposition?

(3.) Where the religion of Christ is taught?

(4.) What "fundamental principles of truth and justice" he recognizes which are not recognizable by the Bible?

We hope the editor will face the "whistle" this time, and answer with as much brevity and perspicuity as may be practicable. QUIS.

As "Quis" has only given us another "toot on his penny whistle," of course, as it is only a "toot," for the reasons before given, he cannot reasonably expect us to answer it. But as he reiterates his questions and appears to think they are cutely put, and of vast importance, we will endeavor to gratify his school-boy desires. The first we will answer affirmatively or negatively, to suit his object, as it has nothing to do with the subject of discussion. If by the second he would infer our ignorance, we can only say that he proves his own;—we have never made pretence to the erudition that "Quis" would appear to claim as his. The third and fourth, as well as the second, are sufficiently explained and answered in the article where they stood in connection, to any person who prefers truth to a quibble.

In conclusion, will "Quis" cease introducing new matter by asking questions, until he has answered or attempted to answer that which has been already introduced—by "showing that the editors premises are false—and then granting his premises, that his conclusion is false." It appears to us that if this is to be done it might have been attempted without reiteration and without so much "complicated music;" a simple "toot" we should think would be amply sufficient to raise his "courage" to perform that which he intimates is so easy for him to do.—Our readers would undoubtedly like to have the question decided, as many important matters may not be prudently ventured upon—such as the building of a mill or a steamboat—if water is to be turned into another element, or to have new properties given it at will; the law of gravitation, which has hitherto been relied on as immutable—such does man's acts prove it to be—we trust will not be "reversed or destroyed" by the "grand demonstration" which is promised to be made. We trust the isssue, which he has himself accepted, will no longer be evaded by queries and promises.

Fire Department.

Pursuant to notice given the citizens of Plainfield met at Laing's Hall on Monday evening, for the purpose of organizing a more efficient Fire Department. the meeting was organized by the appointment of Zachariah Webster Esq. as chairman, The following Preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted.

WHEREAS, from the increase of Wooden buildings, and other property, subject to loss by fire, and with our growth of Population, and well knowing our abilities to have a well organized fire department which at this time is very inefficient, and knowing further that we possess very important advantages in procuring water, from its very convenient location thus being able to control so destructive an element, having considered these and other things, have come to the conclusion that humanity demands and interest prompts us to make an effort to be in readiness at a moments warning, whenever it should be required.

Therefore be it Resolved, that a committee of eight be appointed with full power to investigate the matter by enquiring into and collecting such information as they may think best to enable them to make a specific report to a future meeting, embracing the plan, the probable expense, aad all other such information to enable them to make a thorough view of organization for a fire department in this village, having special reference to economy of outlay and durability of aparatus.

Resolved, that when this meeting adjourns it will be to meet at the call of the Chairman of said committee.

Resolved, That the committee be instructed to consult with the Directors of the Plainfield Mutual and the American Mutual Insurance Companies in this place and all other companies having an Interest in property here, asking aid from them—and take such further action as they may think advisable.

Resolved, That the committee hereinafter named report as soon as the necessary information can be obtained.

The following gentlemen were appointed the committee:

Manning Vermule, Jacob Manning, Wm. Ayers, Jacob Thorn, Cornelius Boice, Joel Dunn, John W. Craig, Zachariah Webster.

☞ The May term of the Essex County Court, opened on Tuesday, Judge Randolph presiding.—The Court stated that there was no special matter to give the Grand Jury in Charge. As no causes, according to a rule of the Court, could be tried on the first day of the term, it was occupied with common business only.

There are 54 prisoners in the County Jail, the cases of 33 of whom will come to be reviewed by the Grand Jury.

Dreadful Riot at Hoboken.

Destruction of Life and Property.

This favorite resort was, yesterday afternoon, the scene of one of the most lawless and disastrous riots that has ever disgraced, perhaps any part of our country. It appears that a large number of Germans amounting we have heard it estimated, to nearly 10,000, repaired yesterday to Hoboken for the purpose of celebrating a May Festival. The scene of the festivity was cast in the Elysian Fields.

The riot begun at a public house, kept by a man named M'Carty, wkich was completely sacked by the Germans, every article of furniture having been smashed.

Not satisfied with this, they beat McCarty himself, his wife, and even children. They then came down in a body towards Hobaken, arming themselves, as they came, with clubs and stones. Some parties who attempted to oppose their progress, were either badly beaten, or forced to make a precipitate retreat. One man, named Bridges employed in Smith's ship yard received some dreadful injuries, and 6 o'clock last night, was lying speechless. Squire Brown, also, who endeavored to quell the riot, was struck down with the blow of a stone. and carried home senseless.

It is said that some lives have been lost, but we were unable to ascertain the correctness of the statement. The number of those, however, who were seriously wounded is very great. About the hour of 7 o'clock, the Germans we complete masters of the ground, having overcome all opposition. They were still, however, terribly excited; and in their desperation proceeded to pull down pailings, smash windows, and commit other outrages. Every pane of glass in the houses one side of Newark street, was broken, and a new store in course of erection at the corner was pulled to pieces.

This state of things continued for nearly an hour, during which time the peaceable inhabitants were alarmed for their personal safety. In the meantime, however, the boats were conveying from New York, bodies of "Short B'hoys," who, armed generally with clubs, and some with guns came over for the purpose, as they said, of "whipping the Dutch."—Between the two parties, as they organized, serious fights occurred, and several were severely wounded. Up to the hour of 9 o'clock, a kind of desultory warfare continued, By degrees, however, the ground was cleared, and about half-past nine, the rioting had terminated.

During the whole of this disgraceful scene no policemen, no military, were to be found; and, within sight of New York, lawlessness and violence, for a period of several hours were permitted to have undisputed sway. It is to be hoped that the promoters, at least, and originators of this riot, will be apprehended and brought to justice, and that some steps may be taken to prevent a recurrence of such outrageous proceedings.

P. S.—We learn since writing the above that four persons were shot, but our Reporters could not learn their names.—N. Y. Sun, Monday.

Population of the United States.

According to a summary published in the Washington Republic, the Total population of the United States and Territories as given by the recent census, is 23,267,498

Total population in 1840 17,339,970

Increase in ten years 5,927,528

The Slave poputation in 1840 was 2,487,113. It is now 3,179,589, showing an increase of 692,476, or about 22 per cent. The Free Colored population of the United States, in 1840, 386,293. It numbers now, 419,173, showing an increase of only 32,880, or 7.84 per cent.

REPRESENTATION IN CONGRESS.

The House of Representatives contains 233 members, and the ratio of Representation under the present Census is 93,702. In the next Congress Arkansas, Indiana, Massachusetts and Pensylvania will gain each one member; Illinois, Michigan and Missouri each two; while Maine, Newhamphire, New-York, North Carolina, Tennessee and Vermont each lose one, and South-Carolina each two

The apportionment for the XXXIId Congress shows a remarkable change during the last ten years in relative strength of the States in the House of Representatives. In XXVIIth Congress Maine had 8 members. She has now but 6. New-Hampshire and Vermont had each 5 against 3 now; Massachusetts 12 against 11; Connecticut 6 against 4; New-York 40 against 33; New-Jersey 6 against 5; Pensylvania 28 against 25; Maryland 8 against 6; Virginia 21 against 13; North-Carolina 13 against 8; South-Carolina 9 against 5; Georgia 9 against 8; Tennessee and Kentucky each 13 against 10. So much for losses; now for the gains. Alabama had 5 Representatives in the XXVIIth Congress—she now is entitled to 7; Mississippi had 2, and now has 4; Louisana 3, now 4; Ohio 19, now 21; Michigan 1 now 5; Indiana 7 now 11; Illinois 3, now 9; Missouri 2, now 7; Florida, Texas, Iowa and Wisconsin have come into the Union since 1843, with an aggregate representation of eight members.

Sixty-one years ago the Republic contained less than four millions of inhabitants. Since then it has increased to over twenty-three millions. The same ratio of increase for the next fifty years will show a population of over 100 millions—a goodly number with which to begin the 20th century. The number of slaves has increased from 697,897, in 1790, to 3,179,589 in 1850. The slave population in 1800 was 893,041; in 1810, 1,191,364; in 1820, 1,538,064; in 1830, 2,009,031. aud in 1840, 2,487,113.

Teacher—"John, suppose I were to shoot at a tree with five birds on it, and kill three, how many would be left?"

John—"Three, sir."

Teacher—"No, two would be left, you ignoramus."

John—"No there wouldn't though—the three shot would be left, and the other two would be flied away!

Teacher—"Take your seat, John."

Said Bill to Jack, "How many legs would a calf have calling the tail one?" "Five," answered Jack. "No, it wouldn't," answered Bill "for calling the tail one, wouldn't make it so, would it?" Jack mizzled.

The Perils of the Lungs.

These delicate organs are always in peril, and life is in peril when they do not properly perform their functions. If inflammation interferes with their regular action, the blood is imperfectly purified, the circulation is irregular, and the whole system suffers. In the combined tonic, expectorant, and healing properties of Dr. Rogers' Syrup of Liverwort, Tar, and Canchalagua, lies the remedy for all this mischief. DELAY IS DANGEROUS. While the patient is considering tubercles may be forming, or worse still, may be bursting in the Lungs. But if this remedy by promptly applied, the Couh, Cold, or Catarrah is at once removed, and to use the word of Daniel Webster, the sufferer "breathes freer and deeper." The only thing required is promptitude. See pamplet in the hands of Agents, and advertisement in another column.

BABY WALKERS!

The greatest Invention of the Age.

THE subscriber has made application for a Patent and is receiving orders for the above article, which far surpasses the baby jumper by relieving the arms of the pressure of the jumper and in the convenience of having it in place, without spoiling the walls to suspend it. The contrivance forms a very neat article of furniture. Its form resembles somewhat a common parlor ottoman, though in the top is cut a hole, upon which the infant rests; its feet touching the ground. The saddle is supported on springs, which give the up and down movement at every mot on of the little occupant. The contrivance is placed upon castors, and can therefore be pushed around the room by the youngster, with the utmost ease.—It is better calculated to teach children to walk, (without the great injury they sometimes receive, as it learns them gradually,) than any other method.

Prices from $5 to $10 each, according to style of trimmings. Orders punctually attended to.

Both Fancy and Staple, suitable for the season, consisting of a great variety, such as Barages, Berage DeLaines, Silk Tishas, Crape DeLains, plain, figured and changeable Silks, Ginghams, Prints, Gloves, Parasolls, &c &c. We can't begin to name half of them. It is unnecessary for us to mention the Fancy Articles, as we have them and are ever ready to wait upon those who may favor us with a call.

We have also a select assortment of Cloths, Cassimers and Vesting, together with every article necessary for a gentleman's complete outfit. One of the firm being an experienced cutter will personally superintend that department, so that a complete suit or any part thereof can be furnished at short notice and warranted to fit. We don't like to talk much about Goods, as we trust by quick sales, small profits, and prompt attention to business to secure a share of the public patronage.

DENTISTRY.

Dr. CHARLES S. ROWELL,

NO. 11 CHAMEBS-ST., NEW-YORK.

Confines his attention to the practice of DENTISTRY, in all its various branches, and from his long experience in his profession, he feels assured of rendering the most PERFECT SATISFACTION.

He would invite the attention of the public to his

Premium Incorruptible Teeth.

which he will insert, either on Gold Plates, by Atmosperic Pressure, or otherwise, and which cannot be surpassed in this or any other country.

The improvements which he has introduced have rendered these TEETH perfect for Speech, Mastication, and Natural Appearance.

The instruments which he uses in his profession are of the very latest Improved Invention, and are unsurpassed in variety and quality.

Dr. R. would also invite the attention of the public to his

Premium Incorruptible Gum Teeth.

These Teeth have won the admiration of all who have seen them, and the warm approval and recommendation of all who have used or worn them.

They imitate the natural appearance of the gum and teeth so closely as to defy the strictest scrutiny.

He confidently asserts that they are a better and cheaper article than was ever before offered to the public.

Newark, April 3d, 1851. H. EILS.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels; such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt.

RUPTURES, are always to be treated with the surgical instruments known as Trusses and Supporters, and these require to be skillfully applied. With this view, the HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE, now established some thirty years, has under the various managers, presented to the public both male and female attendants to apply its instruments directly to the persons, which is preferable in all cases, and has also made improvement at different times, showing that advancement which study and practice only yield toward the relief of this malady.

With much pleasure the fact is now published, that recent improvements BUTLER'S TRUSS PADS have been made, and sufficiently tested upon numerous cases to warrant, through the cures already affected, their submission to the public, as being in adaptation and efficiency superior to any heretofore made known.

These improvements, recently patented, are now being applied at this office, 4 Vesey street, in cases of rupture, gravitation of the bowels, prolapsus uteri, prolapsus ani and piles.

The public may rely upon that care being made in their application, which will most likely tend to the final cure of the several complaints.

Hull's Truss Office, 4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St. Paul's Church, New-York.

FRED'K M BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The ladies' department is attended by a female qualified to fit the instruments, having so attended this office for many years.

Children trussed when only two weeks old, and invariably cured. [145is.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS,

or Medicated Compound.

INFALLIBLE for renewing, invigorating, and beautifying the HAIR, removing the scurf, dandruff, and all affections of the scalp; and curing eruptions on the skin, diseases of the glands, muscles and integuments, and releieving stings, cuts, bruises, sprains, &c. With this preperation "there is no such word as fail." The first journals in America, medical men of the highest eminence, prominent citizens of all professions, and ladies who have used it for years in their dressing rooms and nurseries, admit with one accord, that for imparting vigor, gloss, luxurience and curl to the hair, eradicating scurf and dandruff, healing wounds, curing contusions, sprains, stings, &c., and relieving diseases of the skin, the glands and the muscles, it has no equal, among the multitude of compounds advertised in the public prints, or used in private practice. In cheapness as well as efficacy, Barry's Tricopherous is unrivalled. The immense cash sales of the article have enabled the Inventor to supply it at retail, at 25 cents per bottle, which is from 50 to 100 per cent. less than the price of any other preperation for the hair now in use. The scientific treatise on the hair and the skin, (embracing valuable directions for the culture and preservation of Nature's choicest ornament,) in which each bottle is enclosed, is alone worth the money.

The affinity between the membranes which constitute the skin, and the hair which draws its sustenance from this triple envelope is very close. All diseases of the hair originate in the skin oi the head. If the pores of the scalp are clogged, or if the blood and other fluids do not circulate freely through the small vessels which feed the root with moisture, and impart life to the fibres, the result is scurf, dandruff, shedding of the hair, graveness, dryness and harshness of the ligaments, and entire baldness, as the case may be. Stimulate the skin to healthful action with the Tricopherous, and the torpid vessels, recovering their activity, will anihilate the disease. In all affections of the skin, and of the substrata of muscles and integuments, the process and the effect are the same.—It is upon the skin, the muscular fibre, and the glands, that the Tricopherous has its specific action, and in all affections and injury of these organs, it is a sovereign remedy.

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York; and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States and Canada. [134is

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

Among the numerous discoveries Science has made in this generation to facilitate the business of life—increase its enjoyment, and even prolong the term of human existence, none can be named of more real value to mankind, than this contribution of Chemistry to the Healing Art. A vast trial of its virtues throughout this broad country, has proven beyond a doubt, that no medicine or combination of medicine yet known, can so surely control and cure the numerous varieties of pulmonary disease which have hitherto swept from our midst thousands and thousands every year. Indeed, there is now abundant reason to believe a Remedy has at length been found which can be relied on to cure the most dangerous affections of the lungs. Our space here will not permit us to publish any proportion of the cures affected by its use, but we would present the following opinions of eminent men, and refer further enquiry to the circular which the Agent below named, will always be pleased to furnish free wherein are full particlars, and indisputable proof of these facts.

From the President of Amherst College, the celebrated PROFESSOR HITCHCOCK.

"James C. Ayer—Sir: I have used your CHERRY PECTORAL in my own case of deep-seated Bronchitis, and am satisfied from its chemical constitution, that it is an admirable compound for the relief of laryngial and bronchial difficulties. If my opinion as to its superior characteer can be of any service, you are at liberty to use it as you think proper.

EDWARD HITCHCOCK, L. L. D.,
From the widely celebrated

PROFESSOR SILLIMAN, M. D., L. L. D., Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy. &c., Yale College, Memqee of the Lit, Hist. Med. Phil. and Scientific Societies of America and Europe.

"I deem the CHERRY PECTORAL an admirable composition from some of the best articles in the Materia Medica, and a very effective remedy for the class of diseases it is intended to cure."

New Haven, Ct., Nov. 1 1849.

MAJOR PATTISON, President of the S. C. Senate, states he has used the CHERRY PECTORAL with wonderful success, to and inflammation of the lungs.

From one of the first Physicans in Maine.

SACO, Me., April 26, 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell. Dear Sir: I am now constantly using your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, and prefer it to any other medicine for pulmonary complaints. From observation of many severe cases, I am convinced it will cure coughs, colds, and diseases of the lungs, that have put to defiance all other remedies.

I invariably reccommend its use in cases of consumption, and consider it much the best remedy known for that disease.

Respectfully yours, I. S. CUSHMAN, M. D.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impotency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy pareuts of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cerdial cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without offspring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

It also possesses the unrivalled qualities of curing incipient Consumption, and I have administered it with great success to patients who have sought our delightful climate for the restoration of their health and the result is that a medicine has been added to the catalogue for the cure of insipient consumption.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co., of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper.

SURRENDER OF CORNWALLIS

A MILITARY SKETCH.

BY THE OLD 'UN.

It was a great day for Dogtown, being no other than the anniversary of the annual militia muster, and on this occasion not only the Dogtown Blues were on parade upon the village green, but the entire regiment of which they formed a part, commanded by the gallant Colonel Zephaniah Slorky, post-master and variety store-keeper, was to engage in a sham fight, representing the surrender of Cornwallis. There was no attempt at historical costume, but it was understood that Slorky, with his cowhide boots and rusty plated spurs, his long swallow-tailed blue coat, and threadbare chapeau with a cook's tail feather in it, mounted on his seventy-five dollar piebald mare promoted from the plough and "dump-cart," was the representative of Gen. Washington. Major Israel Peaseley, his second in command, a native of the rival village of Hardscrabble, was to figure as Lord Cornwallis, and the selection was the more appropriate, since the private relations of these two great men were anything but amicable, and they espoused opposite sides in politics. Dr. Galenius Jalap, an apothecary and surgeon of the regiment, a man with a hatchet face, hook nose, and thin, weeping whiskers, the color of sugar gingerbread, undertook the character of Lafayette at very short notice, and a very dim conception of the character he had.

The entire population of Dogtown and Hardscrabble turned out to witnes the stupendous military operations of the day. On the American side were the Dogtown Blues, with four companies of uniformed militia, armed with rifles fowling-pieces and rusty muskets, and tipyfying the continental army. Their artillery consisted of two light field pieces served by a select band of volunteers. These pieces were posted on an eminence commanding the entire plain. On the foot of this hill, Colonel Slorky drew up his troops in line of battle, his left wing protected by an impassable frog-pond, and his right resting on a large piggery whose extent prevented the enemy from turning his flank in that direction.

On the descent of an opposing eminence, likewise strengthened by two guns, Major Peaseley placed the Hardscrabble Guards, the Sheet Iron Riflemen, the Mudhollow Invincibles, the Dandelion Fire-eaters, and the Scrufftown Sharp-shooters. A thousand bright eyes, from the commanding eminences, looked down on the serried ranks of bayonets, the brazen-throated artillery, the panoplied plough-horses, the plumed commanders, the rustling banners, and all the "pomp, pride, and circumstance of glorious war,"

Preliminaries being thus settled, the commanding officers put spurs to their horses, and met in the centre of the plain, there saluting with their scythe-blade swords.

"Major Peaseley," said the Colonel, rising in his stirrups, "the follerin' are the odder of pufformances: we open with eour artillery—you reply with yourn. Under kiver of eour guns we advance to the attack. You do the same to meet us—firin' like smoke. Arter a sharp scrimmedge you retire—send us a flag of truce with terms—and finally lay down your arms."

The major bowed till his ostrich feather touched the mane of his wall-eyed plough horse, then turned bridle, and regained his ranks at a gait something between a stumble and a rack. The representative of General Washington rejoined his men at a hard trot, rising two feet from his saddle at every concussion of his bony steed.

"Feller sogers!" roared the temporary father of his country; yonder stands Cornwallis and his red coats—only they haint got red coats, partikerlarly them in blue swaller tails. We air bound to lick 'em—hurrah for our side! Go inter 'em like a thousand of bricks fallin' off'n a slated rufe. The genius of Amanerkin liberty, in the shape of the carnivorous eagle, soarin' afott on diluted pillions, seems to mutter E Pluribus Unum—we are one of 'em!—Hail Columby happy land! Sing Yankee Doodle that fine tune—cry havock and let loose the dogs of war."

Then commenced the horror of the sham fight.—The Continental guns opened in thunder-tones. The British artillery hurled back their terriffic echoes Bang! bang! boom! boom! The canopy of heaven was stained with the sulphurous smoke. The drummers rattled away on their sheepskins—the fifers distended their cheeks till they resembled blown bladders. In the midst of all this noise and tumult, the undaunted Slorkey, and the indomitable Jalap, rushed to and fro, with clanking scabbasds, and brandished scythe-blades, twin thunderbolts of war.

"Forrard march!" roared Slorkey. With the yell of demons, his fierce followers advanced to the onset firing their blank catridges with desperate valor.

Equally alert were Major Peaseley and his followers.

'Their swords were a thousand, their bosoms were one.'

Their faces begrimmed with powder, their eyes gleaming with ferocity, they descended to the plain—an avalanche of heroes. The soul of Headley would have swelled within him had he seen them.

For more than ono hour that deadly consumption of blank catridges endured, and then Peaseley and his troops retired in good order.

"Boys," said the major, "old Slorkey wants us to gin out—send a flag of truce—a white pocket handkerchief on a bean-pole—and propose to surrender. But it goes agin my grit for Hardscrabble to cave in to Dogtown, when we could knock the hindsights off 'em, if we was only a mind to."

"Hurray for the major!" responded the Hardscrabblers.

"I've got a grudge agin the kurnil," said the major, "and if you'll stand by me, I'll take it out of 'em. What say?"

"Agreed!" was the spontaneous response.

While Slorkey was waiting for the covenanted flag of truce, he saw the hated Peaseley in his stirrups, and heard his stentorian voice roar out the word, "charge!"

A deafening shout answered his appeal. In an instant Hardscrabble and its allies were down on Dogtown and its defenders. The latter stood it for a moment, but Peaseley knocked the major off his horse, the surgeon had his nose pulled, the Dogtown Blues justified their name by their looks, and seized with a sudden panic fled—fled ingloriously from their native training field. The audacious outrage was consummated—history was violated—and Gen. Washington was beaten by Cornwallis.

Dire were the threats against Peaseley, uttered by the colonel, as he was carried home on a shutter—nothing short of a court-martial was his slightest menace. But no court-martial ever took place. The military pride and glory of Dogtown was wounded to the quick; the force of popular opinion compelled Slorkey to resign, and to consummate his chagrin, his treacherous rival was chosen colonel of the regiment. So unstable are human honors—so ungrateful are republics!

Who Broke the Lamps?

In a city not a thousand miles from this, an advertisment appeared not long ago, offering a reward of ten dollars to any person who would give information to the Mayor who were the rowdies that broke three of the town lamps on the previous night.

It happened that the Mayor was a hardware merchant, and early the next morning, after the appearance of the offer of this reward by the Lamp Committee, of which the Mayor was ex-officio chairman, a carpenter, who was in the habit of dealing with the Mayor, walked into the store and inquired for the owner. The clerk was very officious to wait upon the customer—said his master had not yet come down—had been very much broke of his rest lately, in consequence of so many mischievous persons in town. "Why, sir, they have actually been breaking the lamps just here in West street."

"O, yes," says the carpenter, "I saw the reward offerd, and I thought I would come and tell the Mayor who did the the mischief."

"Can you indeed? Well, I will step up and tell him; he will be delighted to hear you name the rascals."

"I doubt that; but I'll see."

"Says he will be down directly—as soon as he can finish his breakfast."

As soon as he entered, he commenced denouncing the lamp-breaking rascals and inquiring of the carpenter if he had any idea they could be discovered.

He told him he thought he might give him information that would put him on track of the villians, for he was sure there must be more than one of them—no doubt very great rascals, too—about the worst in town. "But perhaps it won't be best to let any body but your worship know who I suspect, until we find whether we can catch them or not, and so I will go into your private office, if you please."

When safe from all intrusive listeners, the Mayor requested him to state his reasons why he suspected any particular person.

"Why," said he, "about three o'clock in the morning, I was turning around the corner of Cross into Water street, when I heard the smash of a lamp, as though a brick had been hove against it."

"Did you see any one?" iuquired the Mayor eagerly.

"I did not."

"Well, then go; I see we shan't be able to find out the rascals,"

"Perhaps not but we will try. When I heard the smash, I heard a hearty laugh and a voice say, "I'll bet a dollar, Joe, you can't do that!" No quicker said, than smash went another lamp, and then another ha! ha!' and a voice says, "Youv'e lost, old horse." I'm sure he didn't say 'mare,' your worship. Within a minute away went the third. By that time I had got to old Sally White's door, where I stood till the three passed me."

"But now the lights were out—you could not see who they were?"

"No—but I knew the laugh right well."

"Is it possible? But the third one did not laugh, you say, so you could not tell who he was?"

"No, your worship, I did not say so, though I perceive you think so. Well, he did not."

"Ah, very well. And who do you think the fellows were that you did hear laugh?"

"Why, the first was Mr. L——, and the one he called Jo was Mr. R——,"

"Oh, that is quite impossible. They are two of our most respectable citizens, besides, they are members of the Lamp Committee, who have offered the reward. Oh, it is quite impossible."

"Not at all your worship. I am very sure for I saw them when I ran up West street; I was then standing in the shade of Sally White's door-way. I am quite certain, and I should not be surprised if the third was a still more respectable citizen!"

"Is it possible? Out on a spree I suppose. Who could the third one be—you did not hear him laugh, you say?"

"No—but I saw him plainer than either of the others. Shall I name him?"

"Stop, stop, for pity sake, stop! not a word more. Have you tole any one?"

"Not a soul. I thought it best to tell the Mayor first, and take his advice."

"You have acted very judiciously. You shall have the reward most freely. I will pay it out of my own pocket. Come here this evening, about nine o'clock, Tom and Jo shall be present to hear your story, and help you drink the health of the Lamp Committee, in a bottle of my very best old wine but for the love of mercy, never mention to any living soul that the Mayor of the city of ——, and two of the Lamp Committee, were the rowdies who broke the lamps, and then offered a reward of ten dollars for the discovery of the rascals."—Newark Eagle.

Where some of the Money Goes to.

In advertising for a supply of stationery for the members of the U. S. House of Representatives during the next session of Congress, the Clerk of the House enumerates the articles required as follows:—2,805 reams of paper; 250 dozen pen knives, of which 100 dozen are required to be "four bladed, pearl handled, and of the highest finish and best quality;" 1,000 cards of assorted metallic pens, and 295 gross of other pens of different quality; 14,000 best opaque and clarified quills—making some 58,000 pens and quills; 100,000 note evelopes, plain and embossed; 300,000 ditto of different qualities; 100,000 self sealing letter envelopes, ; 20,000 self sealing note envelopes, &c., &c.—Mechanics' Reporter.

And these rogues are chosen to rule over a christian nation! Two hundred and forty members, gives them over one dozen each. Now what on earth can any member of Congress want of a dozen penknives in one session? Do they pawn their knives for grog? And 2,805 reams of paper gives each of the members more than 11 reams, or 5,300 sheets, to be used chiefly in writing to friends for electioneering purposes! Then they are to have some 240 pens each, &c. &c., all of which prodigality laborers must toil and sweat to pay for! and yet the landless dupes hurrah for these rogues and keep them in office if they and their children become beggars by it! A glorious people! to give so much for being ruled and robbed, while professing to govern ourselves!—Pleasure Boat.

The Earth's Rotation.

No recent experiment has attracted more universal attention than that which professes to render visible and palpable the rotation of the globe on its axis. It were presumptuous to doubt the various details, circumstances and results, as announced by the press. That the pendulum circumvibrates the graduated table, is an admitted fact; but the ascription of that phenomenon to the gyration of the Earth, remains yet a matter of extreme hesitancy.

The advocates of this theory found their argument upon the mechanic truth that "motion always proceeds in the plane of its originating impulse.' They forget that the "great globe and all which it inherit," every atom from its centre to the summit of its atmosphere, including even all the planes of all possible impulses, participate in the rotation of the Earth from West to East. We are insensible of change in place only because, like the furniture of a ship's cabin, we retain the same position relative to the objects around, although we occupy a new location in the realms of space. This imperceptible movement may be termed inherent motion.

The other species of movement—that which is obvious to the eye—is created by the impact of external power, and may be called accidental motion. This last can be counteracted by some adverse action, but the former is as regular, imperative and overwhelming as the law of gravitation itself. To say that a body, such as the pendulum in question, when set in motion, follows only its accidental motion, and repudiates the law of inherent motion; such a dictum leads to the most ridiculons consequences. Among numberless absurdities, let us remark only how such a theory demolishes, at one fell smash, every docrine of the science of Projectiles.

If a vibrating pendulum be released from its inherent motion, and become free to follow, in space, the unmodified impulse inflicted by any external power, then a projected cannon-ball must obey the same tendency; for there can lay no distinction between the impulses originating their movement. Suppose, then, a gun, accurately aimed at an object laying due north or south, distant one mile, while the Earth is rolling from west to east. The average velocity of a cannon ball may be taken at 1150 feet per second, and it will thus require about 4 68-115 seconds to travel its journey of one mile, due north or south. It is pretended in the pendulum experiment that this journey will be performed in the very identical plane or track in space through which the impelling power first directed it, indepen- of the inherent motion of the Earth's rotation. But the Earth revolves from west to east at the rate of 1518 feet per second, and therefore during the 4 68-115 seconds occupied by the transit of the ball, in a direction due north or south, the object aimed at has whirled westward about 1 1-3 miles. The astonished artilleryman who, in the good old times, was tolerably close to his aim, will now, when philosophers have repealed the law of inherent motion, find that in one mile of distance, he blunders at more than a mile from his aim.

But there are results yet more astounding to his untutored intellect. He points his gun due eastward, and applies the match. The ball rushes onward, at the rate of 1150 feet per second, but the gun follows at the rate of 1518 feet per second, and must carry forever in its throat the ball, vainly struggling to emerge. Sorely puzzled, he now points due west, with a charge of powder to carry a ball one mile. Away flies the missile, but during its flight of 4 68 115 seconds, an object, more distant by 1 1-3 miles than that at which he aimed, rushes forwrrd to meet the ball, which thus, with a one mile charge, does execution at 2 1-3 miles distance!!

Such are a few of the stupendous inferences from this new theory. Let us beseeech our savants to search for some less appalling method of accounting for the extraordinary results of their pendulum experiment. Will nothing satiisfy them, short of turning all nature topsy turvy?

Noiseless Wheels.

In this instance the invention consists in the the application of a solid band of vulcanized india rubber over the iron tire of the wheel. The india rubber is held in its place by the tire having a raised rim on both sides, and by its own elasticity. The band of an ordinary carriage wheel is about an inch to an inch and a half in thichness, and, unless on a close inspection, no difference from the common iron-shod wheel is perceptible. We have driven some distance in a carriage with the wheels so shod, and were so struck, not only with its noislessness, but at the perfect smoothness of the motion—the wheels being, in fact, springs, and by their elasticity, giving a lighter draught than with the iron tire. We have seen one set of wheels which have been driven 4,000 miles, they have here and there a trifling cut but show no appearance of being worn out, and seem quite capable of another three or four thousand. An iron tire is generally worn out in 3,000 miles, so that the india rubber tire has so far proved itself the more lasting. It is certainly a great adbition to the luxury of a carriage to have it run without jar or noise; and it would be a universal comfort to have the streets of cities without the present incessant rattle of carriages, omnibuses, etc.—Sci. American.

The coming anniversary of our National Independence is to be celebrated at most of the neighboring towns. If we do not wish to be considered entirely behind the age in devotion to man's most important and dearest rights and interests we should be preparing to show our appreciation of them in a becoming manner. A proper celebration of the day upon which it was declared by our patriot forefathers, —their honor being pledged to maintain it—that all men are inalienably endowed with Liberty by their Creator, would undoubtedly tend to an appreciation of that liberty, and to enlarge and perpetuate the glorious privileges we enjoy. Shall the day be celebrated at home or abroad? Which will best promote a just appreciation of the purposes for which such celebration is held?

☞ Mr Horner. Door-keeper of the House of Representatives, at Washington, died in this State on Thursday last. The situation devolves upon Charles W. Stewart, the Assistant Door-keeper.

☞ Found Drowned,—The body of John Ryno, of Short Hills, Middlesex Co., N. J., was found in the mill pond near James T. Dunn's Mills, Brooklyn, in said county on Monday last, by some boys who were fishing. He left the house of his brother, Wilson Ryno, at Plainfield, in good health, on the Thursday evening previous, and it was supposed he accidentally fell in the pond that evening. He was about 50 years of age. An inquest was held whose verdict was in accordance with the above.

The General Banking System.

Much is said and written on the recent expansion of Banking capital, brought out, as is asserted, by the passage of general laws on the subject in various States. An over issue of money is foretold, and a consequent inflation of prices, which will result in the general derangement of the currency, as in 1837. There is one method of remedying this which these persons have not mentioned. Let no more special charters be granted, and by so much at least, the banking capital of the State will be reduced. If there are any advantages in investing capital in banking under the general law, does it not appear singular that Banks with charters are so unwilling to avail themselves of them? The most absurd articles which we find in journals at the present time, are those which treat of the insecurity of these free banks. We have for instance several of these Banks established in New Jersey, having deposited United States stocks as security for their issues. Now at least the bill holders are safe, and capital will look after its own interest. Institutions under special charters depend entirely upon the integrity of directors, but those under general laws require a bond with the most perfect security that everything will be managed for the safety of the community.

The insidious and sneering attacks upon the principles of general legislation will now, we think, have little effect upon the popular mind. It has weighed special legislation in the balance and found it wanting, and the great doctrines of reform which have agitated communities are fast moulding the action of leg'slative bodies. We rejoice that it is so, and we trust that the present tone of popular op'nion, may be but the index of further and more general action. The community need not be in the slightest degree alarmed on acount of the notes of Banks secured by the best stocks, but they have need of examining closely into the affairs of other institutions, which are left entirely to the interest and judgment of their directors. Without intending an attack upon the character or standing of any of our Banks, we shall take an early opportunity to present some remarks in relation to their condition as rendered in the annual report, and will thus as we think show the advantage of the general system.

☞ It is a clearly established fact, one beyond the reach of refutation, that those who advertise can sell, and afford to too, a better article at a less price than an inferior one can be sold for by those who do not. Terrible Earthquake in Chili.

The Empire City arrived in New York Tuesday morning with the California mails, 350 passengers, and nearly $2,000,000 in gold dust. The North America has anticipated the Empire City's news.

An awful earthquake, which nearly swallowed up Valparaiso, occurred on the third of April last. The first shock, which was the severest one, and which caused the falling of many buildings, and the destruction of much property, occurred at about 6 o'clock on the morning of the 3d; but occasional shocks, of greater or less severity. were felt for the succeeding ten days, doing more or less damage.

This is the severest shock ever felt since the great earthquake of 1822, when Valparaiso was almost totally destroyed, and has created a panic not equalled by any former event.

A severe trembling of the earth of fifteen seconds duration, prolonged by less violent after shocks, to two minutes, appeared as so many hours to those whose lives and property were endangered, has in so short a time destroyed several hundred dwellings, and has made a great number of persons houseless.

During the eventful 15 seconds the houses rocked to and fro like so many vessels at sea.

Later from Europe.

The U. S. Mail steamer Washington, from Bremen May 16 and Southampton May 21, arrived at New York Monday afternoon. She brings 143 passengers. The news brought by her is uninteresting to the general reader.

The Pacific has achieved another triumph for the Collins line of steamers. She arrived out on the 20th, making the run in 9 days, 19 hours and 25 minutes. The Asia arrived out in 10 days and 11 hours —being 15 1-2 hours longer passage than the Pacific.

Later from California.

The steamship North America arrived at New York Monday evening, from Chagres, bringing California dates to the first of May.

The N. A. sailed from Chagres on the 24th ult. and has made the run home in eight days and six hours. She brought 400 passengers and $800,000 in specie and gold dust. The steamships Union, Oregon and Republic had arrived at Panama. The Union brought two hundred passengers and $150,000 in dust, the Oregon seventy-five passengers and $800,000 in dust, and the Republic two hundred passengers and $1,000,000—in all $2,050,000, besides what is in the hands of passsengers, probably $1,000,000 more.

The Legislature adjourned on the last day of April, after a session of four months; but a quorum was left in the Senate on the day of adjournment. The Legislature has passed an act to exempt homesteads and other property from forced sale in certain cases. It has also passed an Usury Law bill, fixing interest at 10 per cent., and allowing by special agreement 18 per cent. per annum.

Attorney General on the School Law.

Attorney Gen. Elmer has written the following opinion relative to our new School law, at the request of Dr. T. F. King, the State Superintendent of Schools. Dr. K. says:

I concur in the opinion given, reserving to myself the right in case a dispute or controversy is referred to me for decision, of revising it, and in case of conviction of changing it.

When it is intended to refer a case to the State Superintendent for decision, a statement should be drawn up, detailing minutely all the facts; this should be signed by both parties, or if either party declines doing so, that should be stated.

Pamphlet copies of the School Law, together with Instructions, are in preperation, and will be forwarded to those Town Superintendents whose names have been returned by the Township Clerks as required by law.

Editors throughout the State will confer a favor by giving the following an insertion in their papors.

Office of Att'y Gen'l of New Jersey, April 28th, 1851.

Sir—Agreeably to your request, I have carefully examined the act to establish Public Schools, passed in 1846, and the recent supplement. As it may save the superintendents and others interested, as well as ourselves, much trouble, to have an early expression of our opinions upon the proper construction of these acts, I give you the result of my best judgment, upon all points embraced in the many inquiries addressed to you, respecting which we conferred, so far as I recollect them. I do not mean, however, to preclude myself from hereafter approving a different construction, if after having a dispute brought regularly before you, you should see cause to differ upon any point, and I should, upon further reflection, be satisfied I have erred.

I am of opinion—

1st. The seventh section of the supplement does not affect the twelfth section of the act of 1846, the proportion of the school money to which schools under the care of religious societies are entitled by the twelfth section, is not apportioned to any district, does not go into the hands of the town superintendent, and is not to be applied by the district trustees; but is paid by the township collector to the the trustees of the school, to be used by them at their discretion. These schools must therefore be regarded as extraneous to the district, and the children of the patrons and proprietors therof as no part of the children of the district, although they are to be numbered as a part of the children of the township. If an incorporated district raises additional money by taxation, no part of that money can be applied to any such schools.

2d. It is only schools "already organized and established" when the act was approved in 1846, that are entitled to the benefits of the twelfth section.—

The word "already," it seems to me, is equivalent to "at this time." I cannot concur that this word may be referred to the time when the Certificate is made out by the Trustees. If the word "already" was omitted, then this section would undoubtedly mean precisely what opinion makes it now to mean. This amounts to a total rejection of a significant word, which is never allowable, when giving the word its proper meaning in the place where it is used, will violate no principle and work no obvious wrong. The section itself is an exception to the general object of the act, and is therefore to be strictly, rather than freely interpreted. If it was the intention of the legislature, by that section, to provide for a distribution of the school money, to all such denominational schools as might be at any time afterwards organized, as well as those "already organized," they have certainly made use of most inappropriate language. I suppose the words "already organized," to have been designed to show an exactly opposite intention, and that rightly interpreted, they effect their object. The religious schools entitled to the benefit of this section, must also be those of a denomination "whose church discipline provides for the appointment of trustees."

4. In case any of the town superintendents should omit to transmit to the board of Chosen Freeholders, a copy of the returns, showing the number of children, as required by the fourth section of the supplement, a strict construction of that section may, perhaps, justify the Chosen Freeholders in omitting that township, and in apportioning all the school money to those townships from which returns have been received. I should advise however that the neglect of the superintendent be not visited too severely on the children; but that the board should ascertain the actual number of children in the omitted township, from such other sources of information as may be accessible; as for instance, by a calculation founded on the census, or by the returns heretofore made by the state superintendent.

4. Where a district meeting has been held on the first Monday of April current, in pursuance of an advertisement of the trustees, or other citizens, or at the usual place without advertisemet, and three trustees have been elecled as required by the eighth section of the supplement, such trustees ought to be regarded as legally elected, although the town superintendent may have neglected to advertise such meetings for ten days. But if the trustees were not elected in the manner prescribed by that section, the only safe course will be for the old trustees to continue to exercise their office as if no new election had been held. Whatever might be the decision, on a direct question between two sets of trustees, claiming the office, it is a well established principle of law, that the official act of defacto officers, holding by color of title. and actually filling the office, will be held valid, although such officers may not have been legally appointed. The most prudent course, therefore, will be to raise no unprofitable questions, when it can be avoided; and for all parties to regard as legal, the acts of those trustees, who may be recognized as such by the town superintendent. An act of incorporation by such trustees, I suppose would be good, at least until vacated by a proceeding upon a quo warranto, although some, or all the trustees may not be legally elected.

5. There is no authority to establish new districts and to elect new trustees (except to fill a vacancy) after the first Monday of April in each year.

6. Trustees elected last year, and holding over in consequence of there being no valid election this year, may have a district incorporated, examine teachers, and do any other acts authorized by the supplement.

7. It is not necessary to entitle a person to vote at a district meeting or to hold the office of trustee, that he should have resided in the State one year and in the county five months, nor that he should have been actually assessed and paid a tax. He must be a resident in the district, with a view to remain, and he must be liable to taxation under the existing laws.

8. The trustees of a district are to decide whether they desire to be incorporated; but the certificate must be signed also by the town superintendent. or it cannot be recorded. Inasmuch as he alone, or in conjunction with the town committee, has the power of fixing the limits of the district, he is required to unite with the trustees in signing the certificate; but having established such limits, or altered them, as he and said committee deem expedient, he ought not to refuse his aid in effecting the incorporation.

9. The action of the town superintendent and committee, pursuant to section seventeen of the original act ought to be regarded as "final" only so far as to prevent the subsequent action of the superintendent see cause to alter the district afterwards, and before it is incorporated I should think they may legally do so.

10. There is nothing in the law requiring that the free schools should be kept open continuously the whole time they are taught. It would, however, I think, be a gross abuse of their powers for the trustees unnecessarily to divide or abridge the usual quarters In cases where parents may prefer to send their children to ordinary pay schools, willing to come under the control of the the trustees, and to employ licensed teachers, I see nothing to prevent the trustees from making such schools "free schools" for such children, and for so long only as their quota of money will allow, providing the rights of other children are not thereby injuriously affected, and a school or schools free for all desirous of attending are kept in the district as long and as well taught as if none of the children were sent to pay school. So that the schools are "free" and all are allowed equal privileges, the regulation of them is exclusively with the trustees, except that they are bound to employ licensed teachers.

11. After the town Superintendent has appropriated to the respective districts, their quotas of the school money, he should keep a distinct account with each district, and in case any money belonging to a district remains in his hands at the close of his term, he should pay it over to his successor, for the use of such district. His accounts ought to be settled yearly by the town committee. If any unappropriated money remains in his hands, he should pay it over to the township Collector, or to his successor, to be added to the school fund of the township for the ensuing year.

12. In case of a vacancy in the office of towm Superintendent, the vacancy may be filled as provided for in the thirteenth section of the act incorporating townships. Rev Law p 1024.

13. If the trustees purchase land, the deed should not be made to them, in trust, but to the corporation by its recorded name. If deeds have heretofore been made to individual in trust for the use of a district that remains uncharged, the survivors ought to make a deed to the corporation. Trustees ought to keep a regular book of minutes, and when incorporated, do all their acts in the corporate name.

(Signed) LUCIUS Q. C. ELMER.

To Theodore F. King, Superintendent of Public Schools.

A clergyman in Scotland desired his hearers never to call one another liars, but when any one said a thing that was not true, they ought to whistle. One Sunday he preached a sermon on the parable of the loaves and fishes; and being at a loss how to explain it, he said the loaves were not like those now a days, they were as big as the hills in Scotland. He had scarcely pronounced the words when he heard a loud whistle.

What's that?" said he, 'who calls me a liar!"

'It is I, Willy McDonald, the baker.'

'Weel, Willy, what objections ha ye to what I told ye?

'None, master John only I wanted to know what sort of ovens they had to bake those loaves in?'

LET US REASON.

The ingredients of which Dr. Rogers' Syrup of Liverwort, Tar, and Canchalagua is composed, have certain specific qualities which have been clearly established by the highest medical testimony.—California has given us something more valuable than gold, in the plant Canchalagua. It is the finest of vegetable tonics, and has the invaluable property of recruiting the strength, while it represses fever. Tar, as an expectorant, has no equal. It loosens and expels the mucus from the Lungs, and thus restores to them freedom of action. As an internal styptic, Liverwort has long been known; but besides arresting bleeding from the Lungs, it seems to exercise a beneficial influence over the whole Respiratory Apparatus. Thus, then, we have in this compound, the properties of strengthening, allaying fever, arresting hemorrhage, and soothing irritation. In this combination consists the rationale of its wonderful cures of Coughs' Colds, and incipient consumption, for the particulars and vouchers of which, see pamphlet to be had of Agents; also advertisment in another column.

Jenny Lind's Last Concerts.

The public are respectfully informed that the engagement between Mdlle. Jenny Lind and myself for 150 concerts, having contained certain conditions on which the same might be terminated either at the end of sixty or one hundred concerts, it has been determined to limit them to the latter number, and as ninety-one concerts (beside those given for charity) have already taken place, there are only nine remaining, of which positively but one will be given in New-York, viz: on Friday night, June 6, at Castle Garden. It has been further determined to give the last eight concerts in Philadelphia and Boston. The concert to be given for the benefit of the orchestra on Wednesday night, June 4, is of course, not included in the above. The public's obedient servant, P. T. BARNUM.

BABY JUMPER
AND
WALKER COMBINED.

The subscriber having invented and made application for a patent for the above article would hereby call the attention of the public to its superiority over all others.

READ THE EVIDENCE!!

The above invaluable Medicine has now been before the public sufficiently long to have its virtues thoroughly tested. It has been used by all classes of the community, under every possible variety of circumstances, and has everywhere proved itself a most powerful and efficient Cough Medicine. Lung Diseases of all kinds, yield to its influence, as mists pass away upon the rising of the Sun. This is no fiction. We give you below, letters from persons who are now living in the state of New York, and who declare, over their own signatures, all that we could possibly desire to say in its favor. Those who can read their statements and yet remain incredulous, must be beyond the reach of human testimony.

A LOVELY YOUNG LADY
CURED OF CONSUMPTION!

☞ The following is from the pen of WM. H. LEVISON, Esq, the distinguished Editor of the U. S. Military and Naval Argus under date New York, Jan. 26, 1850. What could be more conclusive?

"It is seldom we permit ourselves to occupy a space in these columns to speak in praise of any article in the patent medicine way; but when we see the life of a fellow-creature saved by the use of any medicine whatever, we consider it as our right. if not a duty, to give a simple statement of facts, that others may, in like manner be benefitted. The case which has induced us to pen this article, was that of a young lady of our acquaintance, who, by frequent exposure to the night air, contracted a cold, which settled on the Lungs before its ravages could be stayed. (This occurred two years ago this winter) Various remedies were used, but with very little effect or benefit. The cough grew worse, with copious expectoration, and the sunken eye, and pale, hollow cheek, told plainly that PULMONARY DISEASE was doing its worst on her delicate frame. The family physician was consulted and although he would not admit to the young lady that she really had the CONSUMPTION, yet he would give no encouragement as to a cure. At this crisis, her mother was persuaded to make use of a bottle of Dr. Roger' Compound Syrup of LIVEWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA and we are happy to state, she was perfectly cured in less than three months by this medicine alone, after even hope was destroyed. It is useless to comment on such a case as this, for the truth will reach where polished fiction never can. If any doubt the authenticity of this statement, let them call at this office.—U. S. Military and Naval Argus Office, No 79 Chatam N. Y.

COUGH AND DISEASE
OF 14 MONTHS STANDING.
CURED.
AFTER BEING GIVEN UP TWICE
BY EMINENT PHYSICIANS!

Albany. June 9th, 1849.

Messrs. A. L. Scovill & Co.—I herewith forward to you a Certificate of a Cure effected by your Compound Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua The Cough and expectoration was of fourteen months standing, and had baffled the skill of several of our eminent physicians in New York, Albany, and Cooperstown. I am the person in whom the cure was effected, and as I had previously no faith in patent medicines, I have since tried it on others, and have become satisfied of its value. Mine was as GREAT A CURE as ever was performed, as I had, during my sickness, been given up twice by my physicians. I have now commenced my business, after taking, I think about eight bottles.

Yours, repectfully, THOS. C. FAULDER.

BLEEDING AT THE LUNGS CURED.

☞ SEE HOW PROMPTLY IT ACTS!

Statement of Mr. A. Lang, Baker, No 388 Pearl street, N. Y. A few days before last Christmas, I was taken unwell, and soon commenced bleeding freely at the Lungs. I called in a Homœopathic Physician, but his medicine did not seem to help me. I read your advertisement. and thought I would try Dr. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA. Before I had takea up the third bottle, by bleeding had stopped, my Cough was gone, and I felt well as usual. My health is now good. I consider it a most excellent medicine, and cordially recommend it to my friends. [This statement was made to the Proprietors, March 12th 1850]

BABY WALKERS!

The greatest Invention of the Age.

THE subscriber has made application for a Patent and is receiving orders for the above article, which far surpasses the baby jumper by relieving the arms of the pressure of the jumper and in the convenience of having it in place, without spoiling the walls to suspend it. The contrivance forms a very neat article of furniture. Its form resembles somewhat a common parlor ottoman, though in the top is cut a hole, upon which the infant rests; its feet touching the ground. The saddle is supported on springs, which give the up and down movement at every mot on of the little occupant. The contrivance is placed upon castors, and can therefore be pushed around the room by the youngster, with the utmost ease — It is better calculated to teach children to walk, (without the great injury they sometimes receive, as it learns them gradually,) than any other method.

Prices from $5 to $10 each, according to style of trimmings. Orders punctually attended to.

Newark, April 3d, 1851. H. EILS.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels: such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any inomennt.

RUPTURES, are always to be treated with the surgical instruments known as Trusses and Supporters, and these require to be skillfully applied. With this view, the HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE, now established some thirty years, has under the various managers, presented to the public both male and female attendants to apply its instruments directly to the persons, which is preferable in all cases, and has also made improvement at different times, showing that advancement which study and practice only yield toward the relief of this malady.

With much pleasure the fact is now published, that recent improvements BUTLER'S TRUSS PADS have been made, and sufficiently tested upon numerous cases to warrant, through the cures already affected, their submission to the public, as being in adaptation and efficiency superior to any heretofore made known.

These improvements, recently patented, are now being applied at this office, 4 Vesey street, in cases of rupture, gravitation of the bowels, prolapsus uteri, prolapsus ani and piles.

The public may rely upon that care being made in their application, which will most likely tend to the final cure of the several complaints.

Hull's Truss Office, 4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St. Paul's Church, New-York.

FRED'K M BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The ladies' department is attended by a female qualified to fit the instruments, having so attended this office for many years.

Children trussed when only two weeks old, and invariably cured. [145is.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS,

or Medicated Compound.

INFALLIBLE for renewing, invigorating, and beautifying the HAIR, removing the scurf, dandruff, and all affections of the scalp; and curing eruptions on the skin, diseases of the glands, muscles and integuments, and releieving stings, cuts, bruises, sprains, &c. With this preperation "there is no such word as fail." The first journals in America, medical men of the highest eminence, prominent citizens of all professions, and ladies who have used it for years in their dressing rooms and nurseries, admit with one accord, that for imparting vigor, gloss, luxurience and curl to the hair, eradicating scurf and dandruff, healing wounds, curing contusions, sprains, stings, &c., and relieving diseases of the skin, the glands and the muscles, it has no equal, among the multitude of compounds advertised in the public prints, or used in private practice. In cheapness as well as efficacy, Barry's Tricopherous is unrivalled. The immense cash sales of the article have enabled the Inventor to supply it at retail, at 25 cents per bottle, which is from 50 to 100 per cent less than the price of any other preperation for the hair now in use. The scientific treatise on the hair and the skin, (embracing valuable directions for the culture and preservation of Nature's choicest ornament.) in which each bottle is enclosed, is alone worth the money.

The affinity between the membranes which constitute the skin, and the hair which draws its sustenance from this triple envelope is very close. All diseases of the hair originate in the skin of the head. If the pores of the scalp are clogged, or if the blood and other fluids do not circulate freely through the small vessels which feed the root with moisture, and impart life to the fibres, the result is scurf, dandruff, shedding of the hair, graveness, dryness and harshness of the ligaments, and entire baldness, as the case may be. Stimulate the skin to healthful action with the Tricopherous, and the torpid vessels, recovering their activity, will anihilate the disease. In all affections of the skin, and of the substrata of muscles and integuments, the process and the effect are the same.—It is upon the skin, the muscular fibre, and the glands, that the Tricopherous has its specific action, and in all affections and injury of these organs, it is a sovereign remedy.

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York; and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States and Canada. [134is

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

Among the numerous discoveries Science has made in this generation to facilitate the business of life—increase its enjoyment, and even prolong the term of human existence, none can be named of more real value to mankind, than this contribution of Chemistry to the Healing Art. A vast trial of its virtues throughout this broad country, has proven beyond a doubt, that no medicine or combination of medicine yet known, can so surely control and cure the numerous varieties of pulmonary disease which have hitherto swept from our midst thousands and thousands every year. Indeed, there is now abundant reason to believe a Remedy has at length been found which can be relied on to cure the most dangerous affections of the lungs. Our space here will not permit us to publish any proportion of the cures affected by its use, but we would present the following opinions of eminent men, and refer further enquiry to the circular which the Agent below named, will always be pleased to furnish free wherein are full particlars, and indisputable proof of these facts.

From the President of Amherst College, the celebrated PROFESSOR HITCHCOCK.

"James C. Ayer—Sir: I have used your CHERRY PECTORAL in my own case of deep-seated Bronchitis, and am satisfied from its chemical constitution, that it is an admirable compound for the relief of laryngial and bronchial difficulties. If my opinion as to its superior character can be of any service, you are at liberty to use it as you think proper.

EDWARD HITCHCOCK, L. L. D.,

From the widely celebrated

PROFESSOR SILLIMAN, M. D., L. L. D., Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, &c., Yale College, Memqee of the Lit, Hist. Med. Phil. and Scientific Societies of America and Europe.

"I deem the CHERRY PECTORAL an admirable composition from some of the best articles in the Materia Medica, and a very effective remedy for the class of diseases it is intended to cure."

New Haven, Ct., Nov. 1 1849.

MAJOR PATTISON, President of the S. C. Senate, states he has used the CHERRY PECTORAL with wonderful success, to and inflammation of the lungs.

From one of the first Physicans in Maine.

SACO, Me., April 26, 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell. Dear Sir: I am now constantly using your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, and prefer it to any other medicine for pulmonary complaints. From observation of many severe cases, I am convinced it will cure coughs, colds, and diseases of the lungs, that have put to defianice all other remedies.

I invariably reccommend its use in cases of consumption, and consider it much the best remedy known for that disease.

Respectfully yours, I. S. CUSHMAN, M. D.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impetency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cerd al cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without offspring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co. of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper

A SERMON

Concerning the Hell of Devils.

BY SOLYMAN BROWN, A M.

In entering upon the subject of the present discourse, I imagine to myself, that I can read in the countenances of all who hear me, written in characters of filial reverence for the Great and Common Parent, this reasonable request: "Whatever you may say of men, or angels, or devils; of earth, or heaven, or hell; we conjure you to leave the purity, the benevolence, the perfect goodness of the Eternal God, untarnished and untouched." You tell me, "He is our Father, and we would not hear him slandered."

I respond your sentiment, my fellow Christians, with every impulse of the heart; and did I believe it to be a tendency of those doctrines whch that heart espouses, to shock the moral sensibility of one reasoning being, in relation to the character of man's Creator, you would neither see me here, nor hear my voice.

If I speak of man, the workmanship of Jehovah, I can regard him only as the object of creating mercy; a mercy that can bring him wretchedness, neither in the form of fire nor scourge. If I speak of angels, I can view them merely as men made such, by the charming metamorphosis of Truth and Virtue; soaring, indeed, to regions of purer light, and conditions of happier existence. And if I speak of devils, I can but refer to men in voluntary ruin; self-indulging in the delinquency of guilt, and self-devoted to its inseperable sorrows. Should I allude to the earth, on which our fleeting mortality transpires; or to its sister orbs in the universe of matter, multiplied to numbers without number; I shall always regard them as the flowery and fruitful nurseries of sentient plants, germinating for immortality, which are always transplanted, by the Divine Husbandman, to a soil most perfectly adapted to their natures. Should I allude to heaven, it will be as the condition of social virtue in her eternal home, protected from the rudeness of criminal vulgarity, and sustained in the enjoyment of mutuallove. Or, should I speak of the condition of dissocial spirits, the providence of God will be considered as always connected with their existence, mitigating the rancour of misanthropy, and restraing tbe impetuosity of crime. The tenderest sensibilities of the good man's mind, can never be disturbed by any doctrine of the genuine scriptures, when rightly understood.

But I shall hazard the assertion, if hazard there can be in asserting truth, that the popular doctrine concerning hell and devils, as it stands related to God and man, to earth and heaven, is as derogatory to the character of the Divinity, as it is shocking to humanity; and as foreign from the import of Revelation, as it is hostile to the elements of Reason.

When I call it the popular doctrine, I do not intend to intimate that it exists only in vulgar and uneducated minds; for we frequently discover in plain and unsophisticated individuals—in honest and humble Christians—a far more scriptural theology than that embodied in their creeds. By a popular doctrine, I intend one that has received the sanction of councils of the church, of learned bishops, and eclesiastical assemblies, of formal creeds, and voluminous commentators; and this by so many sects and parties, that the general sentiment concerning hell and devils to which I allude, is mingled with the milk of infancy, and blended with the stories of the nursery, until it constitutes an inseperable portion of maturer thought. Should it be repeated in our hearing, on one of the remotest isles of the western ocean, where, perhaps, it never has been told, there is not in this assembly, one so young as to mistake it for novelty.

And let us suppose it repeated there, for the first time, to the children of nature. Seated on the verdant turf, in the shade of their bananas, repasting on the fallen fruit of the torrid zone, imagine that a stranger should thus address them:

"The Great Being who created your little island, with all its inhabitants, mountains, streams, and forests—the birds that sing in your groves, and the fish that sport in your waters—is the same Good Spirit that made the ocean which you see around you; the sun, the moon, and the stars. The same ocean that washes the shores of your island, extends to still greater islands, and even to mighty continents, thronged with multitudes of beings like yourselves. They too are supplied with food and raiment. Their groves are filled with melody, and their gales are loaded with fragrance. Wealth repays their industry, and happiness rewards their virtue.

"How good," exclaims the savage, "must this Great Being be!"

"But he has done much more than this," continues the stranger. "He has given more knowledge to others than to the people of your island. They are enabled by their skill to discover thousands of suns and stars, and many earths like this, which you never can have seen. And besides this, he has made a heaven and a hell which no mortal eye can see."

"And what is heaven?" "A place of happiness after death, where his chosen people shall live and rejoice for ever."

"How great and how good is that being," says the savage. "who has made a heaven where his people shall live forever and rejoice! But what is hell?"

"A place of unutterable wretchedness beyond the grave, where such as are not the chosen people of the great and good being, shall for ever weep and gnash their teeth. It is a lake of liquid fire! And, besides this, they are perpetually tormented by hideous devils, which were once the angels and happy spirits of heaven."

Is this history overdrawn? Perhaps the savage might question whether any being upon earth would give it his assent. But would it be overdrawn, were I to add, that all the heavenly hosts are supposed, by many, to gaze upon the agonies of the damned, and tune anew their harps, that the fires of their torments shall burn for ever and ever, fed and infuriated by the anger of Jehovah!

In such a hell there are some indeed who cannot believe. To such devils, there are some who dare to believe that fancy and frenzy have given but an imaginary existence. And yet, let none suppose that the dissocial condition of man beyond the grave, is divested of any of its horrors, by presenting it in the light of truth and revelation. If its misiries are of another kind, they may be the more poignant for being voluntary; and if Deity be not their author, they must be the more appalling as being self-induced and self-protracted.

The subject will be pursued in reference to a passage from the 34th Psalm, 21st verse:

"EVIL SHALL SLAY THE WICKED."

To slay is to produce death; but the death intended is not the seperation of soul and body, which is natural death. This will be sufficiently evident as well from observation as from scripture. Observation convinces us that the wicked are no more exposed to the necessity of natural disolution than the good—the very worst of men, than the very best. The amiable St. John and the infamous Iscariot; the noble Cicero and the treacherous Cataline; the godlike Trajan and the brutal Nero; Fenelon and Voltaire; Addison and Gloucester; Washington and Arnold—have sunk together to an inevitable grave; and even the innocence of smiling infancy, the promise of ripening manhood, the gentleness of virtuous age, can offer no successful resistence to the shafts of the mortal destroyer.

And scripture confirms our observation, by teaching plainly that the death denounced upon the wicked is of another character.

The language addressed to man in paradise, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," is the first example of the mention of death in the sacred volume. But man did eat and yet in the day he eat, when all these terms are literally expounded, he did not die. He lived many years, even to witness the murder of a son by a still older son. both of whom were born after the day of his eating.

The earliest use of the language generally interpreted as having relation to natural death, we thus discover to have another import in the sacred oracles; and, for the sake of being perfectly intelligible, let us call it spiritual death; as the name is of trifling moment, if the thing intended be properly defined.

As natural dissolution was said to conduct man to to the grave—so spiritual death, in the language of correspondence, is also said to conduct to the grave. The Hebrew word Scheol, and the Greek word Hades, are therefore translated into the English word grave, in numerous passages of scripture, and in many other passages they are rendered hell. The propriety of these translations. it is not my business to discuss. I shall treat the subject as though all mankind spoke but one language. The two following translations from the Hebrew of the Old Testament, exemplify the use of the word scheol, translated grave in the one and hell in the other.

Jacob says, in Gen. xxxvii. 35, "I will go down into the grave unto my son morning."

In the 2 ch. of Jonah, we read, "Then Jonah prayed unto the Lord his God out of the fish's belly. And said, I cried by reason of my affliction unto the Lord, and he heard me: out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardest my voice."

But lest the application of these terms should appear doubtful, I shall adduce a passage from the 9th Psalm, 17 verse, where the same word is rendered hell.

"The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God."

It is certainly most reasonable to conclude, that the Hebrew writers intended one and the same thing in all these examples, At any rate, the use of the same term should have led to uniform translation.

But the Greek word Hades has been subjected to the same diversity of rendering in the English version.

This occurs in 1st of Cor xv. 55. "Oh! death where is thy sting; oh! grave where is thy victory?" Here Hades is rendered grave. But another version of the same word is found in the following passages: Acts ii. 31. "He, (that is David) seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption." Again, in Rev, xx. 14. "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire."

I have given these quotations principally to show that the translators of the ancient and christian scriptures evince their embarrassment in labouring to accommodate their version to their own literal construction of the language of Revelation.

The real truth after all, is this, that as natural life consists in appropriating the blessings that are discovered in the light, and perfected by the heat of the natural sun—so spiritual life, which is the life regarded in the spiritual sense of scripture, consists in those more exalted blessings that are discovered in the light, and perfected by the heat of the spiritual sun, which is the Lord himself; and this life is denominated heaven, or the condition of truth and virtue.

So, on the other hand, as natural death consists in the privation of natural life, terminating in the grave, so spiritual death is the privation of spiritual life, terminating in a state of being which is the opposite of heaven, and may be called either the grave or hell, or by any other term that shall denote the condition of the wicked, a condition of error and of evil.

There exists this remarkable distinction between natural and spiritual life, that the one is transcient and involuntary, the other voluntary and immortal; and the like distinction subsits between natural and spiritual death.

Man lives on earth without his original choice, and his body decays and dies by an inevitable law of nature. But he can live in heaven or hell, that is, in the love of good or evil, only by his original choice, because moral good or evil without this choice and preference, would be impossible.

The moral liberty of man, as the origin of exalted joys resulting from voluntary virtue, has been discussed at length on a former occasion. It was seen not only to be consistent with mercy, but to constitu-e its essence.

It was shown that voluntary goodness is the proper fountain of every rational and valuable delight, ascending on the scale of immortal life, through all the felicities of an illimitable heaven.

On this occasion, while tracing the effects of voluntary evil, which is said to slay the wicked, I propose to restrict my remarks to the two following inquiries. 1. What is hell? And, 2. Who are devils; agreeably to the proper method of interpreting the language of inspiration?

And first, hell is not a place to which any man could go by pursuing any direction either in time or space.

He might take his departure from the solar system to any constellation in the starry sphere, and pursue his flight to intermieable ages, and no place, in the universe of God, would be clouded by its smoke, or heated by its fires, if his heart were virtuous within him.

He might touch at every system in the round of nature; inquire of the inhabitants of every planetary world; proclaim through the wide creation that he was in search of hell, and they would all assure him, that they had discovered around them, in the universe of matter, nothing but harmony and beauty; and that no lights were kindled in the compass of their vision, excepting the genial luminaries of nature, burning in their eternal spheres!

Again, hell is not a place which man could avoid, by choosing the most favourable position either in time or space.

He might fly from society or from solitude, from light or from darkness, from euery thing but himself; and hell would still be near him, if his heart were evil.

The companions of his guilt, wherever he might meet them, could tell him only, that they had never yet discovered where hell was not; and the good could only advise him to avoid it by flying from himself.

Hence the inference of reason, which is likewise the doctrine of revelation, that hell essentially consists in the consciousness of guilt, the love and practice of evil, and the society of the wicked.

Man, on earth, is never wholly evil, nor perfectly dismembered from the society of the good. This total separation is effected only at death.

Evil, therefore, slays the wicked, when dust returns to dust, and spirits congregate with their kindred. "When the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him." Ez. xviii. 20.

Before treating at large of the separate state of dissocial spirits beyond the grave, we propose to advert to the scripture docirine concerning devils.

It will be found that the word devils, in the plural number, is found but four times in the Jewish scriptures, even in the English version; and, in these examples, the Hebrew word, thus rendered, seems to denote idols, in the opinion of all Christian writers. The passages are these: Lev. xvii. 7, "And they shall no more offer their sacrifices to devils." Deut. xxxii. 17, "They sacrificed unto devils, not to God; to gods whom they knew not; to new gods that came newly up; whom your fathers feared not." 2 Chron. xi. 15, "And he ordained him priests for the high places, and for the devils, and for the calves which he had mace.". " And Ps. cvi. 37, "They sacrificed their sons and their daughters unto devils, and shed innocent blood, even the blood of their sons and of their daughters, whom they sacrificed unto the idols of Canaan."

The word devil, in the singular number, I believe, is not found so much as once in the Old Testament.

But in the Christian scriptures the Greek word Diabolos, which signifies an Accuser, and is rendered Devil in the English version, is used so frequently as to render its true import a subject of peculiar interest It corresponds exactly with the Hebrew word Satan, which we find in three passages of the Hebrew word Satan, which we find in three passages of the Hebrew scriptures, exclusive of the Book of Job. It denotes an Adversary, or an Accuser. It is said, 1 Chron. xxi. 1, "Satan provoked David to number Israel." Again, Ps. cix. 6, "Set thou a wicked man over him, and let Satan stand at his right hand." And again, in Zech. iii. 1, "And he showed me Joshua the high priest standing before the angel of the Lord, and Satan standing at his right hand to resist him."

With these seven examples from the ancient scriptures, let us compare the method of employing the two terms in the New Testament.

Christ said to Peter, "Get thee behind me, Satan thou art an offence unto me, for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men." Matthew xvi. 23.

To his apostles he said, "Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?"

In these examples, the terms Satan and Devil are applied to men.

Mary Magdalene is represented as having been divested of seven devils; and the maniac among the tombs of a legion. And of Judas we read, that Satan entered into him. In these instances men cannot be intended, but rather evil thoughts and evil desires.

Our Lord declared to the Jews, who said "we are Abraham's seed"—"ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do." Thus bad men are called the children of the devil, because actuated by evil toves.

In these quotations, I have intended to present fair specimens of the use of those two terms upon which hove been erected the popular superstitions that have peopled the imagination of man with a race of beings, mighty in power, terrible in aspect, heavenly in origin, and excluded from the providence of God.

The epic poem of Milton is at once the collected opinion and the acknowledged model of Christian creeds, in relation to fallen angels. And, strange as it may seem, the entire doctrine of the fall of angels, so familiar to modern theology, rests on the two following passages of the Christian scriptures: the one is found in Rev. xii. 3, "And there appeared another wonder in heaven, and behold, a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads, and his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth!" Let it be particularly noted that the stars, which he drew from heaven, were cast to the earth; although Milton assures us that the apostate angels were precipitated into hell.

The other passage is found in the Epistle of Jude, 6th verse. "And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day, even as Sodom and Gomorrah are set forth as an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire."

From these two expression, has resulted the opinion that there was once an insurrection in heaven, among the happy and holy spirits that respire its atmosphere of love.

An attempt to refute the opinion that incarnate demons have presented themselves to the vision of man, in any age or country, would be as unnecessary in an assembly of rational Christians, as to expose the story of St. Nicholas and Christmas Eve.

The truth is always obvious when properly expressed. And the true import of the scripture language cocerning devils, is consistent with reason and confirmed by experience. Evil thoughts and evil affections, wicked men and wicked spirits, are known to be seducers, accusers, and adversaries.—Hence they are devils, because this is all that the language can properly denote.

By evil spirits, in distinction from evil men, are intended the souls of the wicked, when divested of the material body, and existing in a spiritual state.

When the good man dies, and thus closes his vision upon outward nature, the heaven of angels opens to his view—himself an angel, free and happy in society with his kindred.

But the wicked are not his kindred. He had sustained the burden of their society during the trial of his virtue, only as a necessity of nature, connected with a probationary state. A mixture of good and evil, in every thing around him, was necessary to the choice of virtue. He has made that choice, and entered upon its proper joys.

When the bad man dies, he also consociates with his kindred—but good men are not his kindred. He had never loved them, never relished their society. The fervour of their devotion was with him a by-word—the warmth of their benevolence, the envied object of his scorn. And yet, he has his favourites, to whom death unites him; congenial natures, wedded in the infernal marriage.

Truth and virtue trouble him no longer. The songs of devotion die upon his ear; and the voice of benevolence he hears no more for ever. And yet, he is at home mingling with his fellows, hating as he is hated; grovelling in the low propensities of vulgar sensuality; an utter stranger to the dignity of rational intelligence, and the inborn nobility of voluntary virtue.

Wretched victim of moral insanity! And yet, no wrath from heaven imparts one pang to his self inflicted misery. He has all he can enjoy—more than he would enjoy, mingling with the societies of the highest heaven.

His only delight—meagre and monstrous indeed!—is that of loving error and of doing evil! his best companions, the partners of his guilt. Falsehood forms his understanding—malice regulates his heart. His wisdon is folly, and his love is enmity.

Hence the complexion of his anti-social state, of which fire, and brimstone are the natural representatives.

By fire is denoted the raging and devouring fury of angry and corroding passions. By brimstone, the low and loathsome sensuality of brutalizing appetites.

To conceive of these, in a state of unrelenting and unremitting depravity, we must confine our observation to the progress of a single mind, thus lost to virtue, and abandoned to the recklessness of crime. Let us suppose it to be that of the most accomplished wretch that has disgraced the human form, and defaced in himself the image of his Maker. Some Caligula, grieving that all his subjects had not a single neck that he might extinguish life throughout a vast empire, by a solitary stroke of his sabre. See him entering the world of spirits! Dark and ferocious in his aspect, whom will we select as his first of kin, the companion of his foulest folly and most accursed crimes? He or she that is most perfectly his like. One that is nearest to being a transcript of of himself; one that is selected first, because the most deserving of utter detestation; one that is most his enemy because most the enemy of all. The more remote relationship result from similar affinities; the affinities of hate—the alliances of enmity—the unisons of eternal discord.

With such a circle of monstrous propinquities, he moves along in an orbit of accumulating darkness, through regions of eternal death.

But his movements would be of little mement to men on earth, were it not for a single circumstace connected with man's condition as a moral agent, forming his character for eternity.

The soul of man, his spiritual part, exists in constant association with departed spirits, even here on earth.

Angelic natures influence his thoughts and stimulate his affections in the cause of truth and virtue. This heavenly influence is denoted by that scripture which assures us that the angels of God are ministering servants to the heirs of salvation. Indeed, the term angeltos denotes a messenger, and applies to spirits only, as they stand related to man on earth.

Hence, infernal spirits are likewise denominated angels. They too communicate with the mind of man, imparting their own insanities. They, too, stimulate his heart, rousing its angry passions.

Which of us, arrived at the age of manhood, has escaped their impulse? Which of us has never once perceived their dark insinuations, urging us to crime, to madnes, or despair? How many, even in this assembly, have found themselves surrounded—enticed, encouraged, to abandon hope and heaven and virtue and rush in frenzy upon reckless ruin!

And have we thus far escaped? and, because we have escaped, shall we deny the reality of temptation forgetting our gratitude to him who has sent his angels to allure us back to heaven?

Shall we listen to the dreams of poetry, the fables of superstition, and the legendary lore of ignorance, in relation to incarnate devils and an external hell, while we carry in our bosoms the deformity of the one, and the fires of the other, unobserved unresisted, and unquenched!

The value of all our knowledge must be measured by its utility; and the truth of all doctrines may be thus determined. By this rule, the prevailing doctrine of religious creeds concerning an outward hell and outward devils, must inevitably fall; reason and revelation will accelerate its ruin.

If heaven itself erects its empire in the heart, proclaiming to man, "Behold the kingdom of God is within you," and if the good man finds that all substantial happiness results from piety and virtue—so, also, should the wicked—(those who tremble at the name of death, and shrink from arbitrary punishment to no useful purpose, and with no virtuous design)—learn to extinguish the fires of hell in their own bosoms, and to vanquish devils in the conquest of their passions.

Happiness will crown their victory and hope and peace, and joy, will grace their triumph. Alexander, and Cæsar, and Napoleon, have conquered empires; but these will have vanquished hell—under the captain of their salvation, who leads captivity captive.

Hark! we hear the song of their deliverance: "Oh grave! where now is thy victory? Oh death! where is thy sting?"

Any character from the best to the worst, from the most ignorant to the most enlightened, may be given to any community even to the world at large, by the application of proper means which means are to a great extent at the command, and under the control of those who have influence in the affairs of men.—Busy Bee.

Fire Department.

An adjourned meeting of the inhabitants of Plainfield was organized at Laing's Hall on Monday evening, June 9th., by the appointment of Zachariah Webster Esq. Chairman, and Robert Anderson Esq. Secretary.

Since the last meeting, about 40 enterprising young men having formed themselves into a company, they tendered their services as firemen and agreed to take charge of the engines and apparatus whenever they should be put in good and efficient order for the extingutshment of fires. This offer was unanimously and gratefully accepted by the meeting and a committee appointed to carry into effect the conditions with the least possible delay. We doubt not the citizens generally will most cheerfully contribute the small individual amount necessary to enable them to have a permanent, able and efficient fire department.

☞ An interesting sermon will be found on the first page. Although, perhaps, not of the regular orthodox stamp, yet still, we think, it is well worthy an attentive perusal. If it shall tend to promote correct philosophical opinions on the subject of which it treats it will have answered the intent of its publication; and the time spent in its perusal will have been profitably employed. If any person shall dissent from its conclusions they are invited to express their opinions on the subject through the columns of the Gazette.

ENGLISH IGNORANCE OF AMERICA.—If it were not for the proof daily afforded, we should be unwilling to believe that there was such a want of information in Great Britain with regard to affairs in this country as is shown in extracts from their leading journals. The last evidence of this ignorance, is in a paragraph which is going the rounds of the English press, gravely stating that President Fillmore has determined to grant a charter to a company to run steamers from America to Galway!

But a short time since the London Times had an article on the American Press, founded upon the supposition that the N. Y. Herald was at its head. Certainly, if its knowledge of European affairs is no more correct than of this country, its reputation as a jouraal is vastly overrated. One of our country editors of a weekly newspaper has a better knowledge of English politics than the London Times has of this country.—Newark Mercury.

MOVEMENTS AMONG THE INDIA RUBBER OPERATIVES OF NEW-BRUNSWICK, N. J.—A meeting of the Employees of the "New-Bruaswick India Rubber. Co." was held on the 5th inst., J. L. CARRAGAN, President, N. W. Meeker, Secretary. A series of resolutions were adopted by these Industrials, (who are engaged in the manufacture of India rubber shoes,) complaining that their wages have been cut down one-half, and protesting their unwillingness to work for less than their former wages, while the profits upon their labor have been swelled enormously. The resolves also affirm that the various Rubber Companies have formed a combination, and only employ those who accede to their terms. The resolves call the attention of the liberal minded capitalists to those facts, and conclude as follows:

"Resolved, That we consider it the duty of all good citizens to resist oppression in what place or form soever it may appear; and we call upon our fellow-workmen, not only in the Rubber Business, but in all trades, to unite for common defense, against all who seek to oppress the poor man, and combine to monopolize any branch of trade, and seek to put down private enterprise by the power of money."

Jeny Lind and Barnum—New Arrangement.

PHILADELPHIA, June 9.

By a mutual arrangement made to-day between Jenny Lind and Barnum, their engagement terminates with to-night's Concert. She is to carry out the arrangements made by Barnum and give the two Concerts advertised here. Her intention is to give several Concerts in other portions of the country on her own account. Barnum goes to the World's Fair per the North America on the 17th inst.

Paine's Light at Washington—The Pendulum Experiment.

WASHINGTON, June 9.

Mr. Paine, the great shot at, is here, proposing to the Government to illuminate light houses for little or nothing. He exhibits his light which is certainly either an extraordinary discovery or a brilliant humbug.

The Pendulum experiment was tried in the rotunda ot the Capitol yesterday, the only day on which the building is closed, so as to avoid the currents of air. The pendulum was set due north and south, in six hours it varied to northeast and southwest, or nearly so.

Terrible Tragedy in Roxbury.

Boston, June 8.—A fearful tragedy took place last evening in Roxbury. A young man, representing himself as a stranger from Hope, Me., called at the house of Dr. A. S. Cumming, a very respectable physician, and requested medical advice. The Doctor being out, Mrs. C. invited him to step into the parlor, where he sat down, took off his cravat, and complained of pain in his side. At that moment a little daughter of Dr. C. came running into the room when the man instantly drew a razor from his pocket, and cut the child's throat from ear to ear! The mother sprang forward, and in her efforts to protect her child, was badly cut in the hands. She then fled from the house with the servant girl, pursued by the assassin. The neigbors were alarmed, and rushed to the spot, when the man cut his own throat, and fell dead in the street. The girl also died instantly; she was an only child. The man's name is supposed to be Ephraim G. Doggett. He was dobtless insane.

Arrival of the Pacific.

The Collins steamer Pacific arrived at her wharf on Saturday at 12 o'clock, making the passage in PRCISELY TEN DAYS. This makes the third voyage in which she has beaten all her competitors.

The Niagara arrived out on the 25th, after a passage of twelve days.

☞ June 7. The President has decided in favor of detached wings to the capitol—the detachments to be covered by colonnades, so as to present the tout ensemble of the whole building, and yet preserve the old capitol. The plan of a young architect of New-Hampsnire, is of this character, and probably it will be selected.

☞ Private accounts from Mexico convey the distressing intelligence that a great drouth has for a long time prevailed in the State of Zacatecas. No rain had fallen since last August, and a general famine was impending. Corn was worth $9 per bushel.

☞ St. Louis, June 7. The Mississippi river still continues to rise, and the whole length of our levee is submerged; the merchants in that vicinity are, consequently, moving their goods from the ground floors. A large amount of produce on the levee has already been injured by the high state of water, and the difficulty in shipping and landing goods has nearly caused a suspension of business.

☞ James Jasper Orcott, who has been tried and convicted for arson in the first degree, was sentenced June 7., at Rome, to be hung on the 1st of August next.

☞ June 9. The Cholera is on the increase throughout the West, and is very fatal. Among the victims at Paducha, Kentucky, is Dr. Newton Lane, the Democratic candidate for Congress at the last election, from Louisville district.

The Cholera is reported on numerous boats on the Western waters. The Fanny Smith, at Louisville, from New Orleans, had two fatal cases; the Pride of the West 14, and the John Sawsey and North River a number of cases. At Desert, a small town on White River, Arkansas, three deaths had occurred, A fatal case occurred in Louisvile, May 30th. Several cases have been reported at Clarksville, Tenn., Quincy, Ill.. and other places.

Pigeons are doing immense damage to late sown fields of grain and peas. They will pick up an acre's sowing in a few minutes. Farmers, in many places, are obliged to guard their fields against their depredations. The young are now beginning to fly, doubling the numbers, which before were countless.—Watertown Jeffersonian.

The burning waste of Clackman, an extensive coal field in England, which has been on fire for thirty years, has been lately extinguished by means of carbonic acid gas, with which the pits were filled.

COMPLIMENT TO MERIT.—Wm. Bond, Esq., the talented Cambridge (Mass.) astronomer, has been unanimously elected a correspondent of the French Academy of Sciences for the department of Astronomy. He was a competitor, with sixteen others from England, Germany, &c., for the honor.

THE FLOOD AT THE WEST.—The St. Louis, Iowa and Illinois papers are filled with details of damage by the late freshet in that region.

The small streams of the interior have all overflowed their banks and put a stop to travelling the roads. The town of Churchville and the country back of it, for eight or ten miles, presents the appearance of a vast lake of water, with here and there a patch of trees or a building.

The farms are almost ruined, and it is supposed that the work on the River impovement from St. Francisville down, has suffered very much. At Farmington, on the Des Moines, the River is four feet higher than it was ever known, and, a letter says, was still rising with great rapidity. The towns of Bonaparte, Bentonport, Iowaville, Ottumwa, and probably others, are completely submerged.

☞ A NEW INSTRUMENT OF DESTRUCTION.—A rifle capable of firing 25 balls every minute, including the time of loading was shown us a day or two since as an important improvement in fire arms. Under the barrel, in the place of the ordinary ramrod, is an iron tube containing the 25 balls, and by cocking the gun a ball is brought up in the barrel and the same operation also brings up from the breech a "pill" of priming. The charge of powder is contained in the ball, which is not round, but oblong, and having an opening which is corked shut after the powder has been introduced. The quantity of powder is only 28 grains, and drives the ball with greater force than the large charge in an ordinary gun. This is a new invention, and the manufacturing of the gun is now beginning at Williamsburg, and we learn that a large order has been received at the foundry of Gardner, Harrison & Co. of this city, for cast-breeches, &c. for it. The day of its exhibition to ourselves, the owner and part inventor, had been down on the meadows with ten men having ordinary muskets. He fired 50 balls while they fired 40; all of his, and only 34 of theirs, struck the target. Upon a slight examination we could see no objection to the instrument.—Newark Advertiser.

It is said the Erie Canal has paid into the treasury of New York, the enormous sum of $41,000,000.

PINE APPLES.—The schooner Village Belle, Capt. Wedmore, arrived Sunday from Elethura, brought twenty-seven hundred dozen pine apples. The schooner Gil Blas, Captain Baker, arrived yesterday from Abaco, with eigtheeen hundred dozen pine apples.—N. Y. Tribune.

☞ Spain once supplied England with fine wool; but it has lost the trade, and from a curious cause. The king of Spain made a present of a few Merino sheep to the king of Saxony, and hence the wool of Saxony threw the Spanish wool out of the English market. The import of Saxony wool in 1812 amouted to only aboul 20 lbs.; in 1832 it reached above 26 millions of lbs.

Earth is the habitation, the natural inheritance of all mankind, of ages present and to come: a habitation belonging to no man in particular, but to every man; and one in which all, have an equal right to dwell.—GREY.

☞ The less useful things are the more they interest us. The clown that throws a double somerset is much better patronized than the philosopher who undertakes to revolutionize society. The owner of the "industrious fleas" realized a fortune; had he got up an exhibition of the same number of industrious men, he would have brought up in the court of bankruptcy.

The Printer and the Dutchman.

A Journeyman printer lately set out on foot for the interior of Ohio, a distance of five hundred miles, with an old brass rule, and three dollars cash in his pocket. He soon found himself in Pennsylvania, and being weary, called at the inn of a Dutchman, whom he found quietly smoking his pipe, when the following dialogue ensued.

"Vell, Mishter Valking Sthick, vat you vant?"

"Refreshments and repose."

"Supper and lodging, I reckon,"

"Yes, sir, supper and lodging."

"Pe you a Yankee peddler, mit chewelry in your pack to chout te gals?"

"No, Sir; no Yankee peddler."

"A singing teacher, too lazy to work?"

"No, Sir."

"A chenteel shoemake, vot stchay till Saturday night, and laysh drunk in de porch ofer Sunday?"

"No, sir, or I should have mended my boots before this. But I am not disposed longer to submit to this outlandish inquisition. Can you give me a supper and lodging?"

"Tshortley. But vot pe you? A book achent, taking honest people's money for a little larnin' that only makes 'em lazy?"

"Try again, your worship."

"A dentist, breaking to people's chaws, a tollar a schnag, and running off mit old Shambock's daughter!"

"No, sir, no tooth-puller."

"Kernologus, den, feeling te young folks heads, like so many cabbitch, and tcharging twenty-five cents for telling their fortunes, like a blam'd Yankee?"

"No; no phrenologist, either, your excellency."

"Vell, den vot de t fle are you? Choost tell, and you shall have some of de best sassage for supper, and stchay all night, free gratis, mitout tcharghing you a cent; mit a chill of visky to start on before breakfast."

"Very well, your honor. To terminate the colloquy without further circumlocution, I am a humble disciple of Faust—a professor of the art preservative of all arts—a typographer, at your service!"

"Votsch dat?"

"A printer, sir, a man that prints books and newspapers."

"A man vot prints noospapers! Oh! yaw, yaw! By Choopiter—aye! aye datsch it! a man vot prints nooshpapers—Yaw, yaw! Valk up, valk up, Mishter Brinter! Cheems, take de chentleman's pack off. Chohn, pring some junks to de fire. A man vot prints nooshpapers! I vish I may be shot if I didn't tink you vas a tam tailor!"

Sir William Berkley, the Colonial Governor of Virginia, in writing to the home government, in 1675, said, "I thank God we have no free schools or printing presses, and I hope we shall not have any for a hundred years, for learning has brought disobedience and heresy, and sects into the world; and printing has divulged them, and libelled governments. God keep us from both." Lord Effingham, who was governor in 1683, was ordered expressly, "to allow no person to use a printing press on no occasion whatever.—Albany Dutchman.

☞ The Hightstown Record says the farmers in that vicinity, speak encouragingly of the prospects of the coming harvest. They say that the wheat and rye never looked better than at present, and that the grass crops promise to be unusually fine.

A few Golden Rules transmuted Into Brass.

THE GOLDEN RULE.

1. Never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day.

2. Never trouble another for a trifle which you can do for yourself.

3. Never spend your money before you have it, if you would make the most of your means.

4. Nothing is troublesome that we do willingly.

THE BRAZEN RULE.

1. Put off till to-morrow the dun who won't be done to-day.

2. When another would trouble you for a trifle, never trouble yourself

3. Spend your money before you have it; and when you have it, spend it again, for by so doing you enjoy your means twice, instead of only once.

4. You have only to do a creditor willingiy, and he will never be troublesome.

Instinct in Sheep.

About the middle of April last I observed a young lamb eentangled amongst the briers. It had seemingly struggled for liberty until it was quite exhausted. Its mother was present, endeavoring with her head and feet to disentangle it. After having attempted in vain for a long time to effect this purpose she left it and ran away, baaing with all her might. We fancied there was semething peculiarly doleful in her voice. Thus sho proceeded across three large fields, and through four strong hedges, until she came to a flock of sheep. From not having been able to follow her, I could not watch her motions when with them. However, she left them in about five minetes accompanied by a ram that had two powerful horns. They returned speedily towards the poor lamb; and as soon as they reached it, the ram immediately set about liberating it, which he did in a few minutes by dragging away the briers with its horns.—Magazine of natural History.

To afford every Amercan citixen of enterprise, the opportunity of securing and independent freehold, it seems, to me best to abandon the idea of raising a future revenue of the Public Lands.—Jacksons Message 1832.

☞ Example moves more than homily, though it be less clamorous.

LET US REASON.

The ingredients of which Dr. Rogers' Syrup of Liverwort, Tar, and Canchalagua is composed, have certain specific qualities which have been clearly established by the highest medical testimony.—California has given us something more valuable than gold, in the plant Canchalagua. It is the finest of vegetable tonics, and has the invaluable property of recruiting the strength, while it represses fever. Tar, as an expectorant, has no equal. It loosens and expels the mucus from the Lungs, and thus restores to them freedom of action. As an internal styptic, Liverwort has long been known; but besides arresting bleeding from the Lungs, it seems to exercise a beneficial influence over the whole Respiratory Apparatus. Thus, then, we have in this compound, the properties of strengthening, allaying fever, arresting hemorrhage, and soothing irritation. In this combination consists the rationale of its wonderful cures of Coughs' Colds, and incipient consumption, for the particulars and vouchers of which, see pamphlet to be had of Agents; also advertisment in another column.

The mortality of three large cities last week was as follows:

NEW YORK.—Deaths 312. There were only 9 from small-pox. Of the deceased 85 were men, 59 women, 97 boys and 71 girls.

BABY JUMPER AND WALKER COMBINED.

The subscriber having invented and made application for a patent for the above article would hereby call the attention of the public to its superiority over all others.

It forms a neat article of furniture, somewhat resembling an ottoman; it being upon castors, the little occupant can move it in all directions around the room with the utmost ease. The top opens by a spring and then closes around under the child's arms and locks. The child sits in an upright position upon a saddle or seat, stuffed perfectly soft, bearing no weight on his arms, with its feet resting upon the floor. The child can easily raise the article, and as there is a spring in each leg it can use it as a jumper for its amusement, or push itself around the room, thus learning to walk without other asistance. As the springs buoys the child up, thereby preventing too much weight upon its feet, it gradually learns to use its legs and soon learns to walk. The child can in no manner receive injury; a trial or inspection will satisfy the most skeptical of its superior utility.

WONDERFUL CURES!

AND

CANCHALAGUA;

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to

CONSUMPTION.

NOTHING LIKE IT.

CURE FOLLOWS CURE!

READ THE EVIDENCE!!

The above invaluable Medicine has now been before the public sufficiently long to have its virtues thoroughly tested. It has been used by all classes of the community, under every possible variety of circumstances, and has everywhere proved itself a most powerful and efficient Cough Medicine. Lung Diseases of all kinds, yield to its influence, as mists pass away upon the rising of the Sun. This is no fiction. We give you below, letters from persons who are now living in the state of New York, and who declare, over their own signatures, all that we could possibly desire to say in its favor. Those who can read their statements and yet remain incredulous, must be beyond the reach of human testimony.

A LOVELY YOUNG LADY

CURED OF CONSUMPTION!

"It is seldom we permit ourselves to occupy a space in these columns to speak in praise of any article in the patent medicine way: but when we see the life of a fellow-creature saved by the use of any medicine whatever, we consider it as our right, if not a duty, to give a simple statement of facts, that others may, in like manner be benefitted. The case which has induced us to pen this article, was that of a young lady of our acquaintance, who, by frequent exposure to the night air, contracted a cold, which settled on the Lungs before its ravages could be stayed. (This occurred two years ago this winter.) Various remedies were used, but with very little effect or benefit. The cough grew worse, with copious expectoration, and the sunken eye, and pale, hollow cheek, told plainly that PULMONARY DISEASE was doing its worst on her delicate frame. The family physician was consulted and although he would not admit to the young lady that she really had the CONSUMPTION, yet he would give no encouragement as to a cure. At this crisis, her mother was persuaded to make use of a bottle of Dr. Rogers' Compound Syrup of LIVEWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA and we are happy to state, she was perfectly cured in less than three months by this medicine alone, after even hope was destroyed. It is useless to comment on such a case as this, for the truth will reach where polished fiction never can. If any doubt the authenticity of this statement, let them call at this office.—U. S. Military and Naval Argus Office, No 79 Chatam N. Y.

COUGH AND DISEASE

OF 14 MONTHS STANDING.

CURED.

AFTER BEING GIVEN UP TWICE

BY EMINENT PHYSICIANS!

Albany, June 9th, 1849.

Messrs. A. L. Scovill & Co.—I herewith forward to you a Certificate of a Cure, effected by your Compound Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua. The Cough and expectoration was of fourteen months standing, and had baffled the skill of several of our eminent physicians in New York, Albany, and Cooperstown. I am the person in whom the cure was effected, and as I had previously no faith in patent medicines, I have since tried it on others, and have become satisfied of its value. Mine was as GREAT A CURE as ever was performed, as I had, during my sickness, been given up twice by my physicians. I have now commenced my business, after taking, I think about eight bottles

Yours, repectfully, THOS. C. FAULDER.

BLEEDING AT THE LUNGS CURED.

☞ SEE HOW PROMPTLY IT ACTS!

Statement of Mr. A. Lang, Baker, No 388 Pearl street, N. Y. A few days before last Christmas, I was taken unwell, and soon commenced bleeding freely at the Lungs. I called in a Homœopathic Physician, but his medicine did not seem to help me. I read your advertisement, and thought I would try Dr. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA. Before I had taken up the third bottle, by bleeding had stopped, my Cough was gone, and I felt well as usual. My health is now good. I consider it a most excellent medicine, and cordially reccommend it to my friends. [This statement was made to the Proprietors, March 12th 1850.]

He solicits the patronage of the community and of the country dealers, with the assurance to all, that he is able to supply them with the above articles, either wholesale or retail, at New York prices.

Newark, April 3d, 1851. H. ELLS.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels; such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt.

RUPTURES, are always to be treated with the surgical instruments known as Trusses and Supporters, and these require to be skillfully applied. With this view, the HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE, now established some thirty years, has under the various managers, presented to the public both male and female attendants to apply its instruments directly to the persons, which is preferable in all cases, and has also made improvement at different times, showing that advancement which study and practice only yield toward the relief of this malady.

With much pleasure the fact is now published, that recent improvements BUTLER'S TRUSS PADS have been made, and sufficiently tested upon numerous cases to warrant, through the cures already affected, their submission to the public, as being in adaptation and efficiency superior to any heretofore made known.

These improvements, recently patented, are now being applied at this office, 4 Vesey street, in cases of rupture, gravitation of the bowels, prolapsus uteri, prolapsus ani and piles.

The public may rely upon that care being made in their application, which will most likely tend to the final cure of the several complaints.

Hull's Truss Office, 4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St. Paul's Church, New-York.

FRED'K M BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The ladies' department is attended by a female qualified to fit the instruments, having so attended this office for many years.

Children trussed when only two weeks old, and invariably cured. [145is.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS,

or Medicated Compound.

INFALLIBLE for renewing, invigorating, and beautifying the HAIR, removing the scurf, dandruff, and all affections of the scalp; and curing eruptions on the skin, diseases of the glands, muscles and integuments, and releieving stings, cuts, bruises, sprains, &c. With this preperation "there is no such word as fail." The first journals in America, medical men of the highest eminence, prominent citizens of all professions, and ladies who have used it for years in their dressing rooms and nurseries, admit with one accord, that for imparting vigor, gloss, luxurience and curl to the hair, eradicating scurf and dandruff, healing wounds, curing contusions, sprains, stings, &c., and relieving diseases of the skin, the glands and the muscles, it has no equal, among the multitude of compounds advertised in the public prints, or used in private practice. In cheapness as well as efficacy, Barry's Tricopherous is unrivalled. The immense cash sales of the article have enabled the Inventor to supply it at retail, at 25 cents per bottle, which is from 50 to 100 per cent. less than the price of any other preperation for the hair now in use. The scientific treatise on the hair and the skin, (embracing valuable directions for the culture and preservation of Nature's choicest ornament.) in which each bottle is enclosed, is alone worth the money.

The affinity between the membranes which constitute the skin, and the hair which draws its sustenance from this triple envelope is very close. All diseases of the hair or ginate in the skin of the head. If the pores of the scalp are clogged, or if the blood and other fluids do not circulate freely through the small vessels which feed the root with moisture, and impart life to the fibres, the result is scurf, dandruff, shedding of the hair, graveness, dryness and harshness of the ligaments, and entire baldness, as the case may be. Stimulate the skin to healthful action with the Tricopherous, and the torpid vessels, recovering their activity, will anihilate the disease. In all affections of the skin, and of the substrata of muscles and integuments, the process and the effect are the same.—It is upon the skin, the muscular fibre, and the glands, that the Tricopherous has its specific action, and in all affections and injury of these organs, it is a sovereign remedy.

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York; and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States and Canada. [134is

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

Among the numerous discoveries Science has made in this generation to facilitate the business of life—increase its enjoyment, and even prolong the term of human existence, none can be named of more real value to mankind, than this contribution of Chemistry to the Healing Art. A vast trial of its virtues throughout this broad country, has proven beyond a doubt, that no medicine or combination of medicine yet known, can so surely control and cure the numerous varieties of pulmonary disease which have hitherto swept from our midst thousands and thousands every year. Indeed, there is now abundant reason to believe a Remedy has at length been found which can be relied on to cure the most dangerous affections of the lungs. Our space here will not permit us to publish any proportion of the cures affected by its use, but we would present the following opinions of eminent men, and refer further enquiry to the circular which the Agent below named, will always be pleased to furnish free wherein are full particlars, and indisputable proof of these facts.

From the President of Amherst College, the celebrated PROFESSOR HITCHCOCK.

"James C. Ayer—Sir: I have used your CHERRY PECTORAL in my own case of deep-seated Bronchitis, and am satisfied from its chemical constitution, that it is an admirable compound for the relief of laryngial and bronchial difficulties. If my opinion as to its superior character can be of any service, you are at liberty to use it as you think proper.

EDWARD HITCHCOCK, L. L. D.,
From the widely celebrated

PROFESSOR SILLIMAN, M. D., L. L. D., Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, &c., Yale College, Member of the Lit, Hist. Med. Phil. and Scientific Societies of America and Europe.

"I deem the CHERRY PECTORAL an admirable composition from some of the best articles in the Materia Medica, and a very effective remedy for the class of diseases it is intended to cure."

New Haven, Ct., Nov. 1 1849.

MAJOR PATTISON, President of the S. C. Senate, states he has used the CHERRY PECTORAL with wonderful success, to and inflammation of the lungs.

From one of the first Physicans in Maine.

SACO, Me., April 26, 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell. Dear Sir: I am now constantly using your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, and prefer it to any other medicine for pulmonary complaints. From observation of many severe cases, I am convinced it will cure coughs, colds, and diseases of the lungs, that have put to defiance all other remedies.

I invariably reccommend its use in cases of consumption, and consider it much the best remedy known for that disease.

Respectfully yours, I. S. CUSHMAN, M. D.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impetency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cordial cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without offspring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co., of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper.

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to

CONSUMPTION.

NOTHING LIKE IT.

CURE FOLLOWS CURE!

READ THE EVIDENCE!!

The above invaluable Medicine has now been before the public sufficiently long to have its virtues thoroughly tested. It has been used by all classes of the community, under every possible variety of circumstances, and has everywhere proved itself a most powerful and efficient Cough Medicine. Lung Diseases of all kinds, yield to its influence, as mists pass away upon the rising of the Sun. This is no fiction. We give you below, letters from persons who are now living in the state of New York, and who declare, over their own signatures, all that we could possibly desire to say in its favor. Those who can read their statements and yet remain incredulous, must be beyond the reach of human testimony.

A LOVELY YOUNG LADY

CURED OF CONSUMPTION!

☞ The following is from the pen of WM. H. LEVISON, Esq., the distinguished Editor of the U. S. Military and Naval Argus under date New York, Jan. 26, 1850. What could be more conclusive?

"It is seldom we permit ourselves to occupy a space in these columns to speak in praise of any article in the patent medicine way; but when we see the life of a fellow-creature saved by the use of any medicine whatever, we consider it as our right, if not a duty, to give a simple statement of facts, that others may, in like manner be benefitted. The case which has induced us to pen this article, was that of a young lady of our acquaintance, who, by frequent exposure to the night air, contracted a cold, which settled on the Lungs before its ravages could be stayed. (This occurred two years ago this winter.) Various remedies were used, but with very little effect or benefit. The cough grew worse, with copious expectoration, and the sunken eye, and pale, hollow cheek, told plainly that PULMONARY DISEASE was doing its worst on her delicate frame. The family physician was consulted and although he would not admit to the young lady that she really had the CONSUMPTION, yet he would give no encouragement as to a cure. At this crisis, her mother was persuaded to make use of a bottle of Dr. Rogers' Compound Syrup of LIVEWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA and we are happy to state, she was perfectly cured in less than three months by this medicine alone, after even hope was destroyed. It is useless to comment on such a case as this, for the truth will reach where polished fiction never can. If any doubt the authenticity of this statement, let them call at this office.—U. S Military and Naval Argus Office, No 79 Chatam N. Y.

CURED.

AFTER BEING GIVEN UP TWICE

BY EMINENT PHYSICIANS!

Albany, June 9th, 1849.

Messrs. A. L. Scovill & Co.—I herewith forward to you a Certificate of a Cure, effected by your Compound Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua. The Cough and expectoration was of fourteen months standing, and had baffled the skill of several of our eminent physicians in New York, Albany, and Cooperstown. I am the person in whom the cure was effected, and as I had previously no faith in patent medicines, I have since tried it on others, and have become satisfied of its value. Mine was as GREAT A CURE as ever was performed, as I had, during my sickness, been given up twice by my physicians. I have now commenced my business, after taking, I think about eight bottles

Statement of Mr. A. Lang, Baker, No 388 Pearl street, N. Y. A few days before last Christmas, I was taken unwell, and soon commenced bleeding freely at the Lungs. I called in a Homœopathic Physician, but his medicine did not seem to help me. I read your advertisement, and thought I would try Dr. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA Before I had takea up the third bottle, by bleeding had stopped, my Cough was gone, and I felt well as usual. My health is now good. I consider it a most excellent medicine, and cordially recommend it to my friends. [This statement was made to the Proprietors, March 12th 1850.]

From the Drawing Room Companion,

THE MAIN CHANCE.

BY MRS. E. WELLMOT

Many people are as fond of spending money as making it. They seem forever tormented with wants. No sooner do they begin to accumulate, but they see something for which they must spend it. Such individuals have little idea of the main chance. There used to be a vice we called stinginess, but it is a sin for which people are not so responsible as formerly. Prodigality seems to be the order of the present day. Everybody begins where their fathers ended, and hence proceed mischievous results. All this comes from false ideas, which society has made essential to our standing in it. Some dignify this order of things as the progress of the age. The machine of human life has not been inaptly compared "to those square looking caravans one sometimes meets on a road, in which they transport wild beasts from place to place—and dull, heavy and flat as they look, the inmates continue their old habits, the monkeys play their tricks, and the panthers lick their jaws for human blood, though cramped and confined in their cages. So the vices and follies from which we do not break loose, do their worst inside this formal conveyance, the main chance."

Benjamin Flash, and Joshua Trift, both sat out in life together; they went from the same district school, kept in the same village, but not exactly from the same influences they had imbibed at home. Mr. Flash, senior, was a man who kept a well spread table, a fine horse and carriage, and besides this, he owned three rosy daughters, and one hopeful son, Benjamin, whom he determined should not be spoiled in a country village. Mr. Flash hired an office and was familiarly known as 'the squire." Ben and Joshua had both procured situations as clerks in city stores. Joshua's father was a plain farmer, who minded the main chance, and never indulged himself or his family in superfluities. And this was the advice they each received in leaving the parental roof:

"Ben," said the squire, "business is an affair of habit: you must acquire the principles upon which it is done, but never suffer yourself to become so wedded to the mere acquisition of money as to lose your freedom. Never be niggardly, my son; if other young men invite you to partake of simple pleasures, do so. Of course, you will distinguish between what is simple and what is mean. Avoid dissipation; but if you now and then desire to go to the opera, you can do so; and if your salary is insufficient to meet these demands, for all that is reasonable, remember you have a father who will endorse your bills."

Not so said farmer Trift, when parting from his son.

"Josh," said the old man, "you are going into a city full of temptations, and I tremble lest you may become ensnared in vile company. Avoid such exposures—carefully husband all you get, and do not freequent theaters or expensive entertainments. You are fond of reading—join that band of young men who frequent the well-stored library, for the purpose of adding something to your knowledge. Select a good boarding place, if possible, in some quiet family, where good order pervades the household. Your salary will be adequate to meet your expenses, and with prudence you can lay by a small sum the first year. Be faithful to your employers, and always diligent in your business."

Both started in life, but as you perceive, under different influences. And this home education followed them. Joshua obeyed his father's directions, lived prudently, worked faithfully, and in a few years was head clerk in the large firm where he first entered. Young Flash carried out the advice he received. His love for simple pleasures became sinful, he changed his place very often, seemed never to gain the confidence of his employers, and became a gay, dashing spendthrift, so that his father was unable to pay for his "simple pleasures," and he took him home, where he became a mere servener in a country lawyer's office, and was ever after called "the spoiled child."

One of them minded the main chance—the other thought it of no consequence, and you witness the end. This passion for shows and costly amusements has ruined legions. Many a clerk has laid out the hard saved earnings of a week upon a ride on Sunday, or with a party at an oyster saloon on Saturday evening. The love of imitation makes the trouble—the opulent merchant very properly encourages the fine arts, and introuduces the celebrated pictures and costly statues which tend to promote the fine arts, and is exceedingly creditable; but then he who lives upon a scanty salary, must mind the main chance, and such an outlay proves his ruin.

The true wisdom consists in looking at results.

The English Bible.

Dr. Robison, of New York, read to the Historical Society of that city on Tuesday night, June 3d, a paper extracted from an elaborate report, which he, as a member of a committee, has made to the managers of the American Bible Society. That report is to be published,—indeed he read from the proof sheets.—and was drawn up in pursuance of a commission to make a collection of the English versions of the Bible, for the purpose of correcting the errors of those now in common use in this country, and restoring them to the purity of the original version of the 54 translators appointed by King James The labor of the collators may be estimated, from the number of errors the committe have corrected, amounting to about twenty-four thousand.

If a man has a right on earth, he has a right to land enough to raise a habitation on. If he has a right to LIVE, he has a right to LAND enough to till for his subsistence. Deprive him of any one of these rights, and you place him at the mercy of those who possess them.—EVINS.

☞ Individual improvement is the only remedy for social evils.

At a city feast, the other day, one of the company was expatiating on the blessings of Providence

'Aye,' said one of the alderman, smacking his lips, 'it is a blessed place, sure enough—we get all our turtle from it.'

Mrs. Jordan and the Methodist Preacher.

The late Mrs. Jordan possessed a heart susceptible of the most tender and humane emotions, and these were called into action by the least approach of misery or distress. During her short stay at Chester, where she had been performing, her washwoman, a widow with three children, was by a merciless creditor thrown into prison. A small debt of forty shillings had been worked up, in a short time, by law expenses, into a bill of eight pounds. As soon as Mrs Jordan herself heard of the circumstances, she sent for the attorney paid his demand, and observed, with as much severity as her good nature could assume—

"You lawyers are certainly infernal spirits, sent on earth to make poor mortals miserable."

The attorney, however, pocketed the affront and with a low bow made his exit.

On the afternoon of the same day the poor woman was liberated. As Mrs, Jordan, with her servant, was taking her usual walk on the Chester walls the widow with her children followed her, and just as she had taken shelter from a shower of rain in a kind of porch, dropped on her knees, and with most grateful emotions exclaimed—

"God forever bless you, madam! you have saved me and my family from ruin."

The children, beholding their mother in tears, added, by their cries, to the affecting scene,—which a sensitive mind could not behold without strong feelins of sympathy.

The natural liveliness of Mrs. Jordan's disposition was not to be dampened by sorrowful scenes; however, though she strove to hide it, the tears of feeling stole down her cheeks, and stooping down to kiss the children she slipped a pound note into the mothers' hand, and in her usual playful manner replied—

'There, there—now, it's all over; go good woman, God bless you; and don't say another word"

The grateful creature would have replied, but the female Samaritan insisted on silence and departed It so hapened that another person had taken shelter under the porch, and witnessed the interesting scene, who as soon as Mrs. Jordan observed him, came forward, and (holding out his hand) exclaimed, with a deep sigh:

"Lady, pardon the freedom of a stranger, but would to the Lord the world was all like thee!"

The figure of this man bespoke his calling; his countenance was pale, and a suit of sable, rather the worse for wear, covered his tall and spare person—The penetrating eye of Thalia's votary soon developed his character and profession, and with her wonted good humor, retreating a few paces she replied—

"No, I won't shake hands with you."

"Why?"

"Because you are a Methodist preacher, and when you know who I am' you'll send me to the devil."

"The Lord forbid! I am as you say, preacher of the gospel, which tells us to clothe the naked, feed the hungry, and relieve the distressed; and do you think I can behold a sister so cheerfully obeying the command of our master, without feeling that spiritual attachment that leads me to break through wordly custom and offer you the hand of friendship and brotherly love?"

"Well, well! you are a good old soul, I dare say; but I don't like fanatics, and you'll not like me when I tell you who I am."

"I hope I shall."

"Well then, I tell you I am an actress." The preacher sighed. "Yes, I am a player, you must have heard of me, my name is Mrs. Jordan."

After a short pause he again extended his hand, and with a complacent countenance, he replied—

"The Lord bless you; wherever thou art, his goodness is unlimited; he has bestowed on thee a large portion of his spirit; and as to thy calling, if thy soul upbraid thee not, the lord forbid that I shou'd.'

Thus reconciled, and the rain having abated, they left the porch together; the offer of his arm was accepted, and the female Roscius of comedy, and the melancholy desciple of John Wesley, proceding arm in arm to the door of Mrs. Jordon's dwelling. At parting, the preacher shook hanns with her, saying—

"Fare thee well, sister; I know not what the principle of people of thy calling may be; thou art the first I ever conversed with, but if their benevolent practise equals thine, I hope and trust the Lord will say to each—thy sins are forgiven thee!"

How Paddy Speared the Fish.

Last summer a laborer dwelling near the town of Greenfield, Mass, was walking with his comrade up the banks of the Connecticut to the farm of Mr. Richardson, on whose meadows they were employed to mow: each, in the usual Irish way, having his scythe loosely wagging over his shoulder; and lazily lounging close to the brink of the river, they espied a salmon partly hid under the bank.

It is the nature of a salmon that, when his head is concealed, he facies no one can see his tail. There are many wiseacres, besides the salmon, of the same way of thinking. On the present occasion the body of the fish was visible.

'Oh, Ned, dear!' said one of the mowers, 'look at that big fellow there; isn't it a pity we hain't no spear?'

'May be,' said Ned, 'we could be after pitching the lad with the scythe-handle.'

'True for you; the spike of your handle is longer nor mine—give the fellow a dig with it at any rate,' said Dennis.

'Ay, will I,' returned the other; 'I'll give the lad a prod he'll never forget, any how.'

The spike and their sport was all they thought of; but the blade of the scythe which hung over Ned's shoulder, never came into the calculations of either of them. Ned cautiously looked over the bank; the unconscious salmon lay snug, little imagining the conspiracy that had been formed against his tail.

'Now hit the lad smart!' said Dennis. There, now—there! raise your fist; now you have the boy! now, Ned, success!'

Ned struck at the salmon with all his might and main, and that was not trifling. But whether 'the lad' was piked or not never appeared; for poor Ned, bending his neck as he struck at the salmon, placed the vertebræ in the most convenient position for unfurnishing his shoulders, and his head came tumbling splash into the Connecticut, to the utter astonishment of his comrade, who could not conceive how it could drop off so suddenly! But the next moment he had the consolation of seeing the head attended by one of his own ears! which had been most dexterously sliced off by the same blow which beheaded his comrade.

The head and ear rolled down the river in company, and were picked up with extreme horror at the mil-dam, near Mr. Richardson's by one of the miller's men.

A search being now made, Ned's headless body was discovered lying half over the bank, and Dennis in a swoon, through fright and loss of blood, was found recumbent by his side.

Dennis, when brought to himself, (which was effected by whiskey) recited the whole adventure.

They tied up the head; the body was attended by a very numerous assemblage of Nend's countrymen to the grave; and the practice of carrying scythes carelessly very much declined.

Begin Right.

A Certain man once married a lady, whose reputation for amiability of disposition was seriously questioned, if it was not in reality seriously questionable. At the wedding everything went of merrily of course; the party gay, the supper magnificent—the whole affair had been eminently successful, and all parties extremely delighted.

On retiring to his apartments, the gentleman found himself annoyed by the mewing and purring of a cat.

"What in the devil's name is that?" he exclaimed.

"Oh! nothing, my dear," replied the bride, "but my favorite cat, Pussita."

"Oh! d———n Pussita! I hate cats!" and with this he most unceremoniously threw Pussita out the second story window.

"Well! if you havn't got a temper!"

"Yes! my dear—You'd better believe it."

"Everything (continued my Uncle) went on well in that establishment—even to a warm dinner on Sunday.

Now it so happened that a friend of the above gentleman, who had some months before "committed the error" of marrying. "an angel," took occason to inquire of him—

"How it was, that with him, everthing 'went merry as the marriage bell,' while on the contrary, he (his friend) had almost given up the idea of wearing pantaloons at all."

Whereupon he related to him the story of Pussita and the second story window, "without," said my uncle, "fully impressing upon his mind the important moral—that it was necessary to begin right." Nevertheless there was that in his eye, when he started for home, "that told of treason."

"Well," said his wife, "you've come home at last, have you—after keeping me sitting up for you—and what's the matter—you haven't been drinking have you? you look rather strange."

"Not in the least, my dear—but I hate cats, lovey."

"You do, do you—well I like 'em—that's all the difference."

Hereupon the unfortunate husband made a dash at poor Tabby—who was quietly snoozing on the sofa—and rushed impetuously to the window.

"You have been drinking. What are you going to do monster?"

"Throw her out of the window."

"You better try it—I'd like to see you do it—I'd break every bone in your body—why don't you throw her out? I dare you to do it."

He put the cat softly down on the sofa, hung his hat on a peg in the entry, his manliness and his pantaloons on an easy chair and exclaimed—

"Go in ducky darling, and win—I didn't begin right."

"I rather think you didn't—you better take a fresh start, but don't try that game again or you'll a ch it—come to bed," and he went.

A Tough Yarn.

Ben Blowhard says that one of his voyages was made under a captain who was noted for working his crew, and on the trip home, having "nothing else to do," he kept all hands at work "setting up rigging"—an operation, which, for the benefit of fresh water lobsters we will explain that it is done by tightening the standing rigging, which supports the vessel's masts. "Well said old Ben, "it was nothing but set up riggin' almost every day, till we hove in sight of land. We were bound in to New London, and just as we were passin' Montauk pint, she grounded in five fathom. Then the cappen ripped and swore till all was blue. "Heave the lead," says he. We hove first on stab'ard and then the lab'ard side—There she was, stuck in thirty feet of water, and she only drawed eighteen! I guess our boys laughed some when we found that we'd set up the the riggin' so much that we'd hauled her masts through the vessel's bottom twelve feet!

A young preacher who had just started in his travels as an itinerant, was one evening holding forth on the Deluge, and after describing the manner in which Noah built the Ark, and filled it with animals of every kind, by pairs, closed in a solemn tone, thus: 'My dear hearers, you must know, that it was an arduous task for Noah and his sons to get a pair of WHALES into the Ark!'

We once heard of a rich man who was badly injured by being run over. 'It isn't the accident,' said he, 'that I mind; that isn't the thing; but the idea of being run over by a confounded swill cart, makes me mad.'

The Grand Demonstration, so long promised us, has at length appeared. And, judging from and comparing it with the former efforts of "Quis" it is a much more reasonable demonstration than we had anticipated. But, unfortunately for the conclusions of Quis, he has brought no evidence or argument but what sustains our proposition. He not only admits that the laws of nature are immutable but proves that they are so. Necessity alone drives him to this corner; from a more full examination he has undoubtedly perceived (this is admitted in his argument, extract No. 7) that it will not do to deny it, as it will not only deny an express declaration of scripture, but, as he shows, deny even the power of God to perform a miracle. The scriptures expressly declare that it was by the interposition of the direct power of God, by a suspension of the laws of nature, that miracles were performed. Therefore, seeing no other alternative, he has brought all the evidence he could to sustain our proposition, viz: "Nature ever acts by immutable laws"; but unfortunately for him the evidence he brings to sustain it denies the possibility of miracles, as all the probabilities, all the experience, as he himself shows, is a "moral certainty," that a miracle never took place, are all every one against the suspension of such laws. We could not well have a more triumphant vindication of the truth of our proposition than "Quis" has given us. We must subjoin a few extracts, all we can make room for, for the benefit of our readers, trusting however that they will procure and carefully read the whole. Quis says:

(No 1) "If the laws of nature are immutable, not only no miracles ever have in fact been wrought but the very supposition of their having been wrought becomes absurd."

This is sufficiently explicit and conclusive, and as he not only admits this but proves it in what follows we submit that our proposition is triumphantly established.

(2). "We can see full well how men might very rationally infer that "whatever is a law of nature to day, ever has been and ever will be." Nay we firmly believe thus much of the editor's premises ourselves: and we shall show him, at the proper time, that an admission of its truth thus far is indispensable to the establishment of the miracles of the Bible. But to say that this inference rests upon experience is unmitigated nonsense."

It will be perceived that our proposition is here admitted, but not content with this he proves it, and also condescends to prove, notwithstanding the "unmitigated nonsense" of the conclusion, that "this inference" does rest upon "experience"; the proof of both will be found in extracts No 4 and 5.

(3) "We have no doubt of the fact, as we have already said, that the laws of nature always have been and always will be what they are to day. But man's confidence in them does not prove that they are constant and uniform in their operation; it proves only that he implicitly believes them to be so."

How is his doubts resolved, how does he get this belief? is it not evident from No 4 and 5 that it is derived from experience? It is there shown that his experience teaches him that they are 'constant and uniform in their operation" from which he "implicitly believes" that they act or are governed by immutable laws.

(4) "'Men's acting unhesitatingly in accordance' with the belief that they will not be knocked on the head by meteoric stones falling from the clouds is incontrovertible proof, then, that meteoric stones cannot fall from the clouds; and "all assertion to the contrary, backed by all the testimony in the world, is constantly refuted by men's so acting." Now if the editors reasoning is right, and our's wrong, we should be glad to have the fallacy in our's pointed out to us.

Our view of the case is, that men's actions are regulated by the rules of probability; that of probability there are infinite degrees, ranging between the confines of impossibility on the one side and perfect certainty on the other, without ever reaching either, and that when a fact becomes extremely probable or morally certain, men do act, and ought to act, accordingly."

The absurdity of the argument of the first paragraph is sufficiently apparent to refute itself; the second proves, being precisely our own argument, our proposition, as it is upon the "probability" the "perfect certainty" and uniformity with which the laws of nature do act, not only with things external but also in himself, pervading his own being, that it is so "extremely probable or morally certain" that he not only "ought" but does act accordingly in all the affairs of life, being unable from their immutable character to act otherwise than in conformity with them. This is confirmed in the next paragraph.

(5.) "Now it is morally certain that fire will burn and water seek its level—and men act in accordance with that moral certainty. But from their so acting, the editor has no right to draw the inference which he does, that "whatever is a law of nature to day, ever has been and ever will be." We freely admit that it is morally certain (if we disregard the evidence upon which the miracles rest) that fire always has, in every instance burned, and water sought its level. But we allege that room is left for the establishment of the contrary by sufficient evidence, if such can be produced—and we maintain that it can."

These two paragraphs it will be perceived is an admission, a reiteration of our argument, and they conclusively prove the truth of our proposition. If there is sufficient evidence to prove the contrary why not produce it; is it because of the dilemma of No 7; would it as he there intimates and claims, (if he could possibly disprove it) destroy the only premises upon which it is possible to base any argument to prove that even God could create a miracle?

(6) "His conclusion from his premises is that "nature ever acts by immutable laws. This is by no means a logical inference from his premises. The only inference that his premises will bear is that the the laws of nature are uniform in their operation."

Which is equivalent to saying that although half a dozen is just six, yet somehow or other they are not the same.

(7) "We shall then conclude by showing him that what he would have succeeded in establishing, if his premises were true, so far from proving that miracles could not have taken place, must be true before they could have taken place."

It will be perceived by his own article that No 6 is not our conclusion (he is undoubtedly confused from reading Hume's Essays) but our premises; the conclusion being that miracles could not be true if "Nature ever acts by immutable laws." "Quis" seeing the dilemma his former attempts would place him in if substantiated, entirely abandons the argument, and notwithstanding the conclusion he assumes at the end of his article and the promise he has made to disprove our premises, he admits in extract No 7, and his whole article goes to prove it, that it "must be true before they (miracles) could take place."

(8) "Now we suppose that the laws of nature of which the editor speaks, are admitted by him to have been established by the author of nature; and if so, they are not immutable."

If this does not establish the immutability of nature's laws, it certainly is proof that "Quis" is a most profound logician. If the laws of nature are admitted to have been established by the author of nature, "they are not immutable!" God, being from his nature omnipotent, omniscient, and all perfection, could not create a perfect or immutable law; What a sage and irresistable conclusion!

(9) "Cannot God suspend the entire system of nature's laws? And if so, can he not suspend any one of them entirely: or the operation of any one of them in any particular instance, leaving it in force everywhere else?"

This is an entire begging of the question; after having admitted that nature acts by immutable laws and proved that she does so, and that "men do act, and ought to act, accordingly," will he ask us to turn round in the face of his own evidence and admissions and believe without a particle of evidence to substantiate it that God has suspended a law of his own creation; a law too which from such admission or claim must be admitted to be perfect? Does this require no proof in the face of all the evidence brought to substantiate the contrary?

His attack upon Hume is a mere evasion of our arguments, and the inferences he draws are not to the point, as we have never denied the power of God to suspend the laws of nature, but have argued that it was "impossible" from the nature and attributes of God, as he could not from that nature do an immoral or unjust act, consequently that he could not not or would not violate or suspend a perfect law which he had made.

Therefore, as "Quis" has brought no evidence to to disprove our proposition, but has admitted and strengthened it by showing its necessity, the conclusion irresitably follows that a miracle, as represented in the scriptures, has never yet taken place. As we have evidence of a tangible and indisputable character constantly surrounding us to refer to, and being also compelled by necessity to act in accordance with that evidence, our lives paying the forfeit of contrary action, thus proving the validity of such evidence, it is impossible to disprove it; consequently that nothing short of a miracle—a suspension of the laws of nature—can prove a miracle. This being the case, men certainly do wrong to their moral natures, to profess to believe what they are compelled to deny the truth of by their acts.

We may recur to this subject again next week, if so, we shall endeavor to put it in such form as will give our opponents an opportunity to disprove our proposition. We do not reply to what he says of Hume, because it is a falsification and misrepresentation of that author, which we have not room to expose, but even admitting it as he has stated it, it all turns upon a very important IF, which when he can establish it, it will be time enough to admit. So far from any such universelity of agreement the brothers of Christ did not believe in his miracles nor his doctrine, neither did many cotemporary historians.

In conclusion we beg leave to cogratulate "Quis" on his conversion to the truth of our proposition, and ourselves upon having said that a more thorough examination of the subject (which Quis appears to have given it) must lead all who do so to acknowledge its truth. We therefore accept what Quis has said as fullfilling, so far as circumstances would permit, his promise, as it would be ungenerous on our part to expect a man to argue against his convictions.

The Progress of Our Republic.

The census of the United States, for 1850, is enough to astonish all the world but ourselves—whom nothing can astonish in the way of doing up things stick. The increase of our wealth and population are evidences of our great prosperity. For the past eight years, especially, we have reason to be thankful for the steady and prosperous advancement of our commerce, and internal resources.—There have been no sudden fluctuations, and nothing but general progress. Some interests have suffered, but the Republic as a whole has not felt them. How striking the contrast between our country, and the civilized countries of Europe. Our superiority in every respect has been strikingly manifested. We have beheld Europe convulsed from centre to circumference. France has spouted out her race of monarchs and her citizens have made the streets of Paris reek with human gore. Rome cast out her spiritual ruler, who was only reinstated by the cannon of Gaul, who, more than once, as in days of old, has become master of the eternal City, perhaps yet to pay the debt to a more than Cæsar's vengeance. The fields of Italy have been stained with blood, and the cannon of Austria have battered on the walls of Venice. Bloody have been the struggles on the plains of Hungary, and Vienna has smoked with the ashes of the slain. Every nation in Europe but Russia and England have had the knife of civil war bared in the savage contest of father against the son and brother; Ireland has lost two millions by the famine and the pestilence, and what country in the old world has escaped some scourge or reverse of fortune? Not one. We have been engaged in war, and we glory not in that, because we are the friends of peace; we have also had the pestilence, but it would seem as if those things which injured and retarded the progress of other nations, tended always to advance and prosper ours.—Strong are we now in population, and stronger than all other nations in enterprise, and never-tiring onward pushing. In the year 1800 the population of the United States was 5,300,000; it is now 23,500,000.

The number of States then comprising the Union was sixteen; it is now thirty-one. Our territory then was 1,000,000. All our present domain west of the Missippi then belonged to France and Spain, and was an unbroken wilderness. Florida was owned by Spain, and Georgia was the only State on the Gulf of of Mexico. West of New York., there were no States but Kentucky and Tennessee, and these had spent most of their feeble energies in bloody strifes with a savage foe. Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, and half of our western States were yet but hunting grounds where Indians roamed unmolested. At that period the total value of all kinds of manufactures and products of industry in the United States hardly exceeded a hundred millions of dollars; the total value now of our products of industry will be about six hundred millions. The exportation of cotton alone has increased from $5,000,000 annually, to sixty-five and seventy millions.

Our inland lake trade has increased from an amount to insignificant to be estimated, to the enormous value of $200,000,000 annually. Our foreign marine is now hardly inferior in extent or value to that of Great Britain, and we are now gaining faster than ever on our gigantic rival. Fifty years ago, scarcely one of our present four thousand miles of canal existed, and not one of our present eight or ten thousand miles of railway, or our present sixteen thousand miles of telegraph were either known or dreamed of. In short, under the influence of free institutions, we have grown great and strong, with a rapidity which is enough to astonish and confound even the gigantic ambition of the Czar of all the Russians. The Emperor of Russia is called the collossus of the north; his empire is about three times the area of the United States possessions, with about three times the amount of population.—It is about one-fifth greater in area than the empire of Great Britain. On the other hand, the British scepter exercises dominion over one hundred and eighty millions, three times more than Russia. It is the greatest empire at present in the world, and its industrial products are in proportion to its population. Next to England, in productive industry and commercial enterprise stands the United States, but in rapidity of advancement in giant strides to be the first empire in the world, it requires no "mystical lore" to predict that in thirty years hence, the result will be accomplished—the prediction fulfilled.—Scientific American

San Francisco In Ashes—Loss $15,000 000!

NEW ORLEANS, June 13, 1851.

The steamship Alabama has just arrived with two weeks later from California—the dates being to May 15th. She came via Acapulco. Her news is of great importance. A terrible fire occurred in San Francisco, laying in ashes property to the amount of $15,000,000! Among the buildings destroyed are the Custom House, Union, Parkers, National, New World, City, Delmonico's, and the Exchange Hotels. Also Rose's Buildings, and the offices of the Ship Company. The fire also spread to the shipping, consuming a large number of vessels which were lying at their wharves. It was first discovered on Clay street, and ran through about one dozen blocks, quickly spreading to other parts of the city, the greater part of which lies a heap of ruins. Hunter, George, Adam, Centre and El Dorado streets are completely gutted.

The utmost consternation prevailed during the fire, and thousands were turned out of house and home, having lost all. Measures were about being adopted to relieve the distressed. It is feared a number of lives have been lost; business was not thought of, and San Francisco presents a sorrowing and heart sickening picture.

The news from the mines continue of a cheering character; new discoveries were daily being made, and the prospect of the Miners were highly favorable.—Those working with the quartz cracking machine were reaping a rich reward; in some instances the average per man was $20 to $50 per day.

Lynch Law is still in fiorce and several new examples have been made.

Postage under the New Law.

Decision under the new postage Act, made by the Postmaster-General after consulting with the Attorney-General.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, June 11, 1851.

The postage on all bound books and on all other printed matter, except newspapers and periodicals published at intervals not exceeding three months, and sent from the office of publication to actual and bonafide subscribers, must be prepaid.

If the amount paid and marked on such printed matter is not sufficient to pay the whole postage due, the excess of weight beyond that paid for is to be charged with double the rate which would have been charged if prepaid, and the postage on such excess collected at the office of delivery.

If by the neglect of a postmaster such matter is sent without any prepayment, the double prepaid rate must be collected on delivery.

Postage must be charged on all letters, newspapers and other matter, according to the distance on the route by which they are forwarded: and this (unless otherwise directed by the sender) must be the route by which they will soonest reach their destination, although that may not be the shortest route.

On letters to and from GREAT BRITAIN (and the continent of Europe when sent through England.) the rates of postage and modes of rating will be the same as heretofore, except as to letters to or from California and Oregon, in respect to which special instructions will be hereafter given.

On all letters to or from the continent of Europe, not sent through England, the United States inland and sea postage will in alll cases be combined, and will be twenty cents the single rate, without regard to the distance the same are carried within the United States. The mode of rating will be the same as heretofore. [Full tabular statements in regard to the rates of postage, both foreign and inland, will soon be published.]

Subscribers to periodicals, to obtain the benefit of the provision in regard to prepayment, must pay the full quarter's postage before the delivery of the first number, when there are several numbers to be delivered during the quarter. If, by reason of any increase in the size of the periodical, or otherwise, it shall appear, that the whole quarter's postage was not so paid in advance, the subscriber will lose the benefit of prepayment, and the numbers received during the whole quarter will be charged with the double or unpaid rate, and the subscriber will be credited with only the amount paid in advance.

Under the provisions of the second section of the new postage act, no newspapers other than those published weekly only, are entitled to circulate free of postage in the counties were published. The office of publication is the office where the newspaper is printed.

In determining newspaper postages, the distances are to be computed from the office of publication, and not from the county line of the county in which it is carried.

Newspapers published weekly only in a county adjoing the Canada line may be sent free to Canada, provided they do not leave the county of publication until they cross the line into Canada.

Newspaper publishers may send and receive their exchange newspapers to and from Canada free of charge.

A newspaper is not a periodical within the meaning and intent of the provision which requires the postage on periodicals to be paid in advance, and declares that the postage thereon shall be one half of the rates previously specified in the second section of the act. All subscribers to newspapers were and still are required by the provisions of the thirtieth section of the act of March, 1825, to pay one quarters postage in advance: but by so doing they are not entitled to have the postage reduced below the established rates.

Payments in advance on newspapers and periodicals can only be made by the subscribers at the post Office where they are to be delivered.

The postage on newspapers, periodicals and other matter not chargeable with letter postage, when sent out of the United States, must be prepaid at the full rate. Publishers may prepay postage on their issues, but can have no deduction of postage on account of such prepayment.

When a periodical is published only quarterly, the actual and bona fide subscribers for such periodical may pay in advance, and have the benefit of the advance payment, provided he pays, to the postmaster at the office where he is to receive the periodical, before its delivery. If a periodical is publised less frequently than quarterly, the postage must be prepaid, and at the full rate.

Letters mailed before the first day of July, though delivered after, will, in all cases, be charged with postage at the rates in force at the time of the mailing thereof. N. K HALL, Postmaster General.

WONDERFUL DEPOSIT OF COAL.—Mr. J. Dill has communicated to the Family Visitor, a brief account of a wonderful deposit of mineral at Straitsville, Perry County Ohio, which is said to exceed anything of the kind discovered in the world. He writes:

"Reports of an immense structure of coal in the vicinity of this place, have long been circulated in Central Ohio. I first heard of it in the Winter of 1848 9; it was then reported to be about ninety feet thick. Further examinations ascertained the thickness of the uncovered part, in the face of a deep ravine at 112 feet. A few days since a gentleman of high standing, informed me that an acquaintance of his with some others, had stripped the upper surface of the bed and bored through the coal stratum to ascertain its thickness, and found it to be 136 feet.—About ten miles north of that mine, I found a vein of carbonate of iron implanted similar to a slaty stratum, with an easy cleavage, which is full of well preserved leaves of the coal formation. Some of them on breaking open exhibit the green of the leaf. The ore, by analysis of Prof. Rodgers, contains 44 per cent of iron."

LET US REASON.

The ingredients of which Dr. Rogers' Syrup of Liverwort, Tar, and Canchalagua is composed, have certain specific qualities which have been clearly established by the highest medical testimony—California has given us something more valuable than gold, in the plant Canchalagua. It is the finest of vegetable tonics, and has the invaluable property of recruiting the strength, while it represses fever. Tar, as an expectorant, has no equal. It loosens and expels the mucus from the Lungs, and thus restores to them freedom of action. As an internal styptic, Liverwort has long been known; but besides arresting bleeding from the Lungs, it seems to exercise a beneficial influence over the whole Respiratory Apparatus. Thus, then, we have in this compound, the properties of strengthening, allaying fever, arresting hemorrhage, and soothing irritation. In this combination consists the rationale of its wonderful cures of Coughs' Colds, and incipient consumption, for the particulars and vouchers of which, see pamphlet to be had of Agents; also advertisment in another column.

CELEBRATION OF THE 4TH OF JULY.

FAIR AND FESTIVAL

AT

BOUND BROOK.

Arrangements have been made to celebrate the coming 4th of July at Bound Brook, in a manner becoming the spirit of the day. A procession under the direction of Col Wm Thompson of Somerville, and headed by the Princeton Blues, will be formed at half past 9 o'clock, in the village, at Mr C. P Holcombe's. Thence they will advance to Middlebrook, and returning proceed to the Ref. Dutch Church in South Bound Brook.

The exercises in the church will be opened with prayer and the reading of the Declaration of Independence. An oration will then be delivered by the Hon. George Brown of Somerville.

At the close of the above exercises, a DINNER will be served by the ladies upon the grounds at the Church. A FAIR also will be opened in the Lecture room during the day and various Refreshments served.

At half past 3 o'clock, Daniel Talmage Esq of Brooklyn N. Y will deliver an address in the church.

The whole of the exercises will be enlivened by the Princeton Band of music.

The proceeds of the above are for the benefit of the Ref. Dutch Church.

Tickets for Dinner 50cts, and can be procured at any time previous at C. P. Holcombe's or at John Creed's and upon the grounds at the day of the celebration.

BRIDGE BUILDERS.

WILL be sold to the lowest bidder, the building of a bridge over Rahway River, near James Vreelands Factory, with White Oak Timber, on SATURDAY, June 28th,

at 4 o'clock. Specifications on the day of sale.

BABY JUMPER AND WALKER COMBINED.

The subscriber having invented and made application for a patent for the above article would hereby call the attention of the public to its superiority over all others.

It forms a neat article of furniture, somewhat resembling an ottoman; it being upon castors, the little occupant can move it in all directions around the room with the utmost ease. The top opens by a spring and then closes around under the child's arms and locks. The child sits in an upright position upon a saddle or seat, stuffed perfectly soft, bearing no weight on his arms, with its feet resting upon the floor. The child can easily raise the article, and as there is a spring in each leg it can use it as a jumper for its amusement, or push itself around the room, thus learning to walk without other asistance. As the springs buoys the child up, thereby preventing too much weight upon its feet, it gradually learns to use its legs and soon learns to walk. The child can in no manner receive injury; a trial or inspection will satisfy the most skeptical of its superior utility.

Particular attention is called to

PRICE'S PREMIUM PRISCOPIC SPECTACLES.

Being made of the finest materials, which through their high polish and true ground, produce the purest vision and are recommended by competent judges as being decidedly the best and most natural in their effect of all others, for preserving and improving the sight in continued reading, writing, sewing, &c. Persons with weak eyes can be fitted with Glasses which will greatly benefit and not strain the sight. Short-sighted persons and such as have been operated upon for Cataract, can also be suited.

J. P would be happy to see at his store all persons that have found difficulty in getting Glasses that were adapted to their sight, as the most difficult cases are easily fitted upon a fair trial. Any person purchasing Spectacles at his Store, can exchange them if not well suited, any time within three months, without extra charge. The subscriber has also on hand a large assortment of Silver Spoons, Prince Albert, Threaded and plain patterns, Butter Knives, Sugar Spoons, Mustard Spoons, Salt Spoons, Cream spoons, &c. Newark, April 3d, 1851. H. ELLS.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequent occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels; such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, wh ch most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any moment.

RUPTURES, are always to be treated with the surgical instruments known as Trusses and Supporters, and these require to be skillfully applied. With this view, the HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE, now established some thirty years, has under the various managers, presented to the public both male and female attendants to apply its instruments directly to the persons, which is preferable in all cases, and has also made improvement at different times, showing that advancement which study and practice only yield toward the relief of this malady.

With much pleasure the fact is now published, that recent improvements BUTLER'S TRUSS PADS have been made, and sufficiently tested upon numerous cases to warrant, through the cures already affected, their submission to the public, as being in adaptation and efficiency superior to any heretofore made known.

These improvements, recently patented, are now being applied at this office, 4 Vesey street, in cases of rupture, gravitation of the bowels, prolapsus uteri, prolapsus ani and piles.

The public may rely upon that care being made in their application, which will most likely tend to the final cure of the several complaints

Hull's Truss Office, 4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St. Paul's Church, New-York.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS,

or Medicated Compound.

INFALLIBLE for renewing, invigorating, and beautifying the HAIR, removing the scurf, dandruff, and all affections of the scalp; and curing eruptions on the skin, diseases of the glands, muscles and integuments, and releieving stings, cuts, bruises, sprains, &c. With this preperation "there is no such word as fail." The first journals in America, medical men of the highest eminence, prominent citizens of all professions, and ladies who have used it for years in their dressing rooms and nurseries, admit with one accord, that for imparting vigor, gloss, luxurience and curl to the hair, eradicating scurf and dandruff, healing wounds, curing contusions, sprains, stings, &c., and relieving diseases of the skin, the glands and the muscles, it has no equal, among the multitude of compounds advertised in the public prints, or used in private practice. In cheapness as well as efficacy, Barry's Tricopherous is unrivalled. The immense cash sales of the article have enabled the Inventor to supply it at retail, at 25 cents per bottle, which is from 50 to 100 per cent less than the price of any other preperation for the hair now in use. The scientific treatise on the hair and the skin, (embracing valuable directions for the culture and preservation of Nature's choicest ornament,) in which each bottle is enclosed, is alone worth the money

The affinity between the membranes which constitute the skin, and the hair which draws its sustenance from this triple envelope is very close. All diseases of the hair originate in the skin of the head. If the pores of the scalp are clogged, or if the blood and other fluids do not circulate freely through the small vessels which feed the root with moisture, and impart life to the fibres, the result is scurf, dandruff, shedding of the hair, graveness, dryness and harshness of the ligaments, and entire baldness, as the case may be. Stimulate the skin to healthful action with the Tricopherous, and the torpid vessels, recovering their activity, will attibilate the disease. In all affections of the skin, and of the substrata of muscles and integuments, the process and the effect are the same.—It is upon the skin, the muscular fibre, and the glands, that the Tricopherous has its specific action, and in all affections and injury of these organs, it is a sovereign remedy

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York: and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States and Canada. [134is

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

Among the numerous discoveries science has made in this generation to facilitate the business of life—increase its enjoyment, and even prolong the term of human existence, none can be named of more real value to mankind, than this contribution of Chemistry to the Healing Art. A vast trial of its virtues throughout this broad country, has proven beyond a doubt, that no medicine or combination of medicine yet known, can so surely control and cure the numerous varieties of pulmonary disease which have hitherto swept from our midst thousands and thousands every year. Indeed, there is now abundant reason to believe a Remedy has at length been found which can be relied on to cure the most dangerous affections of the lungs. Our space here will not permit us to publish any proportion of the cures affected by its use, but we would present the following opinions of eminent men, and refer further enquiry to the circular which the Agent below named, will always be pleased to furnish free wherein are full particlars, and indisputable proof of these facts.

From the President of Amherst College, the celebrated PROFESSOR HITCHCOCK.

"James C. Ayer—Sir: I have used your CHERRY PECTORAL in my own case of deep-seated Bronchitis, and am satisfied from its chemical constitution, that it is an admirable compound for the relief of laryngial and bronchial difficulties. If my opinion as to its superior character can be of any service, you are at liberty to use it as you think proper.

EDWARD HITCHCOCK, L. L. D.,
From the widely celebrated

PROFESSOR SILLIMAN, M. D., L. L. D., Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, &c., Yale College, Member of the Lit, Hist. Med. Phil. and Scientific Societies of America and Europe.

"I deem the CHERRY PECTORAL an admirable composition from some of the best articles in the Materia Medica, and a very effective remedy for the class of diseases it is intended to cure."

New Haven, Ct., Nov. 1 1849.

MAJOR PATTISON, President of the S. C. Senate, states he has used the CHERRY PECTORAL with wonderful success, to and inflammation of the lungs.

From one of the first Physicans in Maine.

SACO, Me., April 26, 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell. Dear Sir: I am now constantly using your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, and prefer it to any other medicine for pulmonary complaints. From observation of many severe cases, I am convinced it will cure coughs, colds, and diseases of the lungs, that have put to defianice all other remedies.

I invariably reccommend its use in cases of consumption, and consider it much the best remedy known for that disease.

Respectfully yours, I. S. CUSHMAN, M. D.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazzetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impetency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cordial cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without offspring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co. of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper.

CANCHALAGUA;

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to

CONSUMPTION.

NOTHING LIKE IT.

CURE FOLLOWS CURE!

READ THE EVIDENCE!!

The above invaluable Medicine has now been before the public sufficiently long to have its virtues thoroughly tested. It has been used by all classes of the community, under every possible variety of circumstances, and has everywhere proved itself a most powerful and efficient Cough Medicine. Lung Diseases of all kinds, yield to its influence, as mists pass away upon the rising of the Sun. This is no fiction. We give you below, letters from persons who are now living in the state of New York, and who declare, over their own signatures, all that we could possibly desire to say in its favor. Those who can read their statements and yet remain incredulous, must be beyond the reach of human testimony.

A LOVELY YOUNG LADY

CURED OF CONSUMPTION!

☞ The following is from the pen of WM. H. LEVISON, Esq., the distinguished Editor of the U. S. Military and Naval Argus under date New York, Jan. 26, 1850. What could be more conclusive?

"It is seldom we permit ourselves to occupy a space in these columns to speak in praise of any article in the patent medicine way; but when we see the life of a fellow-creature saved by the use of any medicine whatever, we consider it as our right, if not a duty, to give a simple statement of facts, that others may, in like manner be benefitted. The case which has induced us to pen this article, was that of a young lady of our acquaintance, who, by frequent exposure to the night air, contracted a cold, which settled on the Lungs before its ravages could be stayed. (This occurred two years ago this winter.) Various remedies were used, but with very little effect or benefit. The cough grew worse, with copious expectoration, and the sunken eye, and pale, hollow cheek, told plainly that PULMONARY DISEASE was doing its worst on her delicate frame. The family physician was consulted and although he would not admit to the young lady that she really had the CONSUMPTION, yet he would give no encouragement as to a cure. At this crisis, her mother was persuaded to make use of a bottle of Dr. Rogers' Compound Syrup of LIVEWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA and we are happy to state, she was perfectly cured in less than three months by this medicine alone, after even hope was destroyed. It is useless to comment on such a case as this, for the truth will reach where polished fiction never can. If any doubt the authenticity of this statement, let them call at this office.—U. S. Military and Naval Argus Office.—No 79 Chatam N. Y.

COUGH AND DISEASE

OF 14 MONTHS STANDING.

CURED.

AFTER BEING GIVEN UP TWICE

BY EMINENT PHYSICIANS!

Albany, June 9th. 1849.

Messrs. A. L. Scovill & Co.—I herewith forward to you a Certificate of a Cure, effected by your Compound Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua The Cough and expectoration was of fourteen months standing, and had baffled the skill of several of our eminent physicians in New York, Albany, and Cooperstown. I am the person in whom the cure was effected, and as I had previously no faith in patent medicines, I have since tried it on others, and have become satisfied of its value. Mine was as GREAT A CURE as ever was performed, as I had, during my sickness, been given up twice by my physicians. I have now commenced my business, after taking, I think about eight bottles.

Yours, repectfully, THOS. C. FAULDER.

BLEEDING AT THE LUNGS CURED.

☞ SEE HOW PROMPTLY IT ACTS!

Statement of Mr. A. Lang, Baker, No 388 Pearl street, N. Y. A few days before last Christmas, I was taken unwell, and soon commenced bleeding freely at the Lungs. I called in a Homœopathic Physician, but his medicine did not seem to help me. I read your advertisement, and thought I would try Dr. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA. Before I had takea up the third bottle, by bleeding had stopped, my Cough was gone, and I felt well as usual. My health is now good. I consider it a most excellent medicine, and cordially reccommend it to my friends. [This statement was made to the Proprietors, March 12th 1850.]

A Touching Story.

The following affecting narrative purports to have been given by a father to his son, as a warning derived from his own bitter experience of the sin of grieving and resisting a dear mother's love and counsel.

"What agony was visible on my mother's face when she saw that all she said and suffered failed to move me! She rose to go home, and I followed at a distance. She spoke no more to me till she reached her own door."

"It is time now, said she. "Go' my son, and once more let me besceech you to think upon what I have said."

"I shan't go to school," said I.

She looked astonished at my boldness, but replied firmly:

"Certainly you will go, Alfred, I command you."

"I will not!" said I with a tone of defiance."

"One of two things you must do, Alfred—either go to school this moment, or I will lock you in your room, and keep you there till you are ready to promise implicit obedience to my wishes in future."

"I dare you to do it," said I, "you can't get me up stairs'"

"Alfred, choose now," said my mother, who laid her hand upon my arm. She trembled violently, and was deadly pale.

"If you touch me I will kick you," said I, in a terrible rage. God knows I knew not what I said.

"Will you go, Alfred?"

"No!" I replied, quite quailed beneath her eye.

"Then follow me," said she as she grasped my arm firmly. I raised my foot—oh, my son, hear me! I raised my foot and kicked her; my sainted mother! How my head reels, as the torrent of memory rushes over me! I kicked my mother; a feeble woman; my mother? She staggered back a few steps, and leaned against the wall. She did not look at me. I saw her heart beat against her breast. "Oh! Heavenly Father," she cried, "forgive him—he knows not what he does!" The gardner just then passed the door, and seeing my mother pale and and almost unable to support herself, he stopped; she beckoned him in. "Take this boy up stairs and lock him in his room," said she, and turned from me. Looking back as she was entering her room, she gave me such a look; it will forever follow me; it was a look of agony, mingled with the intensest love; it was the last unutterable pang from a heart that was broken.

In a moment I found myself a prisoner in my own room. I thought for a moment I would fling myself from the open window, and dash my brains out, but I felt afraid to do it. I was not penitent. At times my heart was subdued, but my stubborn pride rose in an instant, and bade me not yield. The pale face of my mother haunted me. I flung myself on the bed and fell asleep. Just at twilight I heard a footstep approach my door. It was my sister.

"What may I tell mother from you?" she asked.

"Nothing," I replied.

"Oh Alfred! for my sake, for all our sakes, say that you are sorry; let me tell mother that you are sorry. She longs to forgive you."

I would not answer. I had heard her footsteps slowly retreating, and again I flung myself on the bed to pass another wretched and fearful night.

Another footstep, slower and feebler than my sister's disturbed me. A voice called me by name. It was my mother's.

"Alfred, my son, shall I come? Are you sorry for what you have done?" she asked.

I cannot tell what influence, operating at that moment, made me speak adverse to my feelings.—The gentle voice of my mother that thrilled through me, melted the ice from my obdurate heart, and I longed to throw myself on her neck, but I did not. But my words gave the lie to my heart, when I said I was not sorry. I heard her withdraw. I heard her groan. I longed to call her back, but I did not.

I was awakened from my uneasy slumber, by hearing my name called loudly, and my sister stood by my bedside.

Get up, Alfred. Oh, don't wait a minute! Get up, and come with me. Mother is dying.

I thought I was yet dreaming, but I got up mechanically and followed my sister. On the bed pale and cold as marble lay my mother. She had not undressed. She had thrown herself on the bed to rest;—arising to go again to me, she was seized with a palpitation of the heart, and was borne senseless to her room.

I cannot tell you in my agony as I looked upon her—my remorse was tenfold more bitter from the thought that she would never know it. I believed myself to be her murderer. I fell on the bed beside her. I could not weep. My heart burned in my bosom; my brain was all on fire. My sister threw her arms around me and wept in silence.

Suddenly we saw a slight motion of mother's hand—her eyes unclosed. She had recovered consciousness, but not speech. She looked at me, and moved her lips. I could not understand her words. "Mother, mother," I shrieked, "say only that you forgive me." She could not say it with her lips, but, her hand pressed mine. She smiled upon me, and lifting her thin, white hands, she clasped my own within them, and cast her eyes upwards. She moved her lips in prayer, and thus she died. I remained still kneeling beside that dear form, till my gentle sister removed me. The joy of youth had left me forever.

Boys who spurn a mothers control, who are ashamed to own that they are wrong, who think it manly to resist her authority, or yield to her influence, beware! Lay not up for yourselves bitter memories for future years.

SABBATH AT ALL TIMES.—By different nations every day of the week is set apart for public worship: Sunday by the Christians, Monday by the Greeks, Tuesday by the Persians, Wednesday by the Assyrians, Thursday by Egyptians, Friday by the Turks, and Saturday by the Jews. Add to this the fact of the diurnal revolution of the earth, giving every variation of longitude a different hour and it becomes apparent that every moment is Sunday somewhere.

From the Drawing Room Companion,

Letter from London to Uncle Toby.

LONDON, MAY, 1851.

MY DEAR UNCLE:

How in creation tu commence tu tell you about the sights I have seed since bein' here, is a real puzzler. I'm so chuck full of it, that I can't tell you half. I was awful seasick on the vy'ge, and couldn't eat the value of a dollar's worth of vittles all the time I was on board that pesky steamboat. Whew! it makes me feel sick and all-overish to think about it even now. The smell of the machinery, the ile, and the shakin' and pitchin', why, uncle, did you ever swing too long and git dizzy, and feel as though you'd lost all yer friends and acquaintances? well, that's just as I felt all the time.

London's an orful big place. Bosting, New York and Philadelfy, all tu gether, aint no cirkumstance to it, though if there was a few less houses, a feller might see the place better. You know I cum here tu see the Great Fair, mostly, but the crowd has been so great that I haven't been inside yet. It's an awful big buildin', and covers about as much ground as the whole of Hogville, meetin' house, tannery, father's farm, the berrin' ground, and the pound altogether. I've been round it on the outside several times, but am waitin till the crowd is over, so I can see somethin' after I git inside. 'Twouldn't be no use to try now!—gracious, how many people there are in the world!

But, uncle, I've got somethin' dreadful bad tu tell you, because it look so kinder suspicious. I was standin' in Hyde Park, the other day, lookin' round at the kuriosities, when all of a sudden a woman touched my arm, and said, "Sir, wouldn't you be kind enuff to hold this ere bundle for me, till I can catch my husband? he's gone off the wrong way, and thinks I've gone ahead of him." Now you know, uncle, I'm just about as soft as sass with a woman, and she was a real nice lookin' gal. So says I, "yes marm," and tuck the bundle. 'Twas sort of heavy, and I didn't wonder she wanted tu git somebody tu hold it if she'd got to run fur. Well, I wated and wated for her to cum back, but she didn't cum, and the bundle begun to move. Creation! thought I, the thing's alive!

Well, I waited a good while longer, tremblin' all over, and by-and-by the bundle begun to cry! and goodness gracious! says I, it's a baby! I didn't go away from the spot till after dark, and then I didn't know what tu do. I was bordin' with a widder woman, in Threadneedle street, and when I brought the baby home, she said I couldn't stay there, that I was a gay deceiver, and ought to be ashamed of myself; and I did feel mean enough, that's a fact.—She wouldn't believe a word I told her, and said she would turn me out of the house if I brought the baby inside of her doors.

You can judge of my feelius. There I was, and there was the baby in my arms. It cost me tew shillins for milk and gingerbread tu keep it still. What was to be done? sez I tu myself. Nehemiah, you've been gulled by a Londoner. You needn't boast of your Yankee grit no more, if you don't go rite off and git rid of this ere baby as quick as you got it. So I went down to the Park the next mornin', after spendin' the whole night feedin' and rockin' that ere baby, and seein' a putty good loodin' gal, says I, "Miss, if you'll hold this buudle (I'd got it tu sleep, and done it all up nice like a bag of meal) for me till I just go inside the exhibition buildin' a minit, I'll give you a shillin." "Give me the money fust," said she. "Yes," said I, plankin' the tin in her hand. "Now," said she, "I must tell mother that I've got to wait here a minit, and then I'll be back again;" and so she went round the corner, and I haven't seen her since!

"Nehemiah," says I tu myself, "you are a fool, all a bilin' and runnin' over with greenness. You haint cut your eye teeth yet; you aint fit to be away from home. Only to think of it! a young, unmarried man, a stranger in London, with a four month baby! It's orful to think on." I tuck the baby back to a new lodgin' place, and paid a woman in advance to take care of it, and there the case stands. What on earth I shall du with it I don't know. The woman as takes care of it says I'm a dreadful wicked creature, and I begin to half believe her. That baby is on my hands yet, and it makes me eenamost sick to think of it. The woman says I'm bound to bring it up and edicate it. But only think, uncle, of my goin through teethin', the measles, whoopin' cough, rash, and all them are set of things with somebody's else's baby! You shall hear from me agin.

Your dutiful nephew,

NEHEMIAH FLUFKINS.

P. S. I've got rid of the baby. How, I will tell you in another letter, as the mail is closin.'

A LADY'S EXPENSES.—Some of our lady readers may like to know the difference between what it costs their husbands to keep them, and what Queen Victoria spends.

The Queen's salary was fixed by the reformed Parliament, in 1837 at £395,000, nearly $2,000,000, This is distributed among a number of persons lord chamberlains, grooms in waiting, gentleman ushers, seargent-at-arms whose duty it is to hold watch outside the King's tent, dressed in complete armor, armed with a bow, arrows and sword and the maces of office.

This is the nineteenth century! In the Lord Steward's department, the butter, bacon, eggs and cheese consumed, about equal Mr Fillmores salary. The Lord Stewart gets $10,000, and the master of the household, who does the so called duties, gets about $6,000. The kitchen takes £9,983, about $50,000, the chief cook getting $3,500 salary. This department costs annually £128,386, about $600,000. The department of the master of the horse, who gets $12,500 a year, costs $335,000 a year. On one occasion, recently, $355,000 were voted for the Queeen's stables, and the same session refused $150,000 for national education! "God save the Queen!"

Education Necessary to Make a Mechanic.

We know of no error which has obtained more prevalence, than the one which upholds the doctrine that more than the most limited education is requisite for those of whom it is intended to make mechanics, and we are quite certain that a more pernicious one was never advocated. We do not wish to favor the implication that a knowledge of the classics is absolutely necessary, in order that a man may become proficient or excel as a mechanic—although we never could understand why those intended for mechanical occupations, should be debarred the privilege of 'roaming amidst the beauties of scholastic lore'—but we do wish to be understood as asserting, that a thorough substantial education is radically essential to make a good mechanic.

And here we may be allowed to define our views as to what a mechanician really is. A skillful workman, in any calling, deserves, and will, in a great majority of instances—in this country at least—obtain credit for his labor. It requires much time and close attention, and not unfrequently much thought and patience to make a good workman at any mechanical employment, and for the expenditure of this time and the exercise of this thought, he deserves praise, and should be rewarded. But after all this, however long he may mould, or hew, or burnish; however skilful he may become, and however much praise he may deserve and receive, he is not a mechanic, he is not a mechanician! He is a workman only! the mere executant of the mechanicians will.

It is true that we often find 'genius in the workshop,' and the world is frequently startled by some 'great discovery' emanating from the bench of the workman. But in these cases the argument is on the side of education, and the inventor will tell you that he has studied long upon his darling idea, has spent many weary hours in research, has in fact educated himself, ere he could succeed in giving form and effect and worth to the idol of his genius. And in this case he is no longer a mere workman. His aspirations have nerved him to grapple with science, and where before he was but an admirer, he becomes the master, from the mere workman, he is transformed into the mechanician. There is this consideration connected with his case:—he has been forced by the demands of his genius to acquire now what he should have been privileged to learn when young, his education was merely defered. What we understand then as a mechanician is, one who is able to find the cause of an effect, to design as well as fashion, and who can give form and substance and truth to the creations of his genius. And this is being what nine out of every ten are not. It is being what education alone can make, or form the basis of a man's becoming.

We contend, therefore, that if parents expect their sons to become great in their calling, if they would have them more than mere workers, if in a word they design them to be mechanics, they must give them the proper education. Cast to the winds the musty doctrine that 'any education is good enough for a mechanic.' Do not grudge them the time they may consume, or the money they may cost you.—The investment will prove a profitable one, and you will have the proud satisfaction of knowing that the latent spark of genius, slumbering perhaps beneath a mountain of ignorance, has been fanned into a flame whose brightness may yet dazzle the world. Practice is indispensable to perfection, but practice alone never yet constituted greatness. There must be theory. There must be formed a basis for analysis to rest apon. There must be a guide to the discovery of fundamental principles. There must be knowledge.

Educate then your sons. Put in their hands the lever to overturn the thousand difficulties which lie embeded in the path you design your genius to lead them. If they do not benefit thereby they will not suffer. If it does not make them better mechanics, it will not make them poorer workmen. There is too much ignorance in our workshops, and the fault is mostly with parents. There is too much struggling by genius to accomplish what it is its right to understand, and what might and should be its prerogative.

Think of this, parents and guardians, and act accordingly.—Banner of the Union.

Selling "not Walnut."

A farmer in Burrillville once drove to Providence a load of green white-birch wood, and after trying in vain, the greater part of the day, to dispose of it at a fair price, he unexpectedly met a wealthy gentleman, who admired the wood exceedingly on account of its beautiful outside appearance, and inquired the name of its species. The farmer, perceiving that the gentleman was about as green as the wood, answered:

"Not walnut."

"Knot walnut!" said the gentleman; "what kind of wood is that? I never heard of it before."

"It is a wood," answered the farmer, "that will kindle the quickest and last the longest of any wood that grows."

"What is the price of it?" inquired the gentleman.

"Seven dollars a cord." answered the farmer.

"Seven dollars!" exclaimed the gentleman; "why I can buy the best hickory and oak for five."

"What of that said the farmer; "you could burn out two cords of good dry hickory or oak while you would be burning one of this."

"Ver well," said the gentleman; "drive to No. —— —— street."

"Not long afterwards the farmer again met the gentleman, and asked him how he liked that toad of wood.

"Like it!" said the the gentlemen! "not at all; you gouged me fairly. But I will give you credit for telling the truth. and pocket the joke; for as soon as a lighted match touches the outside bark the fire runs all over the wood like mad, and then all Providence couldn't burn it I shall never be out of wood, sir."

☞ 'Rot your cash system!' cried a man about town: 'if it comes about, what are we to do?'—Sure enough. If it comes the fashion for board to be paid once a week, what would become of those who never pay anything? They would be obliged to chance from house to house once a week, instead of once in two or three months, as at present.

PLAINFIELD GAZETTE.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Thursday; June 26, 1851.

☞ Mr Albert D. Drake is our authorised agent to receive subscriptions and advertisments.

☞ Mr. E. W. Carr, Third street, Philadelphia, opposite the Exchange, is our authorised agent for that city.

☞ Thos. S. Allison Esq. Secretary of state, will please accept our thanks for a copy of the laws passed at the seventy-fifth legislature of New Jersey.

☞ Public attention is called to the advertisement of Mr. E. Rice, in another column. The Baby Jumper and Walker combined is one of the most useful inventions of the age. The trouble, labor and hard knocks of the old system are entirely obviated by this new invention. The superior utility and adaptedness to the purposes for which it is designed will be perceived upon inspection. The child, without other assistance, without those hard knocks so incidental to its premature attempts at loco motion, and whilst amusing itself, is thereby learning to walk. Those interested can inspect this invention upon application at this office.

THE CROPS.—All our exchanges speak of the growing crops as promising a most bountiful harvest. The evidence hereabouts is of the same cheering character; the corn, which has been retarded by the cold nights of the past, is now greeted with a warm sun, and will soon present under its benign influence that luxuriant appearance so beautiful to behold and so cheering to the heart of the husbandman, to all. A copious shower on Monday afternoon has surcharged the atmosphere with a most delicious perfume and will tend to advance with increasing celerity the growing crops to their maturity.—The hearts of all are thus caused to abound with joy and gladness.

Nature ever acts by Immutable Laws.—Consequently man knows that no circumstance ever yet took place in opposition to those laws.—[Ed. Gazette.

"If the laws of nature are immutable, not only no miracles ever have in fact been wrought, but the very supposition of their having been wrought becomes absurd."

"We shall conclude by showing him (Ed. Gaz.) that what he would have succeeded in establishing, if his premises (as given above) were true, so far from proving that miracles could not have taken place must be true before they could have taken place."—"QUIS."

As we anticipated, "Quis," does not appear to be satisfied with the conclusions he arrived at last week in the "Grand Demonstration" which he attempted to make of the falsity of our premises and conclusions; it appears not to stay demonstrated even to the satisfaction of the demonstrator, he having proved too much, so much more than he promised that he has endeavored to do away with the overplus by an illustration; in which he endeavors to explain the difference between his six and our half-dozen, as given above; if he has succeeded in convincing himself we would congratulate him on his powers of perception, and at the same time implore him to look with an eye of compassion on the "bat-eyed" intellects of his fellow mortals.

With all the suppositions he has made this week he has taken especial care not to suppose a parallel case. He compares a perfect, infinite and immutable law—one which he admits none but Omnipotence could alter—with events which are wholly dependent upon the whims and fancies of weak and fallible mortals. The simplicity of the argument hence adduced corresponds with the premises upon which they are based; and are of the same power of those made use of in the 'grand demonstration'. We should not be surprised therefore, considering their profound depth, if their author finds it necessary to give another illustration before he will be able to make the "bat-eyed in intellect comprehend their profundity.

The question at issue stands at the head of this article, and is so plain that none have failed to comprehend it. It needs but evidence stronger than that upon which it is established to refute it. It is perceived by all, and by none quicker than those who deny its conclusions, that it is impossible to present such evidence; hence the attack upon the character and motives of those who dare to assert or defend it; they resort to all sorts if subterfuges to evade its conclusions; hence the difficulties of "Quis," and his occasional coadjutor of the Union; they run into all sorts of absurd dilemmas which oftener defeat their own arguments than those of their opponents. This is clearly shown to be the case in the devious windings of "Quis," instead of presenting that evidence if such exists, in a fair and lucid statement, to be decided upon its merits, he attacks infidelity; advancing arguments for them to show how easily they can be demolished; denouncing them for holding opinions founded on premises which he canot refute. This has been the course of our opponent "Quis." Being confounded in his own zig zag argument and criticims he fancies that because his readers cannot perceive what he has failed to produce that they must be "bat-eyed." If he can pursuade them that an attack on infidelity, or a one sided argument against Hume is a refutation of our proposition, or a proper reply thereto, then will we admit that they are more easily gulled than any evidence they have yet presented had led us to suspect, and that in such case either they or we are "bat-eyed" indeed.

"Quis" says that there is evidence sufficient to establish a contrary proposition, and to show that miracles have taken place; if so why does he not produce it? Is it not a sufficient reply, in the absense of and refusal or inability to produce it, to say that it does not exist?

As he may say something further in regard to infidelity, and that he may no longer evade the direct question at issue, we will admit, so far as the truth of our proposition is concerned, that he who holds an adverse opinion to another is a most presumptuous man, and that especially he who holds much less dare advocate the proposition at the head of this article is a most wicked and audacious infidel wretch, who should be (and undoubtedly would be, had intolerance the power) hanged; we trust therfeore, having it granted, that he will not take the trouble to prove it. As he still persists in arguing the subject with Hume, that he may evade the issue, we have not thought it necessary to follow him further. The insinuations and innuendoes throughout his article we deem unworthy of notice.

Some sensible chap truly says, that a person who tries to raise himself by scandalizing others, might just as well sit down on a wheelbarrow and try to wheel himself.

[COMMUNICATED.]

Immutability of God, is his unchangeableness.—"This is a perfection," says Dr. Blair, "which perhaps, more than any other, distinguishes the divine nature from the human—gives complete energy to all its attributes, and entitles it to the highest adoration. From hence are derived the regular order of nature and the steadfastness of the universe. Hence flows the unchanging tenor of those laws which from age to age regulate mankind. Hence the uniformity of that government, and the certainty of those promises, which are the ground of our trust and security. An objection however may be raised against this doctrine from the command given us to pray, and other religious exercises; to what purpose it may be urged, is homage addressed to a being whose plan is unalterably fixed? This objection would have weight, if our religious addresses were designed to work any alteration in God, either by giving him information of what he did not know, or by exciting affections which he did not possess; or by inducing him to change measures which he had previously formed; but they are only crude, and imperfect notions of religion, which can suggest such ideas. The change which our devotions are intended to make are upon ourselves, not upon the Almighty. The contemplation of this divine perfection should raise in our minds admiration—should teach us to imitate, as far as our frailty will permit, that constancy and steadfastness which we adore."

State Bank at Morris.

Much interest has been excited in our midst by the recent trial in the Morris Circuit, of Harvey Dayton the former Cashier of the above banking institution on a charge of perjury, he having sworn on the 20th of August 1849, that the Bank possessed a bona fide cash capital of $40,000. The facts developed in the whole case as fully reported in the New Yor Herald exhibit a bold attempt to defraud the community, and justly merit the general denunciation they have received. We are rejoiced to say that our New Jersey citizens are relieved of the odium of the affair, as the work of concocting this precious piece of villany was done in Wall street. Still it is a matter of regret that any whom we have been accustomed to respect should be even innocent actors in such a disgraceful transaction. The result of this trial will have a most beneficial effect, as it will demonstrate that our New Jersey Courts are determined to administer justice to all alike, regardless of wealth and influence. After a clear and able charge from the Judge the Jury retired on Friday evening and soon came into Court with a verdict of guilty.—There is much speculation about the sentence. It may be seven years in State Prison, or $800 fine, or both; or a mere nominal fine and a short imprisonment. But all agree that the conviction itself, for such an offence, is a terrible punishment—branding a man with infamy and driving him from the society of his fellow beings. It is worthy of remark that there was no testimony produced as to his veracity or integrity.

After the jury retired, the Court called the case of Lambert Norton, the president of the bank, for the same offence with whick Dayton, the Cashier, stood charged, both having sworn jointly to the affidavit asserting that there were $40,000 bona fide cash capital in the bank. The counsel for the defence said that Mr. Norton was absent on account of the sickness of his wife. The Court suggested that, in the absence of Norton, counsel proceed with the case against the Directors, for conspiracy to defraud the State Bank at Morris, by erasing the name of Peter Sanderson, endorsed upon a draft found in the bank on the 31st of October, 1849, the day the bank failed —Newark Mercury.

Withdrawal from the Protestant Episcopal Church.

CINCINNATI, June 20.

The Rev. B. P. Angelrodt, a distinguished Minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, has, in a letter of considerable length to Bishop Mellvaine, withdrawn from the ministry of that Church. He says he believes the Church needs reformation, but that she cannot be reformed; he must therefore reform from her; he cannot give his influence to what he regards as fundamentally wrong; his objections are based principally upon the Roman tendency of the Church. It is not stated what denomination he purposes connecting himself with, but he leans towards Presbyterianism.

☞ MEETING HOUSE DESTROYED.—The Wood-Bury Constitution, states that the Friend's Meeting house at Haddonfield, one of the most venerable edifices in the country, was lately destroyed by one of the opposition parties into which the ancient society ty was divided some 24 years ago, during the discussions about the doctrines set forth by Flias Hicks.

BATTLE OF NEW ORLEANS.—A correspondent states that the late Major Devezac, when a passenger some years ago on board the packet ship Cambridge, from Liverpool te New York, related the following incident illustrative of tha sharp shooting at the battle of New Orleans. He stated that, on the morning after the battle, twelve broiled robins were placed on the breakfast table, prepaired for General Jackson and his suite, which had been shot with a rifle, through the head, by one of the Kentucky Riflemen, who had been in the conflict; he had fired thirteen times and missed hitting the bird in the head, only once! This circumstance being soon known in the neighborhood, a certificate of the fact was requested of and obtained from Gen. Jackson and his aids, by the Rritish officers, that, by such evidence, on their return to England, they might exhibit to their Government the character of the enemy at New Orleans.

☞ Men who disregard their word, and only refuse to break it when it is for their interest, are unsafe friends, and not to be trusted. We admire the character of those persons who will always fulfil their agreements, be the injury to themselves ever so great. You know just where to find them, and their word is as good as a written obligation. Forgetfulness is a poor excuse for the non performance of contracts.

☞ The man most "looked up to" in our community at present are the worthy mechanics engaged in repairing the Universalist Church.—Portsmouth Messenger.

Later from Europe.

The Collins steamer Arctic arrived here June 22d. at 3 o'clock P. M., making the voyage from Liverpool in eleven days and three hours. She brings 97 passengers, among them Archbishop Hughes. The Cambria from Boston arrived out on the 8th, making the passage in eleven days, ten hours.

The news from Europe is better than we have had lately. In France the revision scheme has got a hard blow and may not survive. The Committee appointed in the Assembly to consider and report upon it has seven members out of fifteen, who are utterly opposed to it, some of them being among the most determined Republicans in the country. This augers any-thing but the three-quarters majority necessary to carry ther measure, and necessary to be had, too, for three successive months. It is possible that the revisionists may find themselves compelled to compromise by restoring Universal Suffrage in order to procure the revision. In that case, though we must think it would be better to stick by the present Constitution and let Louis Napoleon retire, there would be no good reason for fearing harm of the Republic.

The report that a counter-revolution had broken out in Portugal leaves Saldanha still winding his devious way among the factions he cannot destroy and may hardly hope to manage. Little good is to be hoped from his government except as generally in Portugal any change of rulers can cause no detriment and may be beneficial.

In South Africa things wear a most disastrous aspect for the British Colonies. The Kaffirs are evidently too strong for the forces Sir Harry Smith can bring against them. The farmers are accordingly forced to desert their fields in order to defend their families. Whatever the final result, great distress, must be the consequence to these pioneer settlers who can least afford to lose either their time or property.

Cotton and bread stuffs remain firm at prepious prices in the European markets.—Tribune.

Singular Accident.—Nose Lost and Recovered.—The following singular case is related by a correspondent of the Journal of Commerce.

A servant girl of unusually pleasing appearance living in the family of Dr. F. H. Clark, Dentist, No. 118 Ninth street, on Sunday evening 25ultimo. accidentally thrust her head through a glass door, completely cutting off the larger part of her nose. After a lapse of some minutes, the piece was found adhering to the broken glass. It was immediately placed in its proper position by Dr. C and so held until an adhesive plaster could be obtained, when it was secured as well as circumstances would permit. At the expiration of about two weeks the plaster was removed, and the operation found triumphantly successful; and now (18th June) there can be observed no more deformity than would be occasioned by a slight scratch.

After the operation, Dr. C. consulted an eminent surgeon, who remarked that all had been done that was necessary, but that he had no confidence that the parts would unite.

The above is made public that all may know the effect of promptness in similar cases. Dr. C. has the gratification of knowing that a human face has been saved from disfigurement for life.

LICENSE LAW IN MAINE.—The provisions of the new license law in Maine are very stringent. Only licensed persons, and they only for mechanical and medical purposes, are allowed to manufacture or sell spirituous liquors. For the first offence a fine of $100 is provided, for the second $200, and for the third $200 and four months imprisonment. No person engaged in the illegal sale of spirituous liquors is allowed to sit on a jury before which any trial under this act is held, and such trials are to take precedence of other business before the courts. The premises of suspected persons to be searched, and all liquors not found in the original packages as imported, to be destroyed.

Seizure of Liquor.

PORTLAND, June 21.

Great excitement this afternoon in this city in consequence of the seizure by the City Marshal of twenty casks of Liquor, valued at $1,300, belonging to Samuel H. Sawyer. Sawyer resisted the officer, but finally the liquor was taken away. This is the first enforcement of the New Liquor Law.

Extensive Farming Operation.

The most extensive farming operation probably ever entered into in any country, has been successfully carried through in California during the past Autumn and Winter. We allude to the speculation of Horner & Co.

Mr. Horner's Rancho is situated in the San Jose Valley. It contains 1,000 acres of land and is inclosed by an iron fence which alone cost $10,060.—Last Autumn 300 acres only were under cultivation, 250 of which were planted in potatoes, the rest in turnips, tomatoes, onions, &c.

Day before yesterday the last sack of the potato crop was sold, and the gross proceeds of this crop have amounted to $178,000. There have been eighty hands employed on the Rancho, and the total expense of carrying it on during the season has been $80,000. The sacks in which the potatoes have been shipped cost about $8,000 while the gross receipts for the total crop of the Rancho, have amouned to $223,000.

This season the entire 1,000 acres are under cultivation, six hundred and fifty being planted in potatoes and the remainder in other vegetables.—Sac, Transcript.

ORGANIC AND AUTHORITATIVE.—The Washington Republic is now regarded as the organ of the present Administration. That when placed in connection with the following sentence, which we clipped from that paper of the 2d inst., makes the matter submitted look quite significant:

"We cannot forbear expressing an opinion at this time upon which we are willing to rest our character for prophecy. It is simply, that Millard Fillmore, unless some reaction now unthought of shall take place before the time of nomination, will be the Whig candidate—Union and Peoples candidate also, for the next Presidency."

THE PENDULUM.—A one-pound iron ball thrown with the force of 8 ounces of powder, will range about 6000 feet in 14 1-2 seconds of time. A mathematical friend informs us that, if the pendulum indicates the earths rotation, as is alleged, a ball with such size and force aimed due south, from the latitude of Trenton, should fall four feet to the west-ward. This he believes has not been found to be the fact.

To whom it may concern.

If the person who took a piece of Goods from a certain store in Plainfield, (without leave or license) on Wednesday the 18th inst., should feel inclined to return it soon, it will be received, without exposing the name to the community; otherwise the individual will not only be made known, but probably be held to answer the demands of the law in such cases.

Plainfield, June 24. 1851.

Dare and Do.

Dare to think, though bigots frown
Dare in words your thoughts express,
Dare to rise when you fall down,
Dare the wronged and scorned to bless.

Dare from custom to depart,
Dare the priceless pearl posses,
Dare to wear it next your heart,
Dare when sinners curse to bless.

Dare forsake what you deem wrong,
Dare to walk in wisdom's way,
Dare to give where gifts belong,
Dare God's precepts to obey.

Do what conscience says is right,
Do what reason says is best,
Do with willing mind and might,
Do your duty and be blest.

DIED.

LET US REASON.

The ingredients of which Dr. Rogers' Syrup of Liverwort, Tar, and Canchalagua is composed, have certain specific qualities which have been clearly established by the highest medical testimony.—California has given us something more valuable than gold, in the plant Canchalagua. It is the finest of vegetable tonics, and has the invaluable property of reconiting the strength, while it represses fever. Tar, as an expectorant, has no equal. It looseus and expels the mucus from the Lungs, and thus restores to them freedom of action. As an internal styptic, Liverwort has long been known; but besides arresting bleeding from the Lungs, it seems to exercise a beneficial influence over the whole Respiratory Apparatus. Thus, then, we have in this compound, the properties of strengthening, allaying fever, arresting hemorrhage, and soothing irritation. In this combination consists the rationale of its wonderful cures of Coughs' Colds, and incipient consumption, for the particulars and vouchers of which, see pamphlet to be had of Agents; also advertisment in another column.

A NEW ILLUSTRATED PAPER.

AGENTS WANTED THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES.

ON THE 1st of JULY, 1851, was commenced the regular publication of a new Pictorial and Literary Weekly Journal, called

SEARS' FAMILY VISITOR,

For the cultivation, improvement and refinement of the home circle. Conducted by Robert Sears, the well-known Pictorial Book Publisher in the city of New York. The Visitor is printed every Saturday, and will be a compendium of literature and intelligence, embracing stories, adventures, essays, anecdotes, miscellany and news, together with agricultural and scientific departments, and a summary embracing the principal events enacting throughout the world. Our tales and stories are the best the wide field of literature can afford, consisting of selections from the principal English and American period'cals and contributions from American authors of celebrity. Our miscellany is culled from the choicest productions of the masters of English literature, and affords a varied and highly entertaining collection of elegant extracts and choice fragments.

Every number of our journal will contain two or more executed in the highest style of the art, and always accompanied with descriptive and explanatory letter-press. These illustrations make the most valuable and interesting feature of the paper, generally consistsng of subjects of passing and immediate interest or usefulness.

In order to present these views in as finely executed manner as possible, every number is printed on paper of the finest and most beautiful quality, substantial and firm, so as to bear handling, and which will preserve the illustrations in their original beauty. No expense will be spared to make the Visitor the most valuable of all our weekly journals.

Terms.—Two dollars per annum invariably in advance. Clubs supplied at the following rates: three copies, $5; six copies, $10; ten copies, $15; fourteen copies, $20.

CLUBS.—Additions will always be made to a club at the same rate at which the original club was furnished, and the paper will be mailed to any direction that may be desired. It is not necessary, in getting up a club, that all who compose it should be at the same post town. Specimen numbers furnished gratis.

All letters must be post-paid.

Money that is current at the place where the subscription is made will be taken in payment for the paper.

Be sure, in ordering the paper, to give the name of the post office, county, and State, where it is to be sent.

We are desirous of procuring agents in every town, village and city in the Union. All persons disposed to assist us in this way can learn full particulars, and our terms, which are most liberal, by addressing, post-paid, a line to the proprietor. Active and intelligent men out of employment, as well as postmasters and others, would do well to give their attention to our journal.

ROBERT SEARS, Publisher and Proprietor,
181 William street, New York.

To Publishers of Newspapers throughout the United States.

Newspapers copying this advertisement entire, well displayed, as above, without any alteration or abridgment, (including this notice,) and giving it two insertions, shall receive the Visitor for one year, or a copy of any one of our $2 50 or $3 works, (subject to their order,) by sending direct to the publisher.

No letter will be taken from the office unless post-paid.

CELEBRATION OF THE 4TH OF JULY.

FAIR AND FESTIVAL

AT

BOUND BROOK.

Arrangements have been made to celebrate the coming 4th of July at Bound Brook, in a manner becoming the spirit of the day. A procession under the direction of Col. Wm. Thompson of Somerville, and headed by the Princeton Blues, will be formed at half past 9 o'clock, in the village, at Mr. C. P. Holcombe's. Thence they will advance to Middlebrook, and returning proceed to the Ref. Dutch Church in South Bound Brook.

The exercises in the church will be opened with prayer and the reading of the Declaration of Independence. An oration will then be delivered by the Hon. George Brown of Somerville.

At the close of the above exercises, a DINNER will be served by the ladies upon the grounds at the Church, A FAIR also will be opened in the Lecture room during the day and various Refreshments served.

At half past 3 o'clock, Daniel Talmage Esq. of Brooklyn N. Y. will deliver an address in the church.

The whole of the exercises will be enlivened by the Princeton Band of music.

The proceeds of the above are for the benefit of the Ref. Dutch Church.

Tickets for Dinner 50cts, and can be procured at any time previous at C. P. Holcombe's or at John Creed's and upon the grounds at the day of the celebration.

BRIDGE BUILDERS.

BABY JUMPER

AND

WALKER COMBINED.

The subscriber having invented and made application for a patent for the above article would hereby call the attention of the public to its superiority over all others.

It forms a neat article of furniture, somewhat resembling an ottoman; it being upon castors, the little occupant can move it in all directions around the room with the utmost ease. The top opens by a spring and then closes around under the child's arms and locks. The child sits in an upright position upon a saddle or seat, stuffed perfectly soft, bearing no weight on his arms, with its feet resting upon the floor. The child can easily raise the article, and as there is a spring in each leg it can use it as a jumper for its amusement, or push itself around the room, thus learning to walk without other asistance. As the springs buoys the child up, thereby preventing too much weight upon its feet, it gradually learns to use its legs and soon learns to walk. The child can in no manner receive injury; a trial or inspection will satisfy the most skeptical of its superior utility.

Prices from $5 to $10 each, according to style of trimmings &c. Orders punctually attended to by

NEW AND CHEAP FURNITURE AND CHAIR ESTABLISHMENT,

311 Broad-St., Newark N. J.

(Nearly opposite Washington Hall.)

THE proprietor begs leave to announce to the Public, that he has taken the large and commodious store 311 Broad-st. Newark, N. J., where he is prepared to supply any article in the furniture and chair line as low as can be purchased in New York. The following are some of the leading articles

Sofas of every description, Marble and Mahogany-top Dressing Bureaus, Book Cases, Work Stands, marble and mahogany-top Wash Stands, Hat Stands, Tete a Tetes, Divans and Ottomans, Bedsteads, including French, Grecian, Cottage and Plain; mahogany Rocking Chairs, mahogany sitting Chairs of every style and quality; also, Cane Seat, Grecian, Fancy and cottage Chairs; Centre, Side and Sofa Tablss; a large assortment of Looking Glasses; Refrigerators of all sizes, both chest and upright; and every other article in the furniture line, from the most elegant and fashionable drawing room Sofa, to the plainest article of kitchen furniture.

All of the above articles warranted as good as can be purchased elsewhere. He will also guarantee to sell them cheaper than any other establishment in this city.

We think any person about furnishing either on a large or small scale, can do as well at our place as at any other establishment in the country. The styles are as new, and we think, in as good taste as can be found in the city of New York or elsewhere, and we believe that good furniture can be purchased here and shifted to any part of the country at such a rate as to yield to the purchaser more value for his money, than if brought in any of our larger cities.

Please call and judge for yourselves. Don't forget the name and number.

Newark, April 3d, 1851. H. ELLS.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels; such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt.

RUPTURES, are always to be treated with the surgical instruments known as Trusses and Supporters, and these require to be skillfully applied. With this view, the HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE, now established some thirty years, has under the various managers, presented to the public both male and female attendants to apply its instruments directly to the persons, which is preferable in all cases, and has also made improvement at different times, showing that advancement which study and practice only yield toward the relief of this malady.

With much pleasure the fact is now published, that recent improvements BUTLER'S TRUSS PADS have been made, and sufficiently tested upon numerous cases to warrant, through the cures already affected, their submission to the public, as being in adaptation and efficiency superior to any heretofore made known.

These improvements, recently patented, are now being applied at this office, 4 Vesey street, in cases of rupture, gravitation of the bowels, prolapsus uteri, prolapsus ani and piles.

The public may rely upon that care being made in their application, which will most likely tend to the final cure of the several complaints.

Hull's Truss Office, 4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St. Paul's Church, New-York.

FRED'K M BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The ladies' department is attended by a female qualified to fit the instruments, having so attended this office for many years.

Children trussed when only two weeks old, and invariably cured. [145is.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS,

or Medicated Compound.

INFALLIBLE for renewing, invigorating, and beautifying the HAIR, removing the scurf, dandruff, and all affections of the scalp; and curing eruptions on the skin, diseases of the glands, muscles and integuments, and releieving stings, cuts, bruises, sprains, &c. With this preperation "there is no such word as fail." The first journals in America, medical men of the highest eminence, prominent citizens of all professions, and ladies who have used it for years in their dressing rooms and nurseries, admit with one accord, that for imparting vigor, gloss, luxurience and curl to the hair, eradicating scurf and dandruff, healing wounds, curing contusions, sprains, stings, &c., and relieving diseases of the skin, the glands and the muscles, it has no equal, among the multitude of compounds advertised in the public prints, or used in private practice. In cheapness as well as efficacy, Barry's Tricopherous is unrivalled. The immense cash sales of the article have enabled the Inventor to supply it at retail, at 25 cents per bottle, which is from 50 to 100 per cent. less than the price of any other preperation for the hair now in use. The scientific treatise on the hair and the skin, (embracing valuable directions for the culture and preservation of Nature's choicest ornament.) in which each bottle is enclosed, is alone worth the money.

The affinity between the membranes which constitute the skin, and the hair which draws its sustenance from this triple envelope is very close. All diseases of the hair originate in the skin oi the head. If the pores of the scalp are clogged, or if the blood and other fluids do not circulate freely through the small vessels which feed the root with moisture, and impart life to the fibres, the result is scurf, dandruff, shedding of the hair, graveness, dryness and harshness of the ligaments, and entire baldness, as the case may be. Stimulate the skin to healthful action with the Tricopherous, and the torpid vessels, recovering their activity, will anihilate the disease. In all affections of the skin, and of the substrata of muscles and integuments, the process and the effect are the same.—It is upon the skin, the muscular fibre, and the glands, that the Tricopherous has its specific action, and in all affections and injury of these organs, it is a sovereign remedy.

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York; and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States and Canada. [134is

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

Among the numerous discoveries Science has made in this generation to facilitate the business of life—increase its enjoyment, and even prolong the term of human existence, none can be named of more real value to mankind, than this contribution of Chemistry to the Healing Art. A vast trial of its virtues throughout this broad country, has proven beyond a doubt, that no medicine or combination of medicine yet known, can so surely control and cure the numerous varieties of pulmonary disease which have hitherto swept from our midst thousands and thousands every year. Indeed, there is now abundant reason to believe a Remedy has at length been found which can be relied on to cure the most dangerous affections of the lungs. Our space here will not permit us to publish any proportion of the cures affected by its use, but we would present the following opinions of eminent men, and refer further enquiry to the circular which the Agent below named, will always be pleased to furnish free wherein are full particlars, and indisputable proof of these facts.

From the President of Amherst College, the celebrated PROFESSOR HITCHCOCK.

"James C. Ayer—Sir: I have used your CHERRY PECTORAL in my own case of deep-seated Bronchitis, and am satisfied from its chemical constitution, that it is an admirable compound for the relief of laryngial and bronchial difficulties. If my opinion as to its superior character can be of any service, you are at liberty to use it as you think proper.

EDWARD HITCHCOCK, L. L. D.,
From the widely celebrated

PROFESSOR SILLIMAN, M. D., L. L. D., Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, &c., Yale College, Member of the Lit, Hist. Med. Phil. and Scientific Societies of America and Europe.

"I deem the CHERRY PECTORAL an admirable composition from some of the best articles in the Materia Medica, and a very effective remedy for the class of diseases it is intended to cure."

New Haven, Ct., Nov. 1 1849.

MAJOR PATTISON, President of the S. C. Senate, states he has used the CHERRY PECTORAL with wonderful success, to and inflammation of the lungs.

From one of the first Physicians in Maine.

SACO, Me., April 26, 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell. Dear Sir: I am now constantly using your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, and prefer it to any other medicine for pulmonary complaints. From observation of many severe cases, I am convinced it will cure coughs, colds, and diseases of the lungs, that have put to defiance all other remedies.

I invariably reccommend its use in cases of consumption, and consider it much the best remedy known for that disease.

Respectfully yours, I. S. CUSHMAN, M. D.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impotency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cerd al cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain natnre, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without offspring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

It also possesses the unrivalled qualities of curing incipient Consumption, and I have administered it with great success to patients who have sought our delightful climate for the restoration of their health and the result is that a medicine has been added to the catalogue for the cure of insipient consumption.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co., of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper.

WONDERFUL CURES!

AND

CANCHALAGUA;

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to

CONSUMPTION.

NOTHING LIKE IT.

CURE FOLLOWS CURE!

READ THE EVIDENCE!!

The above invaluable Medicine has now been before the public sufficiently long to have its virtues thoroughly tested. It has been used by all classes of the community, under every possible variety of circumstances, and has everywhere proved itself a most powerful and efficient Cough Medicine. Lung Diseases of all kinds, yield to its influence, as mists pass away upon the rising of the Sun. This is no fiction. We give you below, letters from persons who are now living in the state of New York, and who declare, over their own signatures, all that we could possibly desire to say in its favor. Those who can read their statements and yet remain incredulous, must be beyond the reach of human testimony.

A LOVELY YOUNG LADY

CURED OF CONSUMPTION!

☞ The following is from the pen of WM. H. LEVISON, Esq., the distinguished Editor of the U. S. Military and Naval Argus under date New York, Jan. 26, 1850. What could be more conclusive?

"It is seldom we permit ourselves to occupy a space in these columns to speak in praise of any article in the patent medicine way; but when we see the life of a fellow-creature saved by the use of any medicine whatever, we consider it as our right, if not a duty, to give a simple statement of facts, that others may, in like manner be benefitted. The case which has induced us to pen this article, was that of a young lady of our acquaintance, who, by frequent exposure to the night air, contracted a cold, which settled on the Lungs before its ravages could be stayed. (This occurred two years ago this winter.) Various remedies were used, but with very little effect or benefit. The cough grew worse, with copious expectoration, and the sunken eye, and pale, hollow cheek, told plainly that PULMONARY DISEASE was doing its worst on her delicate frame. The family physician was consulted and although he would not admit to the young lady that she really had the CONSUMPTION, yet he would give no encouragement as to a cure. At this crisis, her mother was persuaded to make use of a bottle of Dr. Rogers' Compound Syrup of LIVEWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA and we are happy to state, she was perfectly cured in less than three months by this medicine alone, after even hope was destroyed. It is useless to comment on such a case as this, for the truth will reach where polished fiction never can. If any doubt the authenticity of this statement, let them call at this office.—U. S. Military and Naval Argus Office, No 79 Chatam N. Y.

COUGH AND DISEASE

OF 14 MONTHS STANDING.

CURED.

AFTER BEING GIVEN UP TWICE

BY EMINENT PHYSICIANS!

Albany, June 9th, 1849.

Messrs. A. L. Scovill & Co.—I herewith forward to you a Certificate of a Cure, effected by your Compound Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua The Cough and expectoration was of fourteen months standing, and had baffled the skill of several of our eminent physicians in New York, Albany, and Cooperstown. I am the person in whom the cure was effected, and as I had previously no faith in patent medicines, I have since tried it on others, and have become satisfied of its value. Mine was as GREAT A CURE as ever was performed, as I had, during my sickness, been given up twice by my physicians. I have now commenced my business, after taking, I think about eight bottles.

Yours, repectfully, THOS. C. FAULDER.

BLEEDING AT THE LUNGS CURED.

☞ SEE HOW PROMPTLY IT ACTS!

Statement of Mr. A. Lang, Baker, No 388 Pearl street, N. Y. A few days before last Christmas, I was taken unwell, and soon commenced bleeding freely at the Lungs. I called in a Homœopathic Physician, but his medicine did not seem to help me. I read your advertisement, and thought I would try Dr. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA. Before I had takea up the third bottle, by bleeding had stopped, my Cough was gone, and I felt well as usual. My health is now good. I consider it a most excellent medicine, and cordially reccommend it to my friends. [This statement was made to the Proprietors, March 12th 1850.]

The Yankee Schoolmaster.

A SKETCH.

BY THE OLD 'UN.

When Elnathan Sawkins—who was as "lean and hungry" as Cassius himself—obtained the District School, in the little Dutch village of New Esopus, of Long Island, and found that he was to board for the first quarter, with old Hermanus Degroot, the richest farmer in the village, he considered himself, as well he might, the most lucky of itinerant pedagogues; for accustomed to the lenten fare of a sterile New England farm, he found himself at once in the focus of an unbounded agricultural plenty and social hospitality. Katrine Degroot, the daughter of his host, was also as buxom and blooming a representative of Dutch beauty as ever greeted the eye of an amateur. But her heart was either not inflammable or its fire had already been monopolized, for she made no reply to the expressive glance aimed at her by the gooseberry eyes of her Yankee admirer. So, after a fruitless expenditure of this sort of ammunition, the schoolmaster was fain to content himself with the grosser delights of buckwheat cakes, pies, puddings, fritter, ham, eggs, shell fish, beef and poultry—luxuries with the weight of which the hospitable table of Degroot daily groaned.

But the more Elnathan devoured, the more he craved—his appetite growing by what it fed upon. Nothing more pleased old Degroot and his wife than to witness his trencher performances, though it must be confessed that this voracity sunk him yet lower in the good graces of Katrina, whose culinary labors it increased.

Katrina had a lover—a very good-hearted, handsome, jovial young fellow, named Derrick Van Horne, who unfortunately, did not stand very high with the old people, from some unaccountable prejudice, and whose visits had been formally forbidden This youth held Yankees in great aversion and dread and was very angry when he found Elnathan domiciliated in the house, for with the true feeling of a lover, he was not a little susceptible of jealousy.

Matters stood thus, when one Sunday night, after all the family had gone to bed, the schoolmaster, tormented by his never satisfied craving for good things, arose in the dark and descended into the kitchen, for the purpose of ravaging the pies and puddings in the pantry. He had already marched valorously into the heart of a mince, and was meditating an attack on a pumpkin, when he saw the glimmer of a lamp, and perceived, through a crevice of the pantry-door, the plump person of Miss Katarina Degroot. The Fraulein sat her lamp upon the table, and then dropped her pretty person into an arm-chair.

Here was a predicament for the schoolmaster! He could not make his escape without a virtual declaration of the pilfering, and Katrina was the last person to whom he was desirous of making the humiliating avowal. So he held the door fast on the inside, and waited in agony for the denoument, whatever it might be. Presently a whistle—a low, peculiar whistle was heard outside, and Katrina, running to the door, admitted her faithful lover, the above mentioned Derrick Van Horne

Then followed a long scene very interesting to the lovers, but inexpressibly tedious to the poor schoolmaster, who pent up in durance vile. At last he heard his name mentioned by Derrick, and caught up by the young lady.

"He!" exclaimed Katrina, in reply, doutless, to some remark of her lover, "I hate him; he's a great slab-sided glutton—always eating and never satisfied, and keeps me slaving at cooking victuals from morning till night And then my pies and cakes disappear in the most mysterious manner. I wish I could catch him at it! It would n't be good for him, I can tell him!"

"And I wish I could catch him casting sheep's eyes at you, Katrina," said her lover. "I'd double him up and set him on a shelf! I'd spoil his appetite for one while—I would!"

At hearing these words, the soul of the poor Yankee died within him. What would become of him if he fell into the hands of those tigers!

"Murder! thieves!" shouted a shrill, sharp voice, at the head of the stairs. "Get up, Mr. Degroot! I tell you there's robbers in the house"

"O, dear! there's father coming!" cried Katrina, 'where shall I hide you? He mustn't find you here! Quick! quick! go into the pantry!"

Derrick was no soonor thrust into the pantry than old Degroot made his appearance, enveloped in a very ancient dressing gown, with a night-cap on his head, and a rusty fowling-piece in his hand. He was much relieved at finding only his daughter.

"But what are you doing here?" he asked.

"You know it's washing day," she answered, "and I always get up betimes."

"Betimes! Why it can't be more than eleven o'clock. Look at the clock!"

Fortunately the clock had stopped. "Well, if it's so nigh morning, Katy, I'll stop and have a smoke."

With that he produced a pipe and set himsalf to smoking, while Katrina bustled about, filling tubs and boilers, and slopping water over the paternal legs, in the hope of making him uncomfortable, and driving him off again to bed.

"Mr. Degroot!" shrieked a shrewish voice from the top of the stairs, "aint you never coming to bed?"

"It's most morning," answered Degroot, "and here's Katy going about her washing."

"Morning! nonsense!" retorted Mrs. Degroot, angrily, "it aint twelve o'clock. Come to bed, both of you!"

Thus urged, both the farmer and Katrina were obliged to go up stairs, but the latter left a light, promising to return speedily and liberate her lover.

As soon as the coast was clear, Derrick burst out of the closet, dragging the terrified schoolmaster after him, and exclaiming, "I'll see who you are. The schoolmaster! by thunder!" he added, as he recognized his supposed rival.

"I was only arter the pies," faltered the poor pedagogue.

"You was arter Katrina!" roared Derrick. "If you was my size I'd lick you in a twinkling!"

"Murder! murder!" roared the schoolmaster.

"Shut up, you varmint!" exclaimed Derrick.—"What you want! There, then, take that!"

And with these words he plunged the Yankee head foremost, into the largest washing-tub, and made his escape at the same momont. It was well he did so, for Dugroot, his wife, and Katrina, all rushed together into the kitchen to discover the cause of the outcry.

Degroot seized the victim and set him on his feet.

"Take him off of me!" cried the bewildered schoolmaster.

"Take who off of you!" roared the farmer.

"Derrick Van Horne!"

"He's crazy!" said the old woman.

"He's drunk!" whispered Katrina, in her father's ear.

"I jest went into the pantry, to get a leetle piece of that 'ere last pumpkin," said the schoolmaster, "when Derrick fotched me out by the scuff and throw'd me into the water."

"You wasn't after the pie," said Degroot, "you was after that long stone bottle with the little curly ear. You're sizzled, and you'd better go to bed! Shall I help you up stairs?"

"No sir!" said the schoolmaster, gesticulating so vehemently that he sprinkled all his auditors with soapsuds, "I am abundantly able to take keer of myself. And I give you fair warnin' now—I shall change my boardin' place to-morrow."

"I pity the man that takes you," replied the farmer.

"And I shall forthwith bring an action for slander."

"Go to bed!" chorused his three companions, "and recover damages!"

"Go to bed!"

"And make you sweat for it!"

"Go to bed!"

"But with the mornimg cool reflection came." He thought it best not to change his boarding-place or to bring his action, and when, a few weeks afterwards, Miss Katrina Degroot became Mrs. Derrick Van Horne, her husband made a confession of his agency in the misadventures of that memorable night, and completely exonerated the Yankee Schoolmaster.

Letter from London to Uncle Toby.

HOW NEHEMIAH GOT RID OF HIS BABY.

DEAR UNCLE:

As I'd paid to have that ere baby taken care of for a month in advance, I kinder thought I wouldn't hurry about getting rid of it, but take time to do it handsome, and so 'twouldn't kum back agin. In the meantime, I kalkilate that I travelled about London some. O, Jerusha! how many fine things there was in the winders, picters and playthings. I met Dr. J. V. C. Smith, yesterday, of Bosting. He knowed me like a book, cos he knockilated me when I was a baby. "Mr. Flufkins!" sez he. "Doctor," sez I, "you don't know how rejiced I am tu see you." "Thank'e," said he. Then he told me a great deal about the fair, 'cause he's one of them fellers chused to award the medals and premiums. I kinder wanted to ask his advice about the baby, and what I should du with it, but I was ashamed tu, and so I held my tongue.

But what made me feel the most ashamed was carrying the baby out every day. The woman insisted that I must du so, and said I was a most unfeelin' brute if I didn't give it the benefit of the fresh air, and declared she could not keep it another day if I didn't take it to the Park every afternoon. It did seem as though every thing conspired tu bother me, but I give up and took the child out to the Park every day. One morning I met Mr. Riddle in the Fair. I'd seed him in Bosting, and thinks I, here goes, I'll make a confidant of him and ask his advice, for he's a mighty clever fellow. You know Riddle, the auctioneer, uncle? Well, he heerd me through, and said,—"Nehemiah, you aint up to snuff; why don't you put the baby 'up the spout?'"

"Mr. Riddle," said I, "what's that?" "Why pawn it." "Creation!" said I, "how can I du such a thing?" He kinder larfed at me, and pulling me one side, whispered somethin' to me, and I started right off for hum, resolved tu put the baby "up the spout." The woman, when she saw me cum in, said that I had got somethin' into my head, she knowed, for I showed it. "Remember," said she, "I know you, who ye are and all about ye, and if you attempt to play me any tricks with this baby, I'll foller yer tu the eend of the earth, I will." And I believe she would.

Wall, I tuck the baby out as usual that afternoon, but instead of goin' tu the Park, I went down to Gold street, and steppin' in tu one of the Jew pawnbroker's shops—"I want tu borrow a half eagle," said I. "On what security?" said the man. "Why, I haint got nothing," said I. "but this ere breast-pin." "That aint enuff," said he. "Why, I onlv want it for an hour and a half, till I can go into the Fair. I have got several friends in there, with the American goods, and I can redeem the pin before an hour and a half, but I can't git in without the money." Haven't you got anything else to add to the deposit?" "Why, you don't think I won't cum back, do you?" said I. "O, no," snid he, "but it's best to be on the safe side."

Then I pretended to be mad, and said how I'd leave my baby till I cum back. "I guess you aint afraid to lend it tu me on the breast-pin and the baby both?" "Why," he said, kinder thoughtfully, "no, if you leave the child, I s'pose there's no danger but that you mean tu redeem the breast-pin; but I shall charge you two crown in advance." "But I haint got no money; that's the reason I want tu borrer," said I, s'posin he was tryin' to ketch me.—"Well, I'll take it out of the half eagle," said he. "Very well," said I, and takin the money, I left the baby asleep in one corner of the pawnbroker's shop, tuckin' it up nice, and tellin' the Jew that his wife, who lived in a room back of the shop, must take care of it if it cried—and I know'd it would—for that child could scream when it set out, you had better believe.

The first korner I cum to I turned out of Gold street, and run like a hound, streaking it, I didn't know where. Well, I got round at last to my boardin' place, and packed up my trunk, and told the woman I had got a new place for the baby. Then she tuck on, said I had ruined her character by my conduct, and that she was a poor, lone widder. O, uncle, ain't widders dangerous? And that she couldn't think of my goin'; that I had trifled with her affecshuns, and she would sue me for breach of promise—she would But I stopped her mouth with a guinea, and it acted like Russia Salve for a burn, and cured her right off.

Then I went down to Riddle's boardin' house, for it had got pretty late, and he was to hum, and I told him it was all owin' to his advice that I'd got rid of the baby, and all about how it was done. Then sez he, "Nehemiah, you are one of 'em," and sez I, "Mr. Riddle, I rather think my eyes are open wide enough not to take any more bundles to hold," and so I stood treat all round.

Your dutiful nephew,

NEHEMIAH FLUFKINS.

General Scott's Opinions about Slavery.

The prominence which has been recently given to the name of General Scott as a candidate for the Presidency, will create some interest in the opinions which he has avowed in times past upon political affairs. The following tolerably full statement of his sentiments about slavery, was given to the public eight years ago, but its publication was never so seasonable as it will be now:

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9, 1845.

DEAR SIR—I have been waiting for an evening's leisure to answer your letter before me, and after an unreasonable delay, am at last obliged to reply in the midst of official occupations.

That I ever have been named in connection with the Presidency of the United States, has not, I can assure you, the son of an ancient neighbor and friend been any contrivance or desire of mine; and certainly I shall never be in the field for that high office, unless placed there by a regular nomination. Not, then, being a candidate, and seeing no near prospect of being made one, I ought, perhaps, to decline troubling you or others with my humble opinions on great principles of state rights and federal administration; but as I canot plead ignorance of the partiality of a few friends, in several parts of the Union, who may, by possibility, in a certain event, succeed in bringing me within the field from which a whig candidate is to be selected, I prefer to err on the side of frankness and candor, rather than by silence, to allow any stranger unwittingly to commit himself to my support.

Your enquiries open the whole question of domestic slavery, which has, in different forms, for a number of years, agitated Congress and the country.

Premising that you are the first person who has interrogated me on the subject, I give you the basis of what would be my reply in greater detail, if time allowed and the contingency alluded to above were less remote.

In boyhood, at William and Mary College, and in common with most, if not all, of my companions, I became deeply impressed with the views given by Mr. Jefferson, in his "Notes on Virginia," and by Judge Tucker, in the appendix to his edition of Blackstone's Commentaries, in favor of a gradual emancipation of slaves. That appendix I have not seen in thirty odd years, and, in the same period, have read scarcely anything on the subject; but my early impressions are fresh and unchanged. Hence if I have had the honor of a seat in the Virginia Legislature, in the winter of 1831-32, when a bill was brought forward to carry out these views, I should certainly have given it my hearty support.

I suppose I scarcely need say that, in my opinion Congress has no color of authority under the constitution, for touching the relation of master and slave within a state.

I hold the opposite opinion in respect to the District of Columbia. Here, with the consent of the owners, or on the payment of "just compensation" Congress may legislate at its discretion. But my conviction is equally strong that, unless it be step by step with the Legislatures of Virginia and Maryland, it would be dangerous in both races in those states to touch the relation between master and slave in this district

I have from the first, been of opinion that Congress was bound by the Constitution to receive, to refer, and to report upon petitions relating to domestic slavery as in the case of all other petitions; but I have not failed to see and to regret the unavoidable irritation which the former have produced in the southern states, with the consequent peril to the two colors, whereby the adoption of any plan of emancipation has everywhere among us been greatly retarded.

I own, myself, no slave; but never have attached blame to masters for not liberating their slaves—knowing that liberation, without the means of sending them in comfort to some position favorable to "the pursuit of happiness," would, in most cases, be highlw injurious to all around, as well as to the manumitted families themselves—unless the operation were general and under the auspices of prudent legislation. But I am persuaded that it is a high moral obligation of masters and slaveholding states to employ all means not incompatible with the safety of both colors, to meliorate slavery even to extermination.

It is gratifying to know that general melioration has been great, and is still progressive, notwithstanding the disturbing causes alluded to above. The more direct process of emancipation may, no doubt, be earlier commenced and quickened in some communities than in others. Each, I do not question, has the right to judge for itself, both as to time and means, and I consider interference or aid from without, except on invitation from authority within, to be as hurtful to the sure progress of melioration, as it may be fatal to the lives of vast multitudes of all ages, sexes and colors. The work of liberation cannot be forced without such horrid results. Christian philanthropy is ever mild and considerate. Hence all violence ought to be deprecated by the friends of religion and humanity. Their persuasions cannot fail, at the right time, to free the master from the slave, and the slave from the master; perhaps before the latter shall have found out and acknowledged that the relation between the parties had long been mutually prejudicial to their worldly interests,

There is no evil without, in the order of Providence, some compensating benefit. The bleeding African was torn from his savage home by his ferocious neighbors, sold into slavery, and cast upon this continent. Here, in the mild south, the race has wonderfully multiplied in comparison with any thing ever known in barbarious life. The descendants of a few thousands have becoure nearly millions; and all, from the first, made acquainted with the arts of civilization, and, above all, brought under the light of the Gospel.

From the promise made to Abraham, some two thousand years had elapsed before the advent of our Saviour, and the Israelites, the chosen people of God, were, for wise purposes, suffered to remain in bondage longer than the Africans have been on our shore. This race has already experienced the resulting compensations alluded to; and, as the white missionary has never been able to penetrate the dark regions of Africa, or to establish himself in its interior, it may be within the scheme of Providence that the great work of spreading the Gospel over that vast continent, with all the arts and comforts of civilization, is to be finally accomplished from American bondage. A foothold there has already been gained for him, and in such a scheme centuries are but as seconds to him who moves worlds as man moves a finger.

I do but suggest the remedies and consolations of slavery, to inspire patience, hope, and charity, on all sides. The mighty subject calls for the exercise of all man's wisdom and virtue, and these may not suffice without aid from a higher source.

It is in the foregoing manner, my dear sir, that I have long been in the habit, in conversation, of expressing myself, over all our common country on the question of negro slavery, and I must say that I have found but very few persons to differ with me, however opposite their geographical positions.

Such are the views of the opinions which you seek. I cannot suppress or mutilate them, although now liable to be more generally known. Do with them what you please. I never court nor shun publicity. I remain, very truly yours,

WINFIELD SCOTT.

PLAINFIELD GAZETTE.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Thursday; July 3, 1851.

☞ Mr Albert D. Drake is our authorised agent to receive subscriptions and advertisments.

☞ Mr. E. W. Carr, Third street, Philadelphia, opposite the Exchange, is our authorised agent for that city.

Free of Postage!

After the first day of July the new Postage law takes effect; we can therefore now send our paper by mail to any point in the State, within 30 miles of Plainfield, free of postage! The postage to any part of the United States is now but a mere nominal sum —We trust therefore to have a large accession of subscribers—for one dollar cash in advance, the Gazette will be mailed one year. Each one of our subscribers may easily obtain us another; will they lend us their aid?

4th of July.—The glorious anniversary of our national independence will be celebrated by the several cities, towns and villages throughout the state, with great unanimity. All undoubtedly equally feel the vast importance of this ever memorable event; all memories cherish the day that man was proclaimed inalienably endowed with liberty and equal rights by his Creator. The universal aspiration of American freemen is that the day may be near at hand when all men shall enjoy these rights. The day we trust is fast approaching when men knowing shall dare maintain their rights; the seed having been sown in a congenial soil, prepared by men mighty to will and to do, is fast arriving at maturity, through the potent and benign influence of the Education of the Mass; may its holy and happy influence never cease until every son and daughter of Adam shall arrive at that free and happy estate they were designed for by their Creator.

But enough—the occasion will undoubtedly call forth, at the various places at which it will be celebrated, many patriotic, generous and ennobling thoughts. May the only tendency of these various celebrations be, and this is undoubtedly the prayer of all, to unite in one indissoluble brotherhood the freemen of our great and glorious republic, to promote the holy cause which they are designed to commemorate. The day will be celebrated in many places contiguous; at Basking Ridge, New Providence, Boundbrook, Millstone, Elizabethtown, Newark &c., with appropriate ceremonies; but at no place, in our estimation, more appropriately, more agreeably, more happily than at Washington Rock, near this place. There, in the quiet of the shady grove, inhaling the balmy and refreshing air of the mountain's top, with nature's bounteous and gorgeous array spread out as a map beneath your feet to feast the eye upon, on the spot where freedom's father trod, may man's thoughts arise to the full consideration of the mighty consequences which this the birthday of freedom begat and the glorious privileges which we this day in consequence enjoy. H. N. Congar Esq., Editor of the Newark Mercury, well known to many of our citizens, an able writer and speaker, will deliver the oration at this spot.

☞ The Rev. Wm. Whittaker. of this place, will deliver an Address at New Providence, on the 4th of July, before the Sons of Temperance of that place.

Mr. Thomas Wallace, long an instructor of youth in this place, sailed from New York for Liverpool last Thursday, in the ship Trumbull, Capt. Smith.

Newspapers.—Judge Longstreet says: "Small is the sum that is required to patronise a newspaper, and most amply remunerated is the patron. I care not how humble and unpretending the gazette which he takes, it is impossible to fill a sheet fifty-two times a year without putting into it something that is worth the subscription price. Every parent whose son is off from home, at school, should be supplied with a newspaper. I well remember the difference there was between those who had, and those who had not access to newspapers, Other things being equal, the first were always decidedly superior to the last, in debate and composition at least. The reason is plain—they had command of more facts. A newspaper is a history of current events, as well as a curious and interesting miscellany, and which youth will peruse with delight when they will read nothing else."

☞ The trial of the directors of the state bank at Morris, for a conspiracy to defraud the stockholders, was brought to a close on Wednesday last by a verdict of acquittal in favor of all all the defendants.

☞ Deaths last week; New York 353, Philadelphia 161, Boston 74.

4th of July at Washington Rock!

Messrs. Editors.—I understand that our enterprising and patriotic friends, Kirkpatrick & Staats, proprietors of the Washington Rock property, will be at Home on the summit of the mountain, ready to receive their friends on the approaching anniversary of the Nation's birth day.

Well—a more delightful spot could not have been selected—and although the magnificient prospect from the rock would look just as lovely on the 3d or 5th of July as on the 4th., yet the Revolutionary reminiscenses hanging about that old time-honored Rock, combined with the beautiful scenery, make it a peculiarly appropriate spot upon which to celebrate the "Jubilee of Freedom.', The fact that the Rock was a favorite resort of our beloved Washington (during his stay in the neighborhood) to view the movements of the enemy on the plains below, has made it sacred to Americans.

We bespeak a large gathering of the descendants of the Heroes of the Revolution on the occasion.—The usual ceremonies attendannt on such a celebration are to be observed, and furthermore, plenty of the "substantialities" of nature is promised.

Oration to be delivered by H. N. Congar Esq., Editor of the Newark Mercury, at 12 o'clock, M.

Dinner from 1 to 3 P. M. R.

Daring Burglary and Extensive Robbery.—Some time between 10 and 11 o'clock on Friday night the Jewelry and Watch establishment of Mr. A. L. Williams, 226 1-2 Broad street, was entered by forcing the front door, and watches and jewelry, valued at $4,000 to $5,000, stolen. Of the watches there were about 40 gold gold ones of almost every description. Levers, Lepines, &c.; and of the silver ones there were about 30, also of evry description. The jewelry consisted of about 500 gold rings, breast pins, watch and guard chains, &c., &c. Three hundred dollars reward is offered for the conviction ef the thief and recovery of the goods.—Newark Advertiser.

The burglars who stole the above property, we perceive by the Tribune, were traced to New York, and were taken at their residence in Orange street. They were two Englishmen, named George Shields and George Thomas. Shields is supposed to be an escaped convict from England. The property was all recovered.

The Murderers of the Cosden Family.—In Eebruary last a whole family of five individuals, living on the Eastern shore of Maryland, were murdered in one night. They consisted of William Cosden and his wife, then lately the mother of an infant child; with a sister of each in the morning of youth: one in the pride and bloom of health and beauty, the other languishing on a bed of sickness.

Three persons were apprehended as the perpetrators of this dreadful deed, and June 26 after an impartial trial in Cecil County, they were convicted of the crime, and sentenced to be hung. Their names are Wm Shelton, Abraham Taylor, and Nicholas Murphy. The case has produced a great sensation in that region of country.

Remarkable Case.—Mr J H. Morse of this town has given us the particulars of a late case, which may seem to prove that the back-bone (or spine,) may be dislocated without producing deatn. In the great gale of April 12, the Merrimack stable was blown down, burying Sewall Nute, (24 years old,) in the ruins. When taken out, Drs. Morse, Ames and Dana found that the spine was dislocated at the eighth dorsal vertabra the upper surface of which could be plainly felt, He was bent forward so that his head and legs came together, giving the spine an ang le of 45 degrees. The dislocation was therefore of such a nature as to enlarge the spinal cavity instead of diminishing it. By a gradual but strong extending power the spine was brought into a line and the dislocation removed, when the patient exclaimed that he was relieved. He was then placed on a rubber pillow and left. Feverish symptoms appeared that night, but were removed. Inflammation and effusion in the injured parts followed, but yielded to leeches and cold applications. On the 17th, the patient could raise himself in bed. A spinal support was applied. and on the 24th he was able to walk out! Since then the deposition of bony matter has proved that there was a fracture. The patient is now able to walk and ride without difficulty. This case is important, as most physicians believe a fracture of the spine to be always a mortal injury. —Lawrence Courier.

The Miser Silenced.—One cold winter when the ground was covered with snow and the little birds could not get anything to eat, the little daughter of a miserly rich man, gathered up all the crumbs she could find and was going to carry them out and scatter them on the snow. Her father saw her, and asked her what she was going to do? She told him; and he said "What good will it do? The crumbs will not be enough to feed one in a huudred of the birds." "I knew it, dear father," said she, "but I shall be glad to save even one in a hundred of them, if I cannot save them all." The father thought a moment; he knew that many persons were suffering in his village, and he had refused to help any because he could not help them all. His conscience struck him, and he told his little daughter to break a loaf into crumbs for the birds while he went to scatter a purse of money amongst the poor villagers.—Christian Witness.

The use of Mosquitoes.

I never knew mosquitoes turned to any good account save in California; and here it seems they are sometimes ministers of justice. A rogue had stolen a bag of gold from a digger in the mines, and hid it. Neither threats nor persuasion could induce him to reveal the place of its colcealment. He was at last sentenced to a hundred lashes, and then informed that he would be let off with thirty, provided he would tell what he had done with the gold, but he would tell what he had done with the gold, but he refused. The thirty lashes were inflicted. but he was siill as stubborn as a mule.

He was then stripped naked and tied to a tree. The mosquitoes with their long bills went at him and in less than three hours he was covered with blood. Writhing and trembling from head to foot with exquisite torture, he exclaimed: "Untie me, untie me, and I will tell where it is," Tell first," was the reply. So he told where it might be found. Some of the party, then with wisps kept off the still hungry mosquitoes, while others went where the culprit had directed, and recovered the bag of gold. He was then untied, washed with cold water,—and helped to his clothes, while he muttered as if to himself, "I couldn't stand that nohow."—Colton's three years in California.

It is stated that eighty-six whale ships will this year be added to the whaling fleet of New Bedford. At Mattapoisett there are several fine ships now on the stocks for this trade.

Rise and Progress of Mormonism in England

The following history of the propagation of the Mormon doctrines in England was contained in a speech of Mr John Hyde, Jr., at a recent Convention of Mormons in London.

We quote from the London Sun of June 3d:

The speaker then adverted to the progress of "the Church" in England, observing that in 1837, one year before the saints reached Nauvoo, Elders K. C. Kimball and Orson Hyde, together with several others landed at Liverpool, friendless and destitute. They separated and went forth, preaching into the towns on either side. Preston first heard and obeyed the principles of truth. In eight months, seven hundred members met in conference in that town, rejoicing in the power and and privilege of the Gospel. In a very short time, several counties, among which were Yorkshire, Cheshire, Lancanshire, Stafford, Gloucester, Worcester, and Hereford, had heard and received the servants of God. Thus the church increased; so that in 1840, after three years labor, the general conforencereported 3,626 members and 383 in the priesthood, making in all 4,019 saints.

But such triumphant success was not confined to England; Scotland enjoyed a portion, and Ireland was also made to rejoice, and Wales testified by her thousands, how the Church had progressed in that province. In Scotland the blood-cemented pyramid of bigotry and superstition had been triumphantly attacked, although sustained by the proverbial wariness of the Scotch. The conference established in Edinburgh, notwithstanding that hundreds had removed and hundreds more emigrated, still represented more than 1,500 members. Glasgow was also proclaimed, and over 2,063 members were now revelling in the enjoyment of the spirit of truth. In 1851 more than 3,530 had obeyed the mandates of Heaven and thousands had, beside, emigrated to the gathering place of the saints. As to Ireland, it was not until 1850 that Dublin had heard the principles of truth; he was, however, glrd to say that a small branch had been established in that city.

In Wales, their success was still more great and glorious. In 1851, the number of saints in the principality was 4,848, including officers. The statistics of January last showed there were, altogether, in the United Kingdom, 42 conferences, 602 branches, 22 sevenfies, 12 high priests, 1,761 elders. 1,590 priests, 1,226 teachers, 682 deacons, and 25,454 members, making a total of 30,747 saints. During the last fourteen years more than 50,000 had been baptised in England, of which nearly 17,000 had emigrated from her shores to Zion. He next gave a brief sketch of the progress of the work in London. In February, 1841. the London Conference was organized, consisting of three branches—London, Woolwich, and Bedford and composed of about 80 members. The number of members, in 1842, had increased to 400 or 500, and the number of branches had more than trebled. During the last five years, 2,981 persons had yielded in obedience to the Gospel. In the present year, the Conference fell to the presidential charge of the present Chairman, Elder Eli B. Kelsey, whose knowledge had been tested, and whose actions spoke well for his wisdom and discretion. After an earnest appeal that he might be enabled to guide them aright in the blessed path before them, he concluded by expressing a hope that this might be a new era in the Conference, and that the epoch to come might be one of success, happiness, knowledge, and light.

The Crystal Palace Beaten.—Dr. Duff, in his speech at the anniversary meeting of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society in London, on Monday, thus described one of the heathen temples of India: "In Seringham you have the hughest heathen temple that can probably be fouud from the north to the south pole, It is square, each side being a mile in length, so that it is four miles round. Talk of your Crystal Palace! Why, as a man would put a penny into his pocket, you might put your Crystal Palace into the pocket of this huge pagoda. The walls are 25 feet high and 4 or 5 feet thick and in the centre of each wall rises a lofty tower. Entering the first square you come to another, with a wall as high, and with four more towers. Within that square there is another, and within that again another—and you find seven squares, one within another, crowded by thousands of Brahmins. The great hall for pilgrims is supported by a thousand pillars, each cut out of a single block of stone.'

What is the Remedy?

There are now under the sentence of death in New York the following persons:—Henry Carnel, James Wall, and Aaron B. Stookey, to be hanged 27th June; and Edward F. Douglas James Clements, and Thomas Benson, to be hanged 25th July. The advocates of the gallows maintain that hanging tends to prevent murder—yet while six human beings were under the terrible sentence of death, three horrible outrages—murder, and worse than murder!—were committed in one day, last week.

Mr. Greeley writes from London that he had paid a visit to several model lodging-houses in one of which he saw a "newly invented brick, which struck him favorably!" We trust he will resist the temptation and keep it out of his hat!

TSAUKEN FONDRELEMDRE.

☞ Mankind, it is said, may be divided iuto three distinct classes: those who are too stubborn to abandon error, even after conviction; those who are so gullible as to be easily deceived; and those who are possessed of good common sense and use it to the best advantage.

It is difficult to correct the aged, and to induce people to adopt true principles, who revere the errors in which they have grown gray.

LET US REASON.

The ingredients of which Dr. Rogers' Syrup of Liverwort, Tar, and Canchalagua is composed, have certain specific qualities which have been clearly established by the highest medical testimony.—California has given us something more valuable than gold, in the plant Canchalagua. It is the finest of vegetable tonics, and has the invaluable property of recruiting the strength, while it represses fever. Tar, as an expectorant, has no equal. It loosens and expels the mucus from the Lungs, and thus restores to them freedom of action. As an internal styptic, Liverwort has long been known; but besides arresting bleeding from the Lungs, it seems to exercise a beneficial influence over the whole Respiratory Apparatus. Thus, then, we have in this compound, the properties of strengthening, allaying fever, arresting hemorrhage, and soothing irritation. In this combination consists the rationale of its wonderful cures of Coughs' Colds, and incipient consumption, for the particulars and vouchers of which, see pamphlet to be had of Agents; also advertisment in another column.

CELEBRATION OF THE 4TH OF JULY.

FAIR AND FESTIVAL

AT

BOUND BROOK.

Arrangements have been made to celebrate the coming 4th of July at Bound Brook, in a manner becoming the spirit of the day. A procession under the direction of Col. Wm. Thompson of Somerville, and headed by the Princeton Blues, will be formed at half past 9 o'clock, in the village, at Mr. C. P. Holcombe's. Thence they will advance to Middlebrook, and returning proceed to the Ref. Dutch Church in South Bound Brook.

The exercises in the church will be opened with prayer and the reading of the Declaration of Independence. An oration will then be delivered by the Hon. George Brown of Somerville.

At the close of the above exercises, a DINNER will be served by the ladies upon the grounds at the Church, A FAIR also will be opened in the Lecture room during the day and various Refreshments served.

At half past 3 o'clock, Daniel Talmage Esq. of Brooklyn N. Y. will deliver an address in the church.

The whole of the exercises will be enlivened by the Princeton Band of music.

The proceeds of the above are for the benefit of the Ref. Dutch Church.

Tickets for Dinner 50cts, and can be procured at any time previous at C. P. Holcombe's or at John Creed's and upon the grounds at the day of the celebration.

WOULD respectfully inform the citizens of Plainfield and the public generally that he has removed his Store to 345 Broad-st.

oppositethe City hotel, Newark,

And that he has on hand an extensive assortment of GOLD, SILVER AND STEEL SPECTACLES, Of every description. Gold, Silver, Steel and Tortoise Shell reading Glasses, also Hand, Quizzing, Opera and magnifying Glasses, in great variety: Telescopes, Perceptives, Goggles, Eye preservers; a first rate assortment of PEBBLES' Double Concave Glasses, Cataract Glassess, &c. Particular attention is called to

PRICE'S PREMIUM PRISCOPIC SPECTACLES.

Being made of the finest materials, which through their high polish and true ground, produce the purest vision and are recommended by competent judges as being decidedly the best and most natural in their effect of all others, for preserving and improving the sight in continued reading, writing, sewing, &c. Persons with weak eyes can be fitted with Glasses which will greatly benefit and not strain the sight. Short-sighted persons and such as have been operated upon for Cataract, can also be suited.

J. P. would be happy to see at his store all persons that have found difficulty in getting Glasses that were adapted to their sight, as the most difficult cases are easily fitted upon a fair trial. Any person purchasing Spectacles at his Store, can exchange them if not well suited, any time within three months, without extra charge The subscriber has also on hand a large assortment of Silver Spoons. Prince Albert, Threaded and plain patterns, Butter Knives, Sugar Spoons, Mustard Spoons, Salt Spoons, Cream spoons, &c. Also heavy Silver Thimbles, Gold Pens, Paper Weights, Silver-plated, plain and threaded, Table Preserve, Tea and Salt Spoons, Plated Forks, &c. [179.

BABY JUMPER

AND

WALKER COMBINED.

The subscriber having invented and made application for a patent for the above article would hereby call the attention of the public to its superiority over all others.

It forms a neat article of furniture, somewhat resembling an ottoman; it being upon castors, the little occupant can move it in all directions around the room with the utmost ease. The top opens by a spring and then closes around under the child's arms and locks. The child sits in an upright position upon a saddle or seat, stuffed perfectly soft, bearing no weight on his arms, with its feet resting upon the floor. The child can easily raise the article, and as there is a spring in each leg it can use it as a jumper for its amusement, or push itself around the room, thus learning to walk without other asistance. As the springs buoys the child up, thereby preventing too much weight upon its feet, it gradually learns to use its legs and soon learns to walk. The child can in no manner receive injury; a trial or inspection will satisfy the most skeptical of its superior utility.

Prices from $5 to $10 each, according to style of trimmings &c. Orders punctually attended to by

Newark, April 3d, 1851. H. EILS.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, o very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels; such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt.

RUPTURES, are always to be treated with the surgical instruments known as Trusses and Supporters, and these require to be skillfully applied. With this view, the HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE, now established some thirty years, has under the various managers, presented to the public both male and female attendants to apply its instruments directly to the persons, which is preferable in all cases, and has also made improvement at different times, showing that advancement which study and practice only yield toward the relief of this malady.

With much pleasure the fact is now published, that recent improvements BUTLER'S TRUSS PADS have been made, and sufficiently tested upon numerous cases to warrant, through the cures already affected, their submission to the public, as being in adaptation and efficiency superior to any heretofore made known.

These improvements, recently patented, are now being applied at this office, 4 Vesey street, in cases of rupture, gravitation of the bowels, prolapsus uteri, prolapsus ani and piles.

The public may rely upon that care being made in their application, which will most likely tend to the final cure of the several complaints.

Hull's Truss Office, 4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St. Paul's Church, New-York.

FRED'K M BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The ladies' department is attended by a female qualified to fit the instruments, having so attended this office for many years.

Children trussed when only two weeks old, and invariably cured. [145is.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS,

or Medicated Compound.

INFALLIBLE for renewing, invigorating, and beautifying the HAIR, removing the scurf, dandruff, and all affections of the scalp; and curing eruptions on the skin, diseases of the glands, muscles and integuments, and releieving stings, cuts, bruises, sprains, &c. With this preperation "there is no such word as fail." The first journals in America, medical men of the highest eminence, prominent citizens of all professions, and ladies who have used it for years in their dressing rooms and nurseries, admit with one accord, that for imparting vigor, gloss, luxurience and curl to the hair, eradicating scurf and dandruff, healing wounds, curing contusions, sprains, stings, &c., and relieving diseases of the skin, the glands and the muscles, it has no equal, among the multitude of compounds advertised in the public prints, or used in private practice. In cheapness as well as efficacy, Barry's Tricopherous is unrivalled. The immense cash sales of the article have enabled the Inventor to supply it at retail, at 25 cents per bottle, which is from 50 to 100 per cent. less than the price of any other preperation for the hair now in use. The scientific treatise on the hair and the skin, (embracing valuable directions for the culture and preservation of Natuae's choicest ornament,) in which each bottle is enclosed, is alone worth the money.

The affinity between the membranes which constitute the skin, and the hair which draws its sustenance from this triple envelope is very close. All diseases of the hair originate in the skin of the head. If the pores of the scalp are clogged, or if the blood and other fluids do not circulate freely through the small vessels which feed the root with moisture, and impart life to the fibres, the result is scurf, dandruff, shedding of the hair, graveness, dryness and harshness of the ligaments, and entire baldness, as the case may be. Stimulate the skin to healthful action with the Tricopherous, and the torpid vessels, recovering their activity, will anihilate the disease. In all affections of the skin, and of the substrata of muscles and integuments, the process and the effect are the same.—It is upon the skin, the muscular fibre, and the glands, that the Tricopherous has its specific action, and in all affections and injury of these organs, it is a sovereign remedy.

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York; and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States and Canada. [134is

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

Among the numerous discoveries Science has made in this generation to facilitate the business of life—increase its enjoyment, and even prolong the term of human existence, none can be named of more real value to mankind, than this contribution of Chemistry to the Healing Art. A vast trial of its virtues throughout this broad country, has proven beyond a doubt, that no medicine or combination of medicine yet known, can so surely control and cure the numerous varieties of pulmonary disease which have hitherto swept from our midst thousands and thousands every year. Indeed, there is now abundant reason to believe a Remedy has at length been found which can be relied on to cure the most dangerous affections of the lungs. Our space here will not permit us to publish any proportion of the cures affected by its use, but we would present the following opinions of eminent men, and refer further enquiry to the circular which the Agent below named, will always be pleased to furnish free wherein are full particlars, and indisputable proof of these facts.

From the President of Amherst College, the celebrated PROFESSOR HITCHCOCK.

"James C. Ayer—Sir: I have used your CHERRY PECTORAL in my own case of deep-seated Bronchitis, and am satisfied from its chemical constitution, that it is an admirable compound for the relief of laryngial and bronchial difficulties. If my opinion as to its superior character can be of any service, you are at liberty to use it as you think proper.

EDWARD HITCHCOCK, L. L. D.,
From the widely celebrated
PROFESSOR SILLIMAN, M. D., L. L. D., Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, &c., Yale College, Member of the Lit, Hist. Med. Phil. and Scientific Societies of America and Europe.

"I deem the CHERRY PECTORAL an admirable composition from some of the best articles in the Materia Medica, and a very effective remedy for the class of diseases it is intended to cure."

New Haven, Ct., Nov. 1 1849.

MAJOR PATTISON, President of the S. C. Senate, states he has used the CHERRY PECTORAL with wonderful success, to and inflammation of the lungs.

From one of the first Physicans in Maine.

SACO, Me., April 26, 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell. Dear Sir: I am now constantly using your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, and prefer it to any other medicine for pulmonary complaints. From observation of many severe cases, I am convinced it will cure coughs, colds, and diseases of the lungs, that have put to defianice all other remedies.

I invariably reccommend its use in cases of consumption, and consider it much the best remedy known for that disease.

Respectfully yours, I. S. CUSHMAN, M. D.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impetency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence. fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cerdial cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggisnness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without offspring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co., of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper.

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to

CONSUMPTION.

NOTHING LIKE IT.

CURE FOLLOWS CURE!

READ THE EVIDENCE!!

The above invaluable Medicine has now been before the public sufficiently long to have its virtues thoroughly tested. It has been used by all classes of the community, under every possible variety of circumstances, and has everywhere proved itself a most powerful and efficient Cough Medicine. Lung Diseases of all kinds, yield to its influence, as mists pass away upon the rising of the Sun. This is no fiction. We give you below, letters from persons who are now living in the state of New York, and who declare, over their own signatures, all that we could possibly desire to say in its favor. Those who can read their statements and yet remain incredulous, must be beyond the reach of human testimony.

A LOVELY YOUNG LADY

CURED OF CONSUMPTION!

☞ The following is from the pen of WM. H. LEVISON, Esq., the distinguished Editor of the U. S. Military and Naval Argus under date New York, Jan. 26, 1850. What could be more conclusive?

"It is seldom we permit ourselves to occupy a space in these columns to speak in praise of any article in the patent medicine way; but when we see the life of a fellow-creature saved by the use of any medicine whatever, we consider it as our right, if not a duty, to give a simple statement of facts, that others may, in like manner be benefitted. The case which has indueed us to pen this article, was that of a young lady of our acquaintance, who, by frequent exposure to the night air, contracted a cold, which settled on the Lungs before its ravages could be stayed. (This occurred two years ago this winter.) Various remedies were used, but with very little effect or benefit. The cough grew worse, with copious expectoration, and the sunken eye, and pale, hollow cheek, told plainly that PULMONARY DISEASE was doing its worst on her delicate frame. The family physician was consulted and although he would not admit to the young lady that she really had the CONSUMPTION, yet he would give no encouragement as to a cure. At this crisis, her mother was persuaded to make use of a bottle of Dr. Rogers' Compound Syrup of LIVEWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA and we are happy to state, she was perfectly cured in less than three months by this medicine alone, after even hope was destroyed. It is useless to comment on such a case as this, for the truth will reach where polished fiction never can. If any doubt the authenticity of this statement, let them call at this office.—*U. S. CURED.

AFTER BEING GIVEN UP TWICE

BY EMINENT PHYSICIANS!

Albany, June 9th, 1849.

Messrs. A. L. Scovill & Co.—I herewith forward to you a Certificate of a Cure, effected by your Compound Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua The Cough and expectoration was of fourteen months standing, and had baffled the skill of several of our eminent physicians in New York, Albany, and Cooperstown. I am the person in whom the cure was effected, and as I had previously no faith in patent medicines, I have since tried it on others, and have become satisfied of its value. Mine was as GREAT A CURE as ever was performed, as I had, during my sickness, been given up twice by my physicians I have now commenced my business, after taking, I think about eight bottles

Yours, repectfully, THOS. C. FAULDER.

BLEEDING AT THE LUNGS CURED.

☞ SEE HOW PROMPTLY IT ACTS!

Statement of Mr. A. Lang, Baker, No 388 Pearl street, N. Y. A few days before last Christmas, I was taken unwell, and soon commenced bleeding freely at the Lungs. I called in a Homœopathic Physician, but his medicine did not seem to help me. I read your advertisement, and thought I would try Dr. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA. Before I had takea up the third bottle, by bleeding had stopped, my Cough was gone, and I felt well as usual. My health is now good. I consider it a most excellent medicine, and cordially reccommend it to my friends. [This statement was made to the Proprietors, March 12th 1850.]

A SEA SKETCH.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

Many years ago, when we were a mere boy, we used to sit upon a low stool, at the feet of Commodore Samuel Tucker, and hear that old veteran relate the incidents that had come under his own observation during our last struggle with Great Britain. Among the thousand and one stories that we have heard fall from the lips of that ocean warrior, the following has remained fresh in our memory:

On the western shore of Penobscot Bay, between Belfast and Camden, there was a small club of fishermen's cots, inhabited by a hardy set of men, who had, from infancy, been brought up amid the music of the breaking waves, and who knew no fear beneath the power of mortal man. Foremost among these hardy children of the sea, and occupying the station of a sort of ruler among them, was a middle aged man named Enoch Nightingale, or, as he was generally called, Captain Nightingale; and never was a man better fitted by nature for the post he held by general consent than was he. Powerful and athletic in his physical mould, bold and fearless as the forest monarch, and frank and generous in his social relations, he was beloved and respected by all who knew him. He was a jolly fellow, too, and often, as his small gray eyes twinkled in their merry mood, a close observer might have seen a keen love of practical joking lurking in their gleaming depths.

At the time of which we write the fishermen dared not venture far out to sea, for a close blockade was kept up along the coast, and so they were forced to forego the advantages of their best fishing grounds; but a new idea had taken possession of their brains, and they had thought of fitting out a privateor against the English. For two weeks had this matter been talked over, and all the arms necessary to personal warfare had been procured, but no vessel suitable for the enterprise could be obtained, nor could they raise guns heavy enough for sea use, even had they possessed the vessel. Of pistols and cutlasses they had enough, and that was all, unless we add one old iron six-pounder, which served as a kind of signal gun in cases of heavy fogs and stormy nights.

It was just at nightfall that Obed Nightingale's shallop (Obed was the old man's son), came up the bay, and as the young man came on shore he reported that there was an English topsail schooner, a clean clipper-built craft, laying off and on between Mahegan and the Ledges. She was heavily armed, and seemed to play about in the water as though her heels were made for running.

Now Captain Enoch Nightingale had said but very little about the various projects that had been set on foot with regard to the privateering expediton but he had thought a great deal, and as soon as his son communicated the above intelligence, his thoughts came to a focus. A plan of operation was clearly marked out in his mind, and he at once set about the work of putting it into effect. The man who stood second to Capt. Nightingale's first mate, was Jabe Haskins, and upon him the old man first called.

"Jabe," said the captain, "did you know there was a British clipper just outside?"

"Yes."

"Well, s'pose we go out an' take her?"

"Do wat?"

"Take that Englishman."

"W-h-e-w!"

"But I'm in earnest."

Jabe looked at Nightingale in utter astonishment.

"I can go out in my little Rhody an' take her before she knows where she is. Now, will you help me?"

"I'll follerʼyer, capʼn ef you go tʼthunder," was Jabe's hearty response, as he saw that the old man was in earnest.

Capt. Nightingale took his mate by the arm and led him off. The night was dark, but still there was a busy scene on board the schooner Rhody, which was the heaviest fishing vessel in the place. Torches were gleaming to and fro all night long, hammers and saws were sending forth their music, and when the morning dawned the Rhody was ready for sea The old iron signal gun had been hoisted on board, and placed upon a rude sort of a carriage amidships, the cod-line beckets and bait boxes had been cleared away, and, take her all in all, she bore some faint resemblance to an embryo pirate or privateer.

She was manned by twelve men, of whom Jabe Haskins took the command. The people wondered where Capt. Nightingale was, but Jabe set their hearts at rest by telling them that he would get outside as soon as the schooner did.

In an hour after daylight the Rhody hove up her anchor and made sail, and in less than five hours she poked her blunt nose into the waters of the blue Atlantic. Shortly after the schooner had passed White Head light, the Englishman was made out about two miles distant, to the southʼrd and westʼrd, just off the Ledges, and hauling his sheets flat aft, Jabe brough his vessel up to the wind, which was fresh from the northʼrd and eastʼrd, and stood off towards the latter point. This looked amazingly like trying to run away—at least, so the Englishman thought—and consequently the clipper was immediately put full chase, and though she was somewhat to the leeward, still, it was evident that she would not be long in overhauling the Yankee.

About four o'clock in the afternoon, the Englishman came almost within hailing distance, and fired a gun. As the shot came whizing over the fisherman's deck, Jabe Haskins at once hove to, and ere long the clipper came up.

"Schooner ahoy!"

"Hello!" returded Jabe.

"Do you surrender?"

"Wal, ef yeou want tʼ take us, I sʼpose I canʼt help myself-".

The clipper hove her fore-topsail to the mast and lowered a boat, and in some five minutes afterwards her commander, followed by fifteen men, came over the Yankee's side. The first object that met his gaze as he stepped upon the deck, was the old iron gun amidships, and though the thought of an American pirate made him feel sore, yet he could not help laughing at the almost ridiculous scene thus presented to his gaze. The twelve green looking fishermen together with that gun did present rather a ludicrous appearance.

So you are on a piratical expedition?" tauntingly remarked the british officer.

"I dono," returned Jabe, with an offended air.—"I sʼpose ef Iʼd cum across one oʼ your crafts ʼat I could ʼave took, I should ʼave done it; but I dono as I should a been pirating enny moreʼn yeou are neow."

"Here's twelve on us, anʼef yeou ʼve got twelve menʼat ken lick us, Iʼd like tew see ʼem."

"Never mind about that, Jonathan. We'll take you into Halifax, and there perhaps, you will find your match."

The schooner was searched fore and aft, but all that could be found were a dozen old pistols, and about as many swords, which were in the cabin, while in the hold they discovered nothing but an array of empty boxes and barrels. The Englishman left twelve of his own men to take charge of the prize, and took six of the prisoners on board his own vessel, leaving the other six under charge of the officer who had been appointed to the command of the Rhody, and also left orders that the schooner should be kept close in his wake during the night, as he intended to see her safely out of reach of the Yankee coasters.

Until nine o'clock at night the Rhody stood on after the clipper, with all sail set, whtle the latter only carried her mainsail and two jibs. The six Yankees who had been left on board were secured in the long-boat, while the lieutenant in command and five of his men had the first watch. When the clipper struck two bells, the vessels were not more than two cables' length apart, the prize being a liitle to windward, as owing to her bad sailing, the lieutenant wished to keep the weather gage. The night was quite dark, and the wind which had fallen some since sundown, had veered slightly to the northward.

While the prize-masters were earnestly engaged in keeping up with the clipper, a very novel scene was being enacted in the hold. One of the boards which seemed to form part of a stationary floor, was lifted from its place, and the head of old captain Enoch Nightingale appeared through the aperture. In a moment more another board was removed, and ere long, forty stout fishermen, all well armed, had come up from their place of concealment. It was but a moment's work to leap on deck, and ere the thunder-struck lieutenant could see from whence came the enemy, he was bound hand and foot, and so were his men, while the poor prisoners were set free from the long-boat. Obed Nightingale took the helm, and his father, pointing a cocked pistol at the head of the English officer, said:

"Do you think we are in earnest, or not?"

"I should think you were," replied the trembling officer.

"Then if you do not obey me, you will get a bullet throug your head in an instant. Now hail the clipper."

"Scorpion ahoy!" shouted the lieutenant, as if for dear life.

In the mean time the Yankee had been let off a little from the wind, so that she was now within little more than a cable', length of her captor, while the bold fisherman were nearly all crouched beneath the bulwarks.

Some one from the clipper answered the call.

"Tell them the schooner has spriug a leak, and that the cussed Yankees must have thrown the pump-brakes overboard."

The poor lieutenant looked first at the stern face of the old man, then at the muzzle of the pistol, and then streching his lungs to the utmost, he obeyed the order.

"Now tell them to heave-to, and you'll run alongside."

The frightened officer obeyed, and on the next moment the clipper's helm was put hard down, and her main-boom shoved over to windward.

Seven of the Yankee fisherman were stationed along the lee rail, with stout graplings in their hands, and in less than five minutes the Rhody's bowsprit loomed up over the clipper's weather quarter. Obed shoved the helm down, and letting go the sheets fore and aft, the Yankee schooner shot gracefully alongside.

"Why in —— didn't you come up under our lee quarter?" shouted the English captain, as the fisherman thumped against the side of the vessel; but before he could utter any more of his wrath, with which he was literally boiling over, he found his deck swarming with strangers.

The whole thing had come about so unaccountably, and, withal, so suddenly, that hardly a blow was struck by the astounded Englishmen, and before they were fully aware that they had been captured by their own insignificant prize, they were securely bound and most of them stowed away below under a strong guard.

"Wal, capt'n" said Jabe Haskins—who had been released from durance vile—as he came aft to where that functionary stood by the side of old nightingale, "when dew yeou think of takiu' us intew Halifax?"

The Englishmen looked very hard at his uncouth tormentor, but he disdained any reply.

"I say, capt'n," continued Jabe, in a very unfeeling manner, "I rather guess as heow't that ere exploit o' yourn wont amount to a great deal, will it? But, look here, don't, for mercy,s sake, go home an' tell yeour king'at yeou got took by a Penobscot cod-fisherman, 'cause it might hurt his feelin's."

This time the Englishman's answer was more wicked and unfeeling than had been Jabe's, for he not only swore terribly, but he even wished that every Yankee in Christendom was in the immediate kingdom of that horned and hoofed individual who is said to reign somewhere beneath the earth.

Before the sun had set the next day, the English prisoners were all landed at Belfast, and Capt. Enoch Nightingale found hinself in command of as handsome a privateer as floated in American waters, and until peace was declared and the embargo raised, he carried on a most destructive trade among the British merchantmen.

COMMON ABSURDITIES.—To suppose that men are any poorer after they have 'stopped payment' than before.

A California Widow.

Some queer incidents in the world matrimonial as well as in the poltical since the acquisition of California. Some few, rumor, we regret to say, will whisper, have not exercised the patience of Penelope who kept spinning at her distaff whilst old Ulysses was fighting before troy, or buffeting with old Neptune for nine years. It is apprehended that some explanation will have to be given when the martial tide shall flowback from the Pacific; but it is well to be exact as to dates as may be seen from the following incident in real life:

An elderly gentlemen and lady were riding a few days ago in an omnibus. Opposite to them sat a pleasent looking young married lady with a fine chubby boy in her lap. Conversation arose between the parties. A steamer from Chagress had just arrived; and the good looking lady with the chubby juvenile wished to know the news, remarking that her husband had been away fifteen months that day and she was very anxious to hear from him. And then the good looking lady proceeded to indulge in a long and pathetic dissertation on the discomforts and annoyances of wives when husbands go off and stay so long from their homes. "True, madam," remarked the elderly gentleman who nad never known the pride and pleasure and comfort to you," chucking at the same time the jolly little fellow under the chin, who stared at the old gentleman's spectacles—"a remarkably fine boy; what may be his age, madam?

"Just three months, sir," replied the proud young mother.

"Three months!" remarked the elderly lady; "three months; I thought you said your husband had been away fifteen months?"

The good looking lady blushed very deadly but soon recovered the momentary confusion and remembering herself, "Oh, but he has written once."—N. O. Delta.

Curious Experiment.

There is a pleasing and profitable experiment which I have often made in my youth—it is this:—If you place your head in the corner of a room, or on a high backed chair, and close one eye, and allow another person to put a candle upon a table; and if you try to snuff your candle with one eye shut, you will find that you cannot do it—in all human probability you will fail nine times out of ten. You will hold the snuffers too near or too distant. You cannot form any estimate of the actual distance. But if you open the other eye the charm is broken; or if, without opening the other eye you move your head sensibly, you are enabled to judge of the distance. I wish not for my present purpose to speak of the motion of the head but to call your attention to the circumstance, that when the head is perfectly still, you will be unable with a single eye to judge with accuracy of the correct distance of the candle.—Prof. Airy, Royal Astronomer.

Curious Facts.

The following curious facts are taken from Blackwood's Magazine:

In England the average poor rates for ten years past, has amounted to $30,000,000.

In Ireland $7,500,000 a year are expended to feed a starving population.

In 1826 the emmigaration from the British Isles was 26,000 persons; 1849 the number was 300,000.

In thirty years, crime in Great Britain and Ireland has increaeed 500 per cent., while population has increased only 30 per cent.

In 1822 there were 27,183 jail commitments in England, Scotland and Ireland, in 1850 there were 74,162.

Thirteen per cent. of the population of Scotland are paupers.

In Ireland, it appears from a report to government, made in July, 1847, that 3,020,712 persons subsisted on public alms, about 40 per cent. of the population. The nominal rental in Ireland is $65,000,000. The sum expended for the relief of the poor, $6,370,395, one tenth of the rental. There were 250,000 persons in poor houses, and 45,000 in jail. [Ireland is not larger than Ohio.]

In Glasgow one-fourth of the burials are at the public expense.

In London there are 20,000 journeymen tailors, of whom 14,000 earn a miserable subsistence by working 14 hours a day, including Sunday. There are also in the same city 32,000 sewing women, who, on an average, make only 4 1-4d, or 9 cents a day by working 14 hours—not quite 3-4 of a cent per hour.

In Hungary, the law of divorce appears to be very frequently resorted to, since we find that in one year 1850, there were 2958 cases decided, 2112 of which were determined in favor of the women, and 765 on the side of the men. There were but 81 instances out of the whole number of suits tried, in which both parties were declared to be in fault.

Blackberry Syrup for Medical Use.

We are indebted to a friend for the following receipt for making blackberry syrup. This syrup is said to be almost a specific for the summer complaint. In 1812 it was successful in more than one case of cholera. To two quarts of juice of blackberries, add one pound of loaf sugar, one-half ounce nutmegs, one-half ounce cinnamon, pulverised, one-half ounce cloves, one-fourth ounce allspice do.—Boil all together for a short time, and when cold add a spoonful of fourth proof brandy From a teaspoonful to a wine glass according to age of the patient, till relieved, is to be gived.—Sunday Beacon.

Extraordinary Effects of Lightning.

A late French newspaper relates a marvellous incident, which is said to have occurred during a thunder storm in the interior department of France. A barn, in which were two goats, was struck by the lightning, but not burnt. After the shower, a woman who had been accustomed to feed the goats, went to the barn, and perceiving that the animals were entirely motionles, approached and touched them, when to her great astonishment and alarm they fell and crumbled to pieces, exhibiting nothing but a mass of cinders.

The Cause of Liberty.

The seventy-fifth anniversary of our Independence as a Nation and a People was celebrated, so far as we can learn, with the greatest enthusiasm and enjoyment. The day was most propitious, the air being rendered delightfully cool and refreshing by a most copious shower the previous night. Everybody, and the rest of mankind, appeared to be in consequence in the best of spirits, congratulating each other on the auspiciousness of the weather and the consequent anticipated enjoyment therefrom. All, from the light-hearted school-boy who had ignited his first fire cracker, to the aged and care worn yet enthusiastic patriot, not only appeared to feel but to speak and act out that they appreciated and enjoyed their liberty and independence; each, firing his cracker or expatiating upon the privileges we enjoy, of their value and the means to secure their perpetuity, each in a manner significant of the opinion that to all and to each belonged the privilege to express and enjoy them in accordance with his own opinion; each freely granting (on no other ground can any legitimately claim these rights;)all that he claimed, the same independence of speech and action to his equally inalienably endowed brother.

All this is the happy result or effect of our democratic republican government. Being based upon the inalienable and imprescriptable rights of all over whom it exercises control, all equally love and cherish it; being established to protect and sustain the rights of all, being consecrated for this purpose by the blood and treasure of those patriots who proclaimed and maintained these rights, all feel that they should cheerfully aid in fulfilling the God designed objects for which it was established.

That this must be the final result no thinking man can doubt. Man being inalienably endowed with liberty, with equal political and religious rights by his Creator, these privileges being thus made the imprescriptible right of all, being founded in truth and justice, were proclaimed by our forefathers and by them made the fundamental basis of our government; therefore man will, as he shall learn through the exercise and enlightenment of his own mind to know, being able to appreciate and to properly value them, then shall he fully enjoy and cheerfully grant these rights to his fellow man. There are so many and such efficient causes, so far distant from and independent of each other at work to promote this object; causes springing from dissimilar motives and designs in the human heart, and all tending, and many of them independent and despite of the designers, to the same end, the emancipation of man from bondage, of body and soul, that it is impossible but that it must accomplish this great and glorious result. Tyrants and demagogues, priestcraft and kingcraft, may appeal to the passions and prejudices, the bigotry and superstition of men, to these their old allies aiders and abettors, which for a time may retard but which nevertheless cannot much longer prevent this result. Ignorance, the unconscious slave of tyrants and the great source of their power is fast being converted into a power for liberty. Free Schools and a free Press is fast converting this raw material, out of which and by whom tyrants have been enabled to enslave the bodies and souls of men, into powerful and self augmenting means of enlightening, freeing and regenerating the human race.

"Knowlege is Power," and these powerful auxiliaries are fast converting ignorance into knowledge; the one more especially learning him to read and to calculate, the other to think and to reason; and so surely as he shall learn to reason and to think, independent of proxy, so surely will he emancipate himself from all kinds of superstition and bondage.—Therefore reader read, but more especially think for yourself. So fully aware are the tyranical priests and potentates of the earth of the power of thought, of knowledge, that they have ever proscribed those who dare think for themselves. Free thought and free speech has ever been the downfall of tyranny and oppression, the assertor and aider of liberty; the exalter and purifier of the human heart, the emancipator of the mass from bondage. This is the history of mankind in all ages of the world. It is the interest therefore of the mass that knowledge should be disseminated; that all who would enjoy their own opinion should unite, should use their utmost efforts to disseminate knowledge; should advocate for and grant to all others, as the best guarantee of their own liberty and rights, free thoughts and free speech

Every new invention or discovery of science tends to promote this result, the enlightenment and emancipation of the human mind. Every improvement made therein, whether upon the steam engine, the electric telegraph, or the spinning jenny; whether upon a steamship, a shoe or a pin is an accession of knowledge, of power, on the side of liberty and equal rights; the improvement in all these things disseminate knowledge, therefore has tyranny even within her own gates, every thing to fear, while liberty has everything to hope. The improvements that science has made as displayed in the arts and manufactures concentrated at the world's fair will do much towards the dissemination of knowledge consequently of liberal principles in Europe. It is impossible that the thousands and tens of thousands who shall visit and examine this vast collection of the effects of human thought without adding something to their stock of knowledge which shall materially and beneficially affect and accelerate the already awakening thought of the down trodden and oppressed in Europe. The expression of opinion, of the contact of mind with mind, on the various merits and demerits and of the causes why, as also of the habits of the people and the fundamental principles of government of the various countries there represented, must result in new thoughts, information, knowledge; which as before stated, the experience of mankind as given in the history of the world proves, is the bold assertor and maintainer of liberty and the rights of man. Therefore is it that whatever causes men to think, to reflect, advances the cause of human freedom; for without thought man cannot attain knowledge, without knowledge he will not for he cannot be free. Therefore reader do your own thinking; "prove all things, hold fast that which is good;" candidly express your opinion on any and all subjects, and encourage others to think for themselves and to fearlessly express their thoughts; thus shall hypocracy, bigotry and superstition, the hideous offspring of ignorance, from whence is derived the monstrous power of tyrants, be swept and obliterated from the earth, and man be regenerated, disenthralled, made happy and free.

A Good Letter.—The following letter from the Hon. John Cassedy of Jersey city was read at the Democratic anti-monopoly mass meeting held in Branchville, Sussex county on the 31st ult:

Jersey City, May 25, 1851.

Dear Sir,—Your letter of the 20th inst., is received. I agree with you that nothing will save our state from the overshadowing innfluence of the tremendous power which has been created within its bosom by a course of unwise legislation, unless the honest and patriotic of all parties should combine, and thus embody a counteracting power equal to the task. The election of Commodore Stockton to the Senate of the United States, and the unfair means used to bring it about, has opened the eyes of many in our State (who did not see it before) to the dangerous position in which we are placed. The alarm thus created, will, I think, produce the required antidote; and I consider the movement in your county as the first step towards a great revolution in public sentiment, in regard to the Camden and Amboy Company, and its dangerous tendendencies. It would give me much pleasure to meet my fellow Democrats of Sussex, in the proposed mass meeting at Branchville, but I am so situated that I shall not be able to go. I however hope to take a trip to that county, sometime in the summer, and will then see many of them—mean time, let me wish you every success in your undertaking, and hope that this first step may be followed by others equally successful, in other parts of the State, until New Jersey is relieved from this blighting incubus.

Respectfully yours, &c.

JOHN CASSEDY.

Sentence of Harvey Dayton, former Cashier of the State Bank, at Morris.

Trenton, (N. J.,) Thursday July 3.

In the supreme Court of this State, yesterday, the Attorney General moved the Court for judgment in the case of Harvey Dayton, former Cashier of the State Bank, at Morris, convicted of perjury, in making a false affidavit as to the assets of the bank which exploded in August, 1849.

His counsel, F. T, Frelinghusen, Esq., addressed the Court in his behalf asking their merciful consideration, seeing that the conviction alone was of itself a grievous punishment, that an innocent wife and a respectable circle of connections would be injuriously affected by the infliction of an ignominous punishment, and that the jury had reccommended the prisoner to mercy.

The Court then passed sentence which was that he pay a fine of $600, and stand committed until the fine and costs be paid.

Chief Justice Green, in pronouncing the sentence, made some very impressive remaks, reminding the prisoner that by this conviction and sentence he stood in an ignominious position in society: that he was now disfranchised and could never again give testimony in a court of justice, unless restored by legislative elemency to the rights which he had forfeited by his own act.

For the Gazette.

That Pond; or the "Grand Demonstration!"

Messrs. Editors:—I remember reading in the Gazette, some time since, an article signed W. M. D., in which the writer undertook to prove what I supposed everybody admitted; that the laws of nature, like their great Author, was immutable and unchangable; that fire would ever burn and water run down hill. It appears however there are those who dissent from this opinion; a Mr. Quis undertook to prove by a "grand demonstration," published in the Plainfield Union, that the premises and conclusions were both false. Having failed however in his argument on paper it would appear that he has attempted an occular demonstration; as I perceive that he, or some one else, has stopped the water course just below your office, that the water shall not escape unless it runs up hill, and has thus formed quite a pond of stagnant water. But as his practical demonstration is worse for his theory than his efforts on paper, proving more conclusively the truth of the premises he attempts to refute, and as by this time he must perceive the folly of the attempt—being some four weeks at the experiment—and as this keeping water on a dead level this warm weather becomes offensive to the neighborhood, I trust he will see the necessity—seeing that he cannot make water run up hill—of backing out of this "demonstration" also, and permit it to follow the good old way of running down hill.

The boots was found, but the officer suspecting something wrong, ripped the soles apart, where he discovered, secreted, a number of small saws, files, &c. —tools adapted to breaking Jail. Doubtles he had expected to have worn these boots. The boots of robbers, when caught, should be ripped open and examined.

The Celebration at Washington Rock.

At 12 o'clock M. the large audience were called to order. A prayer was made by Rev. Stephen Haff, and patriotic odes were sung. The Declaration of Independence was read by Elston M Dunn, after wich Horace N. Congar Esq., of Newark, delivered an eloquent oration. The number present was estimated at 2000—several hundred of them partaking of an excellent dinner got up by Kirkpatrick & Staats, the proprietors of the Rock. At 4 o'clock, P. M., Geo. Receipts for Cholera.

The worst cases of cholera morbus, dysentery, and flux, that ever I saw I have repeatedly cured in a few minutes, by a strong tea made of the bark of the Sweet Gum, taken green from the tree is best—steep a handful to a pint of water until the liquor is like good coffee. Drink it clear, or sweeten it with loaf sugar, or add a wine glass of good brandy if the shock is severe. If not infallible, it is remarkable in its effects, and well worth being known and tried in every family.

Solin Robison.

We cad add our own testimony to the value of the Sweet Gum tea, having experienced amazing and speedy relief from its use in a violent case of dysentery, which refused to yield to the usual remedies; we have also seen in the last five years, its wonderful benefit in many other cases; we have used decoction made from the bark both green and dried, and have discovered no material difference in the effect, both being efficacious.—Franklin Farmer.

I met with the foregoing valuable receipt several years since, and I have only to add, what has already been said by the "Franklin Farmer"—that I have witnessed speedy relief in violent cases of dysentery which refused to yield to the usual remedies, by the use of the Sweet Gum; having it at command, I have used the fresh or green bark, and I can with much confidence reccommend its use from my own experience.

One Glass too Much;

Or,—the Wife's Night Cap.

Mr. ——, who dosen't live more than a mile from the post office in this city, met some "Northern friends with Southern principles," the other evening, and in extending to them the hospitalities of the "Crescent City," visited so many of our princely Saloons and "Marble Halls," imbibing spiritual consolation as they journeyed, that when he left them at their hotel at the midnight hour, he felt, decidedly felt, that he had "a brick in his hat.' Now, he has a wife, an amiable, accomplished and beautiful lady, who loves him devotedly, and finds but one fault with him. That is his too frequent visit to the palaces where these "bricks" are obtained.

After leaving his friends, Mr. —— pansed a moment, took his bearings, and having shaped a course on the principle that continual angles meet, made sail for home. In due course of time he arrived there, and was not very much astonished, but rather frightened to find his worthy lady sitting up for him. She always does. She smiled when he came in. That also she always does.

"How are you dear E ?" she said—"you staid out so late, that I feared you had been taken sick."

"Hic—aint sick wife, b-but dont you th-th'nk I'm —I'm a little t-tight ?"

"A very little, perhaps, my dear—but that is nothing—you nave so many friends, as you say, you must join them in a glass once in a while !"

"Wife, you're too good—th-the truth is I'm d-drunk !"

"Oh, no indeed, my dear—I'm sure that even another glass wouldn't hurt you. Now suppose you take a glass of Scotch ale with me, just as a nightcap, dear !"

"You are too kind my d-dear, by half—I know I'm drunk !"

"Oh no—only a julep to much love—that's all !"

"Yes—juleps—McMasters make such stiff uns ?"

"Well—take a glass of ale at any rate—it can't hurt you, dear, I want one before I retire !"

The lady hastened to open a bottle, and as she placed two tumblers before her on the side board, she put in one a very powerful emetic. Filling the glasses with the foaming ale, she handed one to her husband.

Suspicion came cloudily udon his mind. She never before had been so kind when he was drunk. He looked at the glass,—raised it to his lips,—then hesitated.

"Dear, w-wont you just taste mine, to make it sweet—sweeter ?" said he.

"Certainly, love ?" replied the lady, taking a mouthful, which she was careful not to swallow.

Suspicion vanished, and so did the ale, emetic and all down the throat of the satisfied husband. After spitting out the taste, the lady finished her glass, but seemed in no hurry to retire. She fixed a foot tub of water before an easy chair, as if she intended to bathe her beautiful little feet. But small as were those feet, there was not water enough in the tub to cover them. The husband began to feel, and he wanted to retire.

"Wait only a few minutes, dear," said his loving spouse: "I want to read the news in this afternoon's Delta. I found it in my pocket."

A few minutes more elapsed, and then—and then, oh ye gods and Dan o' the lake what a time. The husband was placed in the easy chair. He began to understand why the tub was there; he soon learned what ailed him. Suffice it to say, that when he arose from that chair the brick had left his hat. It hasn't been there since. He says he'll never drink another julep; he can't bear Scotch ale, but he is death on lemonade! He loves his wife better than ever.

Reader, this is a truthful story. Profit by its moral.

Salt Hail—Extraordinary Fact.—To the Editor of the Gazette: The following is reported by Major Cooper of your city and other gentlemen in Suisun valley. About 4 o'clock on Friday afternoon a violent hail storm occurred, accompanied by much thunder and lightening. The hail fell the size of ordinary bullets to the depth of two or three inches. Curiosity induced the Mayor to put one of the hail stones into his mouth, and to his surprise found it was distinctly salt. Not willing to trust his own senses, he called upon his neighbors to try the experiment. The result was the same, and this extraordinary meteorological fact may therefore be considered as fully established. What will California produce next ?

Yours, respectfully, Forrest Shepherd.

[Benicia Gazette.

☞ It has been decided in a suit brought for the recovery of the value of a cow maimed on the track of the New Jersey Railroad Company, and tried at Newark, N. J., "That an engineer in charge of a locomotive engine is not liable for accidental injury to a cow which, suffered to go at large, had strayed on the Railroad. The owner of cattle is bound to to keep them in his own close at his peril."

To Make Water Cool for Summer.

Put the water into a porus earthenware vessel, and cover it with a thick cotton cloth, or piece of blanket which must be kept constantly wet. Expose the vessel to the sun, and in a short time the rapid evaporation will carry off the heat from the water inside, reducing it nearly to the freezing point. In Arabia and India this is the plan practised by the natives, who know nothing about the luxuries of ice to cool their waters.

An Exalted Profession.

Mr. John Caphart, a very honest witness for the government in the rescue trials now progressing at Boston, delivered himself of the following testimony, which recals to our mind the familiar apothegm that one half of the world knows little how the other half live. We copy from the Boston Commonwealth:

"It was part of my business to arrest all slaves and free persons of color, who were collected in crowds at night, and lock them up. It was also part of my business to take them before the Mayor. I did this without any warrant, and at my own discretion. Next day they are examined and punished. The punishment is flogging. I am one of the men who flog them. They got not exceeding thirty-nine good lashes.

"I am paid fifty cents for every negro I flog. The price used to be 62 1-2 cts. I am paid 50 cents for every negro I arrest, and 50 more if I flog him. I have flogged hundreds. I am often employed by private personn to pursue fugitive slaves. I have been thus employed since 1836. I never refuse a good job of that kind. Sometimes they turn out bad jobs, but never if I can prevent it. All that I ever arrested as fugitives were decided to be such except those Portuguese the counsel read about in the other trial.

"There were about two hundred of them, blacks and whites."

What an invaluable acquision a man with such qualifications would be to the Austrian government, that is after his services should cease to be required in his own State.

Expelled.—The Camden Democrat says that a member of the "South Camden Lazy Club" has just been expelled, for going at a faster gate than a walk. The recusant offered in mitigation of sentence, the fact that the Sheriff was after him, but the society was inexoradle.

Wasn't Expelled.—To which the Jersey City Telegraph adds:—"A member of the 'Jersey City Lazy Club' was brought up lately, for going at a faster gait down Bergen Hill than a walk. The offender plead in extenuation that he 'was too lazy to hold back." The society promoted him to the Vice-Presidency of the Club.

Writings of Washington.—The N. York Evening Post states that a complete and authentic edition of the writings of Washington is in preparation, to embrace more than two thousand letters, not included in the collection of Mr. Sparks together with all Washington's diaries, speeches,' and public and private papers of every description, which may be supposed to possess any interest or illustrative of his character or history

TRIFLE NOT WITH THE SPOILER!

CONSUMPTION, like the rattle-snake, always gives warning of its approach. The dry and frequent Cough, the sense of oppression at the chest, the short quick breathing of the patient, are certain indications that serious mischief is going on in the Organs of respiration. At this stage of the disease, Dr Rogers Syrup of Liverwort Tar and Canchalagua will not only be a certain but a rapid cure. The three vegetable ingredients of which it is composed form, in their compound state, a medicine which is at once anti-febrile tonic, and healing in its properties. If the pulse is excited, it soothes it; if the strength is declining, it restores it; and if the Lungs are inflamed, and ulceration is threatened, it heals and invigorates them. Such is the philosophy of its operation, and thousands rescued from the verge of the grave can testify to its practical effect. For full details, see pamphlet and advertisement in another place.

JOHN PRICE,

OPTICAN, AND MANUFACTURER OF

GOLD AND SILVER SPECTACLES.

WOULD respectfully inform the citizens of Plainfield and the public generally that he has removed his Store to 345 Broad-st.

opposite the City hotel, Newark,

And that he has on hand an extensive assortment of GOLD, SILVER AND STEEL SPECTACLES, Of every description. Gold, Silver, Steel and Tortoise Shell reading Glasses, also Hand, Quizzing, Opera and magnifying Glasses, in great variety: Telescopes, Perceptives, Goggles, Eye preservers; a first rate assortment of PEBBLES' Double Concave Glasses, Cataract Glassess, &c. Particular attention is called to

PRICE'S PREMIUM PRISCOPIC SPECTACLES.

Being made of the finest materials, which through their high polish and true ground, produce the purest vision and are recommended by competent judges as being decidedly the best and most natural in their effect of all others, for preserving and improving the sight in continued reading, writing, sewing, &c. Persons with weak eyes can be fitted with Glasses which will greatly benefit and not strain the sight. Short-sighted persons and such as have been operated upon for Cataract, can also be suited.

J. P. would be happy to see at his store all persons that have found difficulty in getting Glasses that were adapted to their sight, as the most difficult cases are easily fitted upon a fair trial. Any person purchasing Spectacles at his Store, can exchange them if not well suited, any time within three months, without extra charge The subscriber has also on hand a large assortment of Silver Spoons, Prince Albert, Threaded and plain patterns, Butter Knives, Sugar Spoons, Mustard Spoons, Salt Spoons, Cream spoons, &c. Also heavy Silver Thimbles, Gold Pens, Paper Weights, Silver-plated, plain and threaded, Table Preserve, Tea and Salt Spoons, Plated Forks, &c. [179.

BABY JUMPER

AND

WALKER COMBINED.

The subscriber having invented and made application for a patent for the above article would hereby call the attention of the public to its superiority over all others.

It forms a neat article of furniture, somewhat resembling an ottoman; it being upon castors, the little occupant can move it in all directions around the room with the utmost ease. The top opens by a spring and then closes around under the child's arms and locks. The child sits in an upright position upon a saddle or seat, stuffed perfectly soft, bearing no weight on his arms, with its feet resting upon the floor. The child can easily raise the article, and as there is a spring in each leg it can use it as a jumper for its amusement, or push itself around the room, thus learning to walk without other asistance. As the springs buoys the child up, thereby preventing too much weight upon its feet, it gradually learns to use its legs and soon learns to walk. The child can in no manner receive injury; a trial or inspection will satisfy the most skeptical of its superior utility.

Prices from $5 to $10 each, according to style of trimmings &c. Orders punctually attended to by

Newark, April 3d, 1851. H. EILS.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, o very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels; such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt.

RUPTURES, are always to be treated with the surgical instruments known as Trusses and Supporters, and these require to be skillfully applied. With this view, the HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE, now established some thirty years, has under the various managers, presented to the public both male and female attendants to apply its instruments directly to the persons, which is preferable in all cases, and has also made improvement at different times, showing that advancement which study and practice only yield toward the relief of this malady.

With much pleasure the fact is now published, that recent improvements BUTLER'S TRUSS PADS have been made, and sufficiently tested upon numerous cases to warrant, through the cures already affected, their submission to the public, as being in adaptation and efficiency superior to any heretofore made known.

These improvements, recently patented, are now being applied at this office, 4 Vesey street, in cases of rupture, gravitation of the bowels, prolapsus uteri, prolapsus ani and piles.

The public may rely upon that care being made in their application, which will most likely tend to the final cure of the several complaints.

Hull's Truss Office, 4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St. Paul's Church, New-York.

FRED'K M BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The ladies' department is attended by a female qualified to fit the instruments, having so attended this office for many years.

Children trussed when only two weeks old, and invariably cured. [145is.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS,

or Medicated Compound.

INFALLIBLE for renewing, invigorating, and beautifying the HAIR, removing the scurf, dandruff, and all affections of the scalp; and curing eruptions on the skin, diseases of the glands, muscles and integuments, and releieving stings, cuts, bruises, sprains, &c. With this preperation "there is no such word as fail." The first journals in America, medical men of the highest eminence, prominent citizens of all professions, and ladies who have used it for years in their dressing rooms and nurseries, admit with one accord, that for imparting vigor, gloss, luxurience and curl to the hair, eradicating scurf and dandruff, healing wounds, curing contusions, sprains, stings, &c., and relieving diseases of the skin, the glands and the muscles, it has no equal; among the multitude of compounds advertised in the public prints, or used in private practice. In cheapness as well as efficacy, Barry's Tricopherous is unrivalled. The immense cash sales of the article have enabled the Inventor to supply it at retail, at 25 cents per bottle, which is from 50 to 100 per cent. less than the price of any other preperation for the hair now in use. The scientific treatise on the hair and the skin, (embracing valuable directions for the culture and preservation of Nature's choicest ornament,) in which each bottle is enclosed, is alone worth the money.

The affinity between the membranes which constitute the skin, and the hair which draws its sustenance from this triple envelope is very close. All diseases of the hair originate in the skin of the head. If the pores of the scalp are clogged, or if the blood and other fluids do not circulate freely through the small vessels which feed the root with moisture; and impart life to the fibres, the result is scurf, dandruff, shedding of the hair, graveness, dryness and harshness of the ligaments, and entire baldness, as the case may be. Stimulate the skin to healthful action with the Tricopherous, and the torpid vessels, recovering their activity, will anihilate the disease. In all affections of the skin, and of the substrata of muscles and integuments, the process and the effect are the same.—It is upon the skin, the muscular fibre, and the glands, that the Tricopherous has its specific action, and in all affections and injury of these organs, it is a sovereign remedy.

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York; and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States and Canada. [134is

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

Among the numerous discoveries science has made in this generation to facilitate the business of life—increase its enjoyment, and even prolong the term of human existence, none can be named of more real value to mankind, than this contribution of Chemistry to the Healing Art. A vast trial of its virtues throughout this broad country, has proven beyond a doubt, that no medicine or combination of medicine yet known, can so surely control and cure the numerous varieties of pulmonary disease which have hitherto swept from our midst thousands and thousands every year. Indeed, there is now abundant reason to believe a Remedy has at length been found which can be relied on to cure the most dangerous affections of the lungs. Our space here will not permit us to publish any proportion of the cures affected by its use, but we would present the following opinions of eminent men, and refer further enquiry to the circular which the Agent below named, will always be pleased to furnish free wherein are full particlars, and indisputable proof of these facts.

From the President of Amherst College, the celebrated PROFESSOR HITCHCOCK.

"James C. Ayer—Sir: I have used your CHERRY PECTORAL in my own case of deep seated Bronchitis, and am satisfied from its chemical constitution, that it is an admirable compound for the relief of laryngial and bronchial difficulties. If my opinion as to its superior character can be of any service, you are at liberty to use it as you think proper.

EDWARD HITCHCOCK, L. L. D.,
From the widely celebrated

PROFESSOR SILLIMAN, M. D., L. L. D., Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, &c., Yale College, Member of the Lit, Hist. Med. Phil. and Scientific Societies of America and Europe.

"I deem the CHERRY PECTORAL an admirable composition from some of the best articles in the Materia Medica, and a very effective remedy for the class of diseases it is intended to cure."

New Haven, Ct., Nov. 1 1849.

MAJOR PATTISON, President of the S. C. Senate, states he has used the CHERRY PECTORAL with wonderful success, to aud inflammation of the lungs.

From one of the first Physicians in Maine.

SACO, Me., April 26, 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell. Dear Sir: I am now constantly using your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, and prefer it to any other medicine for pulmonary complaints. From observation of many severe cases, I am convinced it will cure coughs, colds, and diseases of the lungs, that have put to defiance all other remedies.

I invariably recommend its use in cases of consumption, and consider it much the best remedy known for that disease.

Respectfully yours, I. S. CUSHMAN, M. D.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impetency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cerdial cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without off-spring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co., of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper.

WONDERFUL CURES!

CANCHALAGUA;

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to

CONSUMPTION.

NOTHING LIKE IT.

CURE FOLLOWS CURE!

READ THE EVIDENCE!!

The above invaluable Medicine has now been before the public sufficiently long to have its virtues thoroughly tested. It has been used by all classes of the community, under every possible variety of circumstances, and has everywhere proved itself a most powerful and efficient Cough Medicine. Lung Diseases of all kinds, yield to its influence, as mists pass away upon the rising of the Sun. This is no fiction. We give you below, letters from persons who are now living in the state of New York, and who declare, over their own signatures, all that we could possibly desire to say in its favor. Those who can read their statements and yet remain incredulous, must be beyond the reach of human testimony.

A LOVELY YOUNG LADY

CURED OF CONSUMPTION!

☞ The following is from the pen of WM. H. LEVISON, Esq., the distinguished Editor of the U. S. Military and Naval Argus under date New York, Jan. 26, 1850. What could be more conclusive?

"It is seldom we permit ourselves to occupy a space in these columns to speak in praise of any article in the patent medicine way; but when we see the life of a fellow-creature saved by the use of any medicine whatever, we consider it as our right, if not a duty, to give a simple statement of facts, that others may, in like manner be benefitted. The case which has induced us to pen this article, was that of a young lady of our acquaintance, who, by frequent exposure to the night air, contracted a cold, which settled on the Lungs before its ravages could be stayed. (This occurred two years ago this winter.) Various remedies were used, but with very little effect or benefit. The cough grew worse, with copious expectoration, and the sunken eye, and pale, hollow cheek, told plainly that PULMONARY DISEASE was doing its worst on her delicate frame. The family physician was consulted and although he would not admit to the young lady that she really had the CONSUMPTION, yet he would give no encouragement as to a cure. At this crisis, her mother was persuaded to make use of a bottle of Dr. Rogers' Compound Syrup of LIVEWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA and we are happy to state, she was perfectly cured in less than three months by this medicine alone, after even hope was destroyed. It is useless to comment on such a case as this, for the truth will reach where polished fiction never can. If any doubt the authenticity of this statement, let them call at this office.—U. S. Military and Naval Argus Office, No 79 Chatam N. Y.

COUGH AND DISEASE

OF 14 MONTHS STANDING.

CURED.

AFTER BEING GIVEN UP TWICE

BY EMINENT PHYSICIANS!

Albany, June 9th, 1849.

Messrs. A. L. Scovill & Co.—I herewith forward to you a Certificate of a Cure, effected by your Compound Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua The Cough and expectoration was of fourteen months standing, and had baffled the skill of several of our eminent physicians in New York, Albany, and Cooperstown. I am the person in whom the cure was effected, and as I had previously no faith in patent medicines, I have since tried it on others, and have become satisfied of its value. Mine was as GREAT A CURE as ever was performed, as I had, during my sickness, been given up twice by my physicians. I have now commenced my business, after taking, I think about eight bottles.

Yours, repectfully, THOS. C. FAULDER.

BLEEDING AT THE LUNGS CURED.

☞ SEE HOW PROMPTLY IT ACTS!

Statement of Mr. A. Laug, Baker, No 388 Pearl street, N. Y. A few days before last Christmas, I was taken unwell, and soon commenced bleeding freely at the Lungs. I called in a Homœopathic Physician, but his medicine did not seem to help me. I read your advertisement, and thought I would try Dr. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA. Before I had takea up the third bottle, by bleeding had stopped, my Cough was gone, and I felt well as usual. My health is now good. I consider it a most excellent medicine, and cordially recommend it to my friends. [This statement was made to the Proprietors, March 12th 1850.]

☞ This whole paper might be filled with letters, similar to the above, from those who have been cured.

From the Drawing Room Companion

I FORGOT:

OR,

THE DISASTERS OF A DAY.

BY SARAH P. DOUGHTY.

As Mrs. Wallace opened the door of her sleeping apartment, she suddenly started back in surprise, exclaiming:

"What can be the cause of this smoke? Something must be on fire?" she added, as she found that the opening of the door only increased the trouble, for a dense cloud seemed to fill the hall and stairway.

Rushing down stairs, she found Jenny, the maid throwing open the parlor windows uttering at the same time exclamations of vexation and despair.

"I never saw such a stove as this; something must be the matter with the pipe or the chimney. I must put the fire out. It is better to freeze than to be smothered."

"What is the matter, Jenny, asked her mistress, forcing her way through the smoke.

"Indeed, ma'am, that is what I cannot tell you. It is no fault of mine, for I made as pretty a fire as you would wish to see on a cold morning, but the smoke will pour out. You had better run back to your room, ma'am, or you will be killed intirely. I am quite suffocated like, myself." And poor Jenny's streaming eyes and choking cough proved the truth of this assertion.

"Is the draft open, Jenny?" inquired Mrs. Wallace, still persisting in her endeavors to reach the stove.

"The draft, ma'am? Indeed, and that is what I forgot. In truth, that must be the whole trouble for it is shut as tight as a drum."

"It is very wrong in you to be so forgetful, Jenny. Mr. Wallace gave you the most particular directions as to managing the stove."

"Indeed, and so he did, ma'am, but the draft was clane gone from my mind. But I will soon make all right now;" and Jenny commenced the most vigorous efforts to dispel the smoke, while Mrs. Wallace gladly reatreated to her own room.

"Just like the Irish!" was her husband's remark, as she explained the cause of the annoyance. "They are all forgetful; it is impossible to keep two ideas in their heads."

The smoke soon passed away and with it the vexation it had created. Breakfast was announced, and the family assembled around the table with that feeling of satisfaction which a warm room and a comfortable meal produces on a cold winter's morning. The sausages and the smoking rolls were placed upon the table.

"Now give me the cocoa, Jenny." said Mrs. Wallace. "It would be better to bring that the first thing."

"Is it the coacoa? Indeed, and the smoke drove it entirely out of my head. Not a bit of a drop have I made. Will a cup of tea answer ye?"

"No; we never take tea or coffee," replied Mrs. Wallace. "You are really too forgetful, Jenny. It is inexcusable."

"Can you wait for the cocoa, my dear?" she continued, addressing her husband.

"O no," was the reply. "It is time I was on my way to the office. I will take a glass of water."

"Rather cold comfort such a morning as this," returned his wife. "I must rise early enough to refresh Jenny's memory. This forgetfulness is too vexatious."

Mr. Wallace finished his breakfast, and put on his overcoat.

"I must leave town on business this afternoon," he remarked, "so please to have dinner at an early hour, say twelve o'clock."

"Very well. As you pass the market just send home a nice beefsteak and some vegetables. I shall be very busy this morning, and cannot coveniently attend to the marketing."

Mr Wallace promised, and with his usual kind "good morning," left the house.

The business of the day went on. The elder children were prepared for school, and the mothers time was divided between the care of the little ones and the necessary attentions to a dressmaker, who was busily employed in preparing new winter frocks for the little girls. The early dinner was quite forgotten, and even the entrance of her husband, a little before noon, did not recall it to her mind.

"Are you sick, my dear, or why are you home so early?" was the inquiry.

"It is nearly twelve o'clock. You know we are to dine at that hour."

"So we are, I declare. I forgot all about it. But, fortunately, the dinner can soon be prepared. Will half an hour's delay make any difference?"

"If we can sit down to dinner in half an hour, it will answer my purpose," replied Mr. Wallace, good naturedly, and his wife hurried to the kitchen.

"Where is the steak, Jenny? We must cook it immediately."

"The steak, ma'am? Inddeed, not a bit of a steak has been sent to this house."

"No steak! Run up and ask Mr. Wallace if he ordered the things from the market."

Jenny obeyed, and soon returned with the answer that Mr. Wallace had forgotten the marketing, and would take a piece of pie and some bread and butter for his dinner.

"Cold water for breakfast, and bread and butter for dinner," sighed Mrs. Wallace, but she felt somewhat consoled by the reflection that it was not wholly owing to her forgetfulness, as no one could expect her to have a steak in readiness which had not been sent from market.

The simple meal was soon prepared, and quickly eaten, for Mr. Wallace was momentarily expecting the arrival of a carriage which was to take him to the cars.

"My small carpet bag will answer," he said to his wife. "I shall return early to-morrow morning. Put in as few things as possible;" and while Mrs. Wallace hastened the nscessary preparations, he looked anxiously from the window in the direction in which he expected the carriage.

"I shall miss the cars," he exclaimed, "if that lazy fellow does not come soon. What can he mean by this delay?"

"Did you order the carriage yourself?" asked Mrs. Wallace, as she placed the neatly packed carpet bag by her husband's side.

"No; but I charged John to do so, and he could not have forgotten it, for he passes the coach stand on his way to school."

This argument did not appear quite conclusive to Mrs. Wallace, for she recollected that it was necessary to pass the market in order to reach her husband's office, and yet the meat had been forgotten; but she made no remark, having long since learned that the wisest course for a wife is to make few allusions to the faults or omissions of her husband.

A group of noisy children soon entered.

"Did you order the carriage to be here at half past twelve, John?" demanded Mr. Wallace of his eldest son.

"O, father! I did not order it at all. I forgot all about it. What shall I do? Shall I run for it now?"

"No; it would be too late," replied his father, impatiently. "You have no business to forget what I tell you to do John. This delay may cause me a great loss."

"I did not mean to do any harm, father," replied the boy. "I forgot."

"That does not mend the matter," said Mr. Wallace, and he left the house and returned to his office with feelings of vexation which were unusual to him.

Soon after his departure a heavy fall, followed by a loud scream, was heard in the hall, and Mrs. Wallace hastened to see who was injured. She found Catherine, a young girl who assisted in the care of the children, just rising from the floor.

"How did you fall? Where are you hurt, Catharine?" she inquired.

"I fear I have sprained my foot, ma'am. I cannot bear my weight upon it," replied the poor girl, staggering to a chair.

"It must bathed immediately." said her mistress, and she quickly produced a bottle containing a sovereign cure for sprains and bruises, and applied it to Catherine's foot. But what caused your fall, Catharine," she again asked.

"Why ma'am, I must say that it is my own fault. I spilled some water upon the oil cloth an hour or two ago, and I forgot to wipe it up. It has frozen hard, and I slipped on the ice. I ought to be glad that it is myself who is hurt."

Mrs. Wallace thought of the children, and mentally responded to this sentiment. She kindly and vigorously continued her efforts for Catherine's relief, until the pain was somewhat abated, and then leaving her comfortably seated in a warm room, she sent Jenny to remove the ice from the oil cloth, and returned to her work. The short winters afternoon passed away, and desirous that the evening meal should in some degree compensate for the imperfections of the breakfast and dinner, Mrs. Wallace resolved to attend to it herself, and for this purpose went to the kitchen at an early hour. Jenny was not there, and the basement door was slightly open.

"Careless girl!" ejaculated the lady, as she hastily closed it and drew the bolt. "How many times I have charged her to keep this door fastened. Everything in the house might be carried off, and she would know nothing about it!"

Half an hour elapsed before Jenny appeared. She received the reproof of her mistress in silence, and proceeded to perform her customary duties. A plentiful repast was soon prepared, and, satisfied that nothing was omitted, Mrs. Wallace took her seat at the table, and welcomed her husband with a cheerful smile.

"Stewed oysters! ah, my favorite dish," exclaimed Mr. Wallace, as he lifted the cover from the smoking oysters. "Bring a large spoon, if you please, Jenny. You forget that a knife and fork will not help to oysters."

"Indeed, sir, I did not forget, but not a bit of a spoon can I find. I thought the mistress had taken them up stairs."

"No, Jenny, I have not touched them. They must be in the closet. Go and look again."

Jenny obeyed, but returned without success. Other members of the family joined in the search but in vain. No spoons were to be found.

"When did you see them last?" inquired Mr. Wallace of the panic stricken Jenny.

"At dinner time, sir. I washed them myself, and they shone like a new dollar. I am certain sure that I put them in their proper place."

"Yes, but you forgot to lock the basement door when you went out," remark Mrs. Wallace.

"That is the secret!" exclaimed her husband. "Some one has stole them. A dozen large silver spoons lost through your carelessness, Jenny. It is intolerable."

"Indeed, sir, and I am very sorry. I quite forgot the door, and that is the truth. I just stepped up the street to speak a word to my cousin, who lives beyond."

"I wish both you and your cousin had been beyond the seas, rejoined her irritated master; for though generally a good tempered man, the loss of a dozen large silver spoons was more than Mr. Wallace could bear with eqnanimity.

Jenny retreated from his wrath, and the supper was eaten, but not enjoyed. Even the stewed oysters had lost their relish. The meal was hardly concluded, when a ring at the door bell was followed by the announcement that a poor woman wished to speak with Mr. Wallace.

"Show her in," was the reply, and a meanly clad, but respectbale looking Irish woman entered Curteseying to the company, she said:

"I made bold to call to remind your honor of your promise."

"My promise!" exclaimed Mr. Wallace, "I do not understand you, my good woman."

"Your honor wil be after remembering that you met me at the door of your office some days ago, and listened to my story."

"Ah! I do recollect your countenance now. I had nothing but a large bill in my pocket at the time, and I asked your number, and promised to call and see what could be done for you. I have been so pressed with business that I forgot the whole affair. I hope you have not suffered in consequence?"

"Indeed, and we have suffered enough, but it is no shame to your honor for forgetting the like of us. I went to the office to-day, but you were out, and they directed me to your house. My poor husband has died since I saw you. You will mind that I told you he was ill. The poor babes will die too, if I do not get some relief, for scarcely a morsel of food have they tasted for two days, and I have not a bit of wood or coal to keep them from freezing."

Here the poor woman wiped her eyes with the corner of her apron, and tears stood in the eyes of the children, who were attentive listeners to the story, while the youngest girl crept close to the speaker and offered the cake which had just been given her.

"No fire and no food!" exclaimed Mr. Wallace. "Why did younot apply to the society for the relief of the poor?"

"I am a stranger here, sir, and have no friends to advise me. Blessings on your kind heart, my dear little lady," she continued addressing the child.

"I will go with you at once," said Mr. Wallace, rising. "Fill a basket with food, my dear, and let John come with me. My forgetfulness is really less excusable than Jenny's, and I must do all I can to make amends."

Another hour found the poor family in possession of more comforts than they had enjoyed for many weeks, and Mr. Wallace and John returned home with the pleasing consciousnes of having performed a benevolent action.

The younger children had gone to rest. John soon followed their example, and the husband and wife sat before the glowing fire and talked over the events of the day.

"I am convinced that forgetfulness is but another name for selfishness," remarked Mr. Wallace.

"How can that be?" was the reply. "We are all iable to forget. A person may have a poor memory, and yet not be selfish."

"This may be true in some cases," replied her husband "but with few exceptions, a real regard for the welfare of others will enable us to remember their wants. We do not often forget our own interests."

"True," replied Mrs. Wallace, thoughtfully; "and yet I am unwilling to admit that forgetfulness and selfishness are the same thing. For instance, I forgot to have your dinner ready at the hour you requested, but surely, this was not selfishness in me."

"Should you have forgotten to have ordered your own dinner, if you had expected to leave home at one?" playfully asked Ms. Wallace.

"Perhaps not, but still I might have done so.—You know you forgot to order the things from the market?"

"I did; but probably I should not have forgotten it, had I supposed that my dinner depended entirely upon my memory. You have so frequently supplied my omissions' that I have grown careless."

"I must acknowledge that your conclusions are just," said Mrs. Wallace. "If we really love our neighbors as ourselves, we shall seldom forget to minister to their wants."

"From henceforth," continued her husband, "we will teach our children to avoid, in word and deed, the little sentence, 'I forgot;' and we ourselves will endeavor to keep the good of others so constantly in our minds, that this common excuse for selfish neglect of duty will be unnecessay. If we succeed in this, we shall, at least, have the satisfaction of learning a useful lesson from 'the disasters of the day.'"

India Rubber Armor.

In Paris a new kind of cuirass for the use of the army, is shortly to be tried. This cuirass is of vulcanized india rubber, about half an inch thick. This thickness, it is stated, is more than sufficient to resist the action of a ball projected from any kind of firearm. All experiments tried have proved entirely successful. The force of the ball is completely broken by the elasticity of the India rubber, and it falls on the ground at the feet of the person against whom it was sent.

"A Looker On," in the last Gazette reiterates the false and absurd assertion that "the laws of nature are immutable." As the writers for that journal do not know the meaning of the word immutable it becomes our duty to inform them. It means "that cannot be changed." God has the power, as acknowledged even by themselves, to change the laws of nature, consequently they can be changed, and are mutable and not immutable. The assertion is not only false, but absurd—for it is evidently nonsense to say that a Power can make laws which cannot be changed by the exertion of the same power. This is plain enough surely, and the writers aforesaid can have no excuse for again repeating the assertion which has so often been proved untrue.—Plainfield Union.

The superior attainments of the writers in the Union is certainly most astounding; their vast knowledge in the dead languages,—they can undoubtedly expound the latin terms in a law book or the labels on an apothecary's bottles—in grammar, logic, &c., is very naturally conspicuous; their desire to impart knowledge to others is certainly commendable and we trust is duly appreciated; they have discovered and are anxious to inform our readers that the word "immutable" means "that cannot be changed."

How very profound are their researches; indeed, in the language of dominie Samson, they are 'prodi-gi-ous!' But, astounding as it may appear, this is not their only discovery, these same writers it will be recollected declared that "If the laws of nature are immutable, not only no miracles ever have in fact been wrought, but the very supposition of their having been wrought becomes absurd;" after having exhausted all their logic to disprove this, to prove that the laws of nature are not immutable, they discovered—having examined their Bibles or read Hume's Essays—and declared that "so far from proving that miracles could not have taken place must be true before they could take place."

Such is the logic by which our proposition—Nature ever acts by immutable laws—"has so often been proved untrue." Conclusive surely, for if the laws of nature are immutable miracles could not be wrought say they; and they also say if they were not immutable even God could not work a miracle, as a miracle, according to the Bible and Webster, is a "supernatural event—contrary to the established constitution and course of things, a deviation from the known laws of nature," consequently if they were mutable, or miracles were wrought in accordance with the laws of nature Almighty power would not be required to produce them. But the logic of the writers in the Union is that because God has the power therefore they were wrought.

So also in the above, because, in condescension to the weakness of their arguments, we admitted the "power"—trusting thereby to elicit from them some of that evidence which they assert is so abundant to prove that miracles have been wrought—therefore, they say, the perfect laws which God has made for the government of the universe has been suspended, and reversed, and miracles have been wrought. According to this logic because the power existed it was used for this purpose; God has the power to do wrong and to act unjustly, therefore he will and does act unjustly! Such, we repeat again, is the arguments by which our premises "has so often been proved untrue"

Reader, just contemplate for a moment the superior knowledge of these writers for the Union, the knowledge that can prove both sides of a question either true or false you must certainly admit is most profound; we bespeak for them the attention of the learned bodies of our land, they undoubtedly will bestow, when they discover and comprehend, the height and depth, length and breadth of their attainments, some token of their admiration, perhaps a medal—of leather.

The Talcott Court Martial.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, July 12,

The findings and sentence of the Court Martial are: That Gen. Talcott is guilty of all the specifications, with two important exceptions, and guilty of all the charges, and the Court does sentence him, Brevet Brigadier General George Talcott, Colonel of the Ordnance Department, to be dismissed from the service.

The following is the President's approval:

The foregoing proceedings of a Court Martial for the trial of Brevet Brigadier General George Talcott having been laid before me, and having been by me duly examined and considered, I hereby confirm the same. (Signed) MILLARD FILLMORE.

☞ "The Newark Weekly Mercury."—We have received number two of a new weekly paper of large size bearing the above title, which is published at the office of the "Daily Mercury," Newark, N. J. The daily being one of the most liberal, and ably conducted Whig papers in the state, the "Weekly Mercury" will undoubtedly possess the same characteristics. Those hereabouts who want a paper from the county seat, and chief city of the State, will find the Mercury, weekly or daily, an able advocate of whig principles, and one which has the magnanimity and independence not only to judge candidly and represent charitably the measures and principles of its opponents—the reverse is the case with too many partizan journals—but to advocate those which it conceives to be for the best interest of the people; instead of throwing sand in their eyes it is ever teaching them to think and to reason, that "knowledge is power," and that through its acquisition man is best prepared to wisely govern himself—is best able to demand and maintain his equal inalienable rights.

PENALTY FOR SLAVE WHIPPING.—Simeon Souther, a wealthy citizen of Hanover County, Virginia, has been convicted of beating one of his slaves to death, and sentenced to the penitentiary for five years.

THE NEW TAX LAW.

We see that some papers in the State are making great exertions to get the new tax law, passed by the last legislature, repealed. Now we hope that this will not be accomplished. That there are many objectionable things in the present workings of the law, no one can deny. But the main features of it are just, and, with some modifications, we believe would work to the advantages of the people of the State. A large majority of the taxes must be raised on property—and is it just that the man who holds in his possession a farm which is mortgaged for three fourths of its value should be compelled to pay the same amount of tax with his fortunate neighbor, who has his farm clear of all incumbrances? And is it right that those men who have their property invested in bonds and mortgages, but who under the old law were almost entirely exempt from taxation those who live at their ease, for their own enjoyment and pleasure, and produce nothing for the general good—should be allowed to go entirely free? We hope our next legislature will take the law in hand, strike out the objectionable points and insert whatever, in their opinion, will be for the benefit of the community at large.—Bordentown Register.

Horrid Murder at Hackensack.

The Jersey City Telegraph, of Saturday, has in a postscript, an account of a murder done on Friday afternoon, about a mile from Hackensack. It appears that an Irishman and a stranger, called, about 4 o'clock, at the house of Mr. Blackley and requested food, which was given him. After he had finished his meal, he commedced insulting the females of the house, (there being no one but females present,) took an infant from the cradle and threatened to take it away. The screams of the women brought in Mr. Simon Demarest, a neighbor, who was at work in a meadow near by, who pacified the fellow and he went away, but shortly after returned, when Mr D. was again called, but the Irishman refused to leave, and came at Mr. D· in a menacing attitude. Mr. Demarest ran toward his work, and the stranger followed him at the hight of his speed—arriving in the meadow he took a cast-steel pitch-fork and ran it nearly through Mr. D's head, it having entered just above the right temple; he then drew it out and gave him the second wound with it in the region of the heart, causing instant death. The alarm soon spread through the neighborhood, when the citizens rallied and apprehended him, but not without a violent strugle. He is a powerful man, but was finally thrown by some of the neighbors, when Mr. Richard Doremus obtaining a large sized pitch-fork and placing it across his neck, so as not to injure him, pinned him to the earth, and thus held him until further aid came to hand, which was shortly done, and the miscreant is safely lodged in Hackensack jail.

ATTEMPT OF THE BURGLARS, SHIELDS AND THOMAS, TO BREAK JAIL.—Shields and Thomas, the burglars confined in Essex County prison, N. J. for the robbery of Williams's jewelry store, have been maturing a plan of esoape; but through the vigilance of the keeper, their designs have been frustrated.—On the discovery of the plan, (says the Newark Advertiser) Shields was stripped of all his clothing, and a sharp pointed carving knife, which he said was furnished him in an eating house in New-York was found secreted in his pantaloons. He stoutly protested against the legality of such a proceeding, and said that if he was to be dealt with in this manner, he would show that he was yet a man, although confined in prison, and warned the keeper that as every man had his day, he would yet have his; and if he was to be thus treated, the fear of death was no obstacle to the accomplishment of his purposes.—Subsequently, both prisoners were removed to other cells, and well secured with fetters and chains, firmly fastened to the floor. Shields appears about 25 ysars of age, and we learn, commenced his course of crime in Lo[illegible] about the age of 13; subsequently he married the woman who is now confined with him, as an accomplice, and they continued in the same business until he was arrested in London for a daring burglary, tried, convicted, and sentenced to transportation for 15 years. While on his way to prison in charge of officers, he attempted to escape, and with a "billy," killed one of them on the spot, but was, nevertheless secured and lodged in Millbank Prison; from which he soon after escaped by the ingenious use of the long handle to his tin cup—being the only instrument within his reach—and fled to this country.

DEATH BY LIGHTNING.—The New-Haven Palladium states that Mr. Daniel Beach of Terryville, (Plymouth,) was killed by lightning during the storm of Thursday morning last. The lightning struck a tree standing near the dwelling, and following the tree to the gable end of the house, passed from thence to the garret and then down one of the timbers of the dwelling, to the bed of Mr. Beach, where he and his wife were asleep. Mrs. Beach was awoke by the explosion, and on speaking to her husband received no reply. She laid her hand upon him, and found him a corpse—he had been killed instantly by the shock. On arising herself to go for assistance, (for they were alone in the house,) she discovered that one of her limbs below the knee had been paralyzed by the same bolt that killed her husband.—However, disabled as she was, by placing her limb upon a chair, she proceeded a distance of one quarter of a mile to a neighbors for assistance. Mr. Beach was a highly respected farmer, aged 51, and his loss will long be felt and lamented by his fellow townsmen.

Mrs. B. has partially recovered from her injury, and it was thought no permanent inconvenience would result from the occurrence. It may, perhaps, be of interest to state that Mr. Beach was sleeping upon a feather bed.

A Brooklyn paper tells a story of a Mr. Robinson, of Flatbush, L. I., who has two dogs, the one a small spaniel and the other a large half-breed deer-hound. The small dog was playing with Mr. R's child near a cistern, when the child fell, head foremost, into the water; the agonized mother, who, from a window, witnessed the occurrence, saw the spaniel run to the kennel of the hound, who instantly ran to the spot, and, before the mother could reach the child, the noble animal placed it in safety. Instinct might have induced the small dog to attempt a rescue, but evidently knowing his inability to do so, what prevented him from trying, and caused him, quick as thought, to fetch the stronger, and what induced the stronger thus suddenly to go to his aid?

☞ We make the following brief extract from the new postage law for the benefit of the public:

"If any person shall use, or attempt to use, in pre-payment of postage, any postage stamp which shall have been before used for like purpose, such persons shall be subject to a penalty of fifty dollars for every such offence, to be recovered in the name of the United States, in any court of competent jurisdiction."

Later from Europe.

The United States Mail Steamship Franklin arrived at New York, at 2 o'clock Monday morning, after a fine passage of 11 days and 5 hours, from Cowes. This is equal to 11 days passage from Liverpool

The Franklin's news is nearly five days later than that brought by the Canada. Both the Asia and the Pacific had arrived at Liverpool, making fine passages. The Liverpool, papers set down the Asia's passage at 10 days 3 hours, and the Pacific's is stated as being 10 days 6 hours. This would give the Asia three hours advantage, but as we have not the exact time at at which the Pacific reached the Mersey, there may be an error in the English calculation. At any rate the Pacific's passage sustains her character for speed.

The decline in the price of cotton is the most important news by the Franklin.

Liverpool has been the scene or a series of riotings between the soldiers of the 91st regiment, stationed there, and the poliece and citizens. The affair has created the greatest excitement; and should teach John Bull not to be so censorous upon every little occurrence that disturbs the peace of American cities.

Meeting of Laborers at Gloucester, N. J.

To the Editor of The Tribune:

On the Jersey shore, at Gloucester, a mass meeting was held on last Wednesday evening. There were present from two to three thousand persons, one-half whom were young women, the employees of the corporation, who worked the mills in that city, and had refused to comply with the law recently passed at Trenton, providing that no minor should be worked more than ten hours The young ladies occupied an elevated position, a kind of amphitheater by themselves; and the novelty of the scene, the location, the night, the purpose, the beauty of the girls, and the moon, all lent indescribable charms to the scene. It certainly was the most interesting meeting I ever attended.

Mr. WILLIAMSON occupied the Chair, called the meeting to order and introduced the first speaker, Mr. L. H. PHILLIPS, who said: That as we passed along the delaware these two structures (pointing to the mills) strike us as a grand sight—vast establishments wherein peace and content would seem to reign. Their very positions would lead us to believe that they were built and originated for the benefit of the human family. They were edged in by pleasant grounds—their neatness and their quiet would seem to say that labor was there made a pleasure. But how were you doomed to disappointment when you landed upon the shore! You were as much harrowed by the cries of the factory slave as though you were in Manchester. Those who gave wages there exacted 13 1-2 hours work in return, each day. Was not this cruel? Little children and young girls to be shut up from sunrise to sundown! Those who talked of education could not be sincere if they would not give young people time to read, write and improve themselves in mind and body. Stand out, and God send you may be successful. You have no hopes from these men—they would work you every hour that God has sent. I hope that they will be brought to a sense of their shame—men who sell their souls and hearts for a morsel of labor they can wring out of the factory girl, and the baby who in a Christian society should not work at all.

[Loud applause.]

Mr. MAYERS said this was a serious affair, when men were called upon to step in between woman and man, and protect the former from the tyrannies of the latter. It was an uneven, and unnatural contest, and they were noble girls who had risen up against the giant Capital, and declared, without means or favor from high places to back them, that the monster should rule no longer.

What a ridiculous thing it was for men to run about and make glorious speeches, raising feasts and festivals, in favor of the Declaration of Independence and our popular institutions, our free country, &c., knowing that they are doing all they can in private to oppress the weak, and on the 4th of July, knowing that on the 5th they intended to oppose the majesty of the law themselves—to put a hindrance to the carrying out of the ten-hour law—that law which was fresh from the hands of the Legislature. But he thought if they were true to themselves they could succeed, and with hearts like theirs he believed success was certain, as they had Law, Legislature and Justice on their side, not forgetting the almighty voice of public opinion. [Great cheering.)

Several other speakers addressed the meeting. The following resolutions were carried:

Resolved, That 10 hours is sufficient for a days labor of any man, much more woman, girl or child; and that we the factory operatives of Gloucester, relying upon the firmness of the laws of the State of New-Jersey, are determined to support or fall by them in the advocacy of our just rights in the eyes of God and man.

Resolved, That we ask our legislative assemblies to pass a law forbidding any child under 14 years of age working in the factory at all; and in the breach of which law a heavy fine to be put on the employer who shall wittingly use him knowing his age, for any purpose of labor.

Resolved, That we appoint a committee to wait upon the Corporation, asking them their answer whether they will employ us at the legal time or whether they wish to try the dreadful alternative of starving us into submission, to the detriment of their capital as well.

TEMPRANCE AND SLAVERY.—The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the Yearly Meeting of the Freewill Baptists of New-Hampshire lately held at Franconia:

Resolved, That we deeply deplore the increase of intemperance among us, and that every man, especially every Christian, should enter the Temperance arena with renewed energy, and struggle, with untiring assiduity, till the people shall demand protection from rum selling, equal to the State of Maine.

Whereas our fears at the last session relative to the Fugitive Slave Bill, have since been realized by its enactment and repeated execution, therefore,

Resolved, That we now stand where we then stood decided "to obey God rather than men," and that we heartily approve the action of the last General Conference on this question.

Resolved, That we would as soon countenance the catching of slaves on the coast of Africa, as among our Granite Hills; and that we dare not aid in the return of fugitives, any more than in the kidnapping of our own neighbors and friends.

THE MAINE LIQUOR LAW.—A gentleman of this city informs us that on a visit to Bangor, a few weeks since, he observed upon the back of the bill of fare at the Bangor House, where he stopped, a list of liquors, with prices of each carefully set down.—On a more recent visit to the same house, upon taking up the bill of fare at dinner, instead of the list of liquors, he found printed upon the back of the bill the new liquor law of the State, in full!—Boston Commonwealth.

To, A..... Sontag B.....

Ah, he is soft as johnny-cake
That soothes the taste, and scents the pan;
And innocent of sense to make
Much better verses than a ram.

Ah, sillier he than are the goats
With their mustache worn out of sight;
And soothing in his rhyme as oats
When hungry coursers leave the track.

His beauties seen from day to day,
His charming figure smoothly dressed;
With love-cracked heart he sings his lay
In strains Jackasticly expressed.

When stern December's gust doth rush
And harden every thing around,
His head's still like the tender squash,
As mellow, but ah! not as sound.

For nonsense, gentle nonsense, peers
With softest glance 'bove every line,
And Love for once puts on long ears,
To match the graces of the mind.

The Telegraph Circuit—How the Ground Forms Part of it.

There seems to be a doubt in the minds of many, in tracing the current through the circuit of our present one-wired telegraph; it seems to me to be a very plain case. In looking at the subject, let us take the most simple form, that is, a battery with a few yards of wire connecting the zinc and copper or other metals which may be used; we then have a circuit on which the current travels uninterruptedly. Now let the wire be seperated and the ends brought in contact with the opposite sides of a long bar of iron, would not the current pass as readily and rapidly as before; again, if instead of the bar of iron we had a mass of iron as large as a house and the two wires attached near each other on the same side of the mass, or at opposite sides, would not the result be the same? Certainly it would; the current would go from one wire to the other through the conducting properties of the massive iron as easy as the small wire. Then again, if we were to have a battery upon one side of a broad river or bay and the wire conducted across, but instead of coming back, to have it inserted into the end of a glass tube filled with water of one inch in diameter, the tube crossing the river to the battery, and connected to the opposite pole, the water in the tube would form part of the circuit and the fluid pass as free as it would if it had the whole circuit of wire. The same would be the case if the tube was one thousand feet in diameter. Again, we will dispense with the tube, and connect the wire on the opposite side of the river into the water, also the other battery wire into the water on the battery side of the river, would not the current pass through the river the same as it did through the small or large tube? In order to comprehend more fully, let us suppose that Lake Superior was perfectly isolated from all surrouding objects, and a partition through the middle of a nonconductor, so that one half should be isolated from the other, and one end of the circuit wire to be in contact with one half the lake, and the other circuit end in contact with the other portion of the lake, who believes that a current could not be sustained?

My own opinion, based on some practice and a good deal of study and reflection, is, that earth, in its natural and moist state, is a conductor of electric fluids, and that there is a certain amount of electricity constantly dispersed through it, of the same density at all places. The reason for its being in the same state, is obvious, from the fact that the earth is a good conductor, and the instant there was more electric fluid in one place than in another, this same conducting property would convey it to places of less amount instantaneously.

I do not think that the current of electricity, in its grand circuit, passes on a narrow chain of particles, as it would were it conducted on an issolated wire, but that all the particles constituting the ground body of the circuit are invaded for miles, out of a straight as well as in a right line, the same as it would be if we took a plate of copper or iron one hundred feet or more square, and make it a part of the circuit, it would not be presumed that the fluid would go straight through from one side to the other without affecting the whole plate; it appears to me that the instant the fluid leaves the one wire and enters the plate, the whole plate becomes positive compared to the wire on the opposite side, and with the velocity of lightning it leaves the plate, passes into and through the wire. I think the term absorbed gives us wholly a wrong idea of the facts, as they are the same in a ground circuit, only on a larger scale, that they are in the above named plate forming a part of the circuit.

Wouldn't Marry a Mechanic.

A man commenced visiting a young woman and appeared to be well pleased. One evening he called quite late, which led the girl to inquire where he had been.

"I had been to work to night"

"Do you work for a liviving?" enquired the astonished girl.

"Certaingly," replied the young man, "I am a mechanic."

"My brother does'tn work, and I dislike the name of a mechanic," and she turned up her pretty little nose.

That was the last time he visited the young woman. He is now a wealthy man and has one of the best of women for his wife. This young lady who disliked the name of a mechanic, is now the wife of a miserable fool—a regular vagrant about grogshops—and she a poor miserable girl, is obliged to take in washing in order to support herself and children.

You who dislike the name of a mechanic, whose brothers do nothing but loaf and dress—beware how you treat yovng men who work for a living. Far better discard the well fed pauper with all his rings, jewelry, and brazen pomposity, and take to your affection the callous-handed, intelligent, and industrious mechanic. Thousands have bitterly regretted their folly, who have turned their backs on honest industy. A few years of bitter experience have taught them a severe lesson. In this country no man or woman should be respected, in our thinking, who will not work bodily or mentally, and who curl their lips with scorn, when introduced to hard working men.

VOLUNTARY STARVATION.—Cornelius Regan, aged 31 years, died in the House of Correction at Springfield, Mass., having starved himself to death by a fast of six days. He was incarcerated for thirty days, or until he could pay a fine of $5 and costs. Attempts were made to persuade and even force him to eat, but in vain.

A LESSON.—A clerk in a mercantile establishment writes to his friends at home, "I have a plaguey easy time of it now-a-days—very little to do—our firm don't advertise!"

A New Orleans paper advertises a runaway negro as a "stout boy, with a low crowned hat, made to carry BRICKS!"

I wish you would not smoke segars, said a plump little black-eyed girl to her lover. Why not I smoke as well as your chimney? Because chimney's don't smoke when they are in good order. He has quit smoking.

☞ Passaic county has sent eight prisoners to the State Penitentiary within a week.—True American.

DIED.

At Bridgeton N. J., on the 6th. inst. WILLIAM, youngest child of Lewis M. Rocap, of this place.

TRIFLE NOT WITH THE SPOILER!

CONSUMPTION, like the rattle-snake, always gives warning of its approach. The dry and frequent Cough, the sense of oppression at the chest, the short quick breathing of the patient, are certain indications that serious mischief is going on in the Organs of respiration. At this stage of the disease, Dr Rogers Syrup of Liverwort Tar and Canchalagua will not only be a certain but a rapid cure. The three vegetable ingredients of which it is composed form, in their compound state, a medicine which is at once anti-febrile tonic, and healing in its properties. If the pulse is excited, it soothes it; if the strength is declining, it restores it; and if the Lungs are inflamed, and ulceration is threatened, it heals and invigorates them. Such is the philosophy of its operation, and thousands rescued from the verge of the grave can testify to its practical effect. For full details, see pamphlet and advertisement in another place.

July 1st 1851.

ATTENTION CITIZENS!

THE citizens of Plainfield who are willing to form themselves into a Fire Company for Harmony Engine No 2. are requested to meet at JOHN AYERS' on THURSDAY Evening July 17th at 7 1-2 o'clock. ONE OF MANY.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels; such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

WHEN IT OCCURS.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt.

The bowel having protruded as a rupture, or burst and known by the external LUMP OR TUMOR, should be cartfully and thoroughly returned into the abdomen and retained there by means of a suitable instrument, as a TRUSS BANDAGE, or SUPPORTER. The application of such mechanical aid in the relief and final cure of hernia, is a matter requiring much special study, skill and experience not only in the mechanism of the body, but also in that of instruments as relating to their application; for apart from the different methods of producing pressures, the disease calls for exact adaptation in the TRUSS PAD or pledget used for the purpose of retaining a hernia.

SUCH IS TRUTH.

The above truths are now being appreciated by the public having been brought particularly to their notice through the recent improvements made by Frederick M. Butler in Supporter and Hernial pads and introduced by the Hull's Truss Office, in their treatment for the relief and radical cure of Hernia. Over two year experience has now been had in the application of BUTLER'S recently patented Truss Pads—proving through numerous cases, that from their peculiar form and bearing they lie over and upon the inguinal canal, dislodge the bowels thoroughly, contract the rings or natural openings, thicken the muscular walls, and thereby effect a cure.

The office is provided with experienced male and female attendants, who apply instruments direct to the person of patients, and the public may rely upon that care being made in the application which will most likely tend to the relief and cure of the several complaints coming under their treatment, whether it be Hernia, Prolapsus Uteri, Prolapsus Ani, Piles, or other similar weakness, requiring the mechanical support of a Truss, Supporter, Belt, Braces or Bandage. HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE,

GOLD AND SILVER SPECTACLES.

WOULD respectfully inform the citizens of Plainfield and the public generally that he has removed his Store to 345 Broad-st.

oppositethe City hotel, Newark,

And that he has on hand an extensive assortment of GOLD, SILVER AND STEEL SPECTACLES, Of every description. Gold, Silver, Steel and Tortoise Shell reading Glasses, also Hand, Quizzing, Opera and magnifying Glasses, in great variety: Telescopes, Perceptives, Goggles, Eye preservers; a first rate assortment of PEBBLES' Double Concave Glasses, Cataract Glassess, &c. Particular attention is called to

PRICE'S PREMIUM PRISCOPIC SPECTACLES.

Being made of the finest materials, which through their high polish and true ground, produce the purest vision and are recommended by competent judges as being decidedly the best and most natural in their effect of all others, for preserving and improving the sight in continued reading, writing, sewing, &c. Persons with weak eyes can be fitted with Glasses which will greatly benefit and not strain the sight. Short-sighted persons and such as have been operated upon for Cataract, can also be suited.

J. P. would be happy to see at his store all persons that have found difficulty in getting Glasses that were adapted to their sight, as the most difficult cases are easily fitted upon a fair trial. Any person purchasing Spectacles at his Store, can exchange them if not well suited, any time within three months, without extra charge The subscriber has also on hand a large assortment of Silver Spoons, Prince Albert, Threaded and plain patterns, Butter Knives, Sugar Spoons, Mustard Spoons, Salt Spoons, Cream spoons, &c. Also heavy Silver Thimbles, Gold Pens, Paper Weights, Silver-plated, plain and threaded, Table Preserve, Tea and Salt Spoons, Plated Forks, &c. [179.

BABY JUMPER

AND

WALKER COMBINED.

The subscriber having invented and made application for a patent for the above article would hereby call the attention of the public to its superiority over all others.

It forms a neat article of furniture, somewhat resembling an ottoman; it being upon castors, the little occupant can move it in all directions around the room with the utmost ease. The top opens by a spring and then closes around under the child's arms and locks. The child sits in an upright position upon a saddle or seat, stuffed perfectly soft, bearing no weight on his arms, with its feet resting upon the floor. The child can easily raise the article, and as there is a spring in each leg it can use it as a jumper for its amusement, or push itself around the room, thus learning to walk without other asistance. As the springs buoys the child up, thereby preventing too much weight upon its feet, it gradually learns to use its legs and soon learns to walk. The child can in no manner receive injury; a trial or inspection will satisfy the most skeptical of its superior utility.

Prices from $5 to $10 each, according to style of trimmings &c. Orders punctually attended to by

Plainfield, March 15 1851. [210.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS, or Medicated Compound.

INFALLIBLE for renewing, invigorating, and beautifying the HAIR, removing the scurf, dandruff, and all affections of the scalp; and curing eruptions on the skin, diseases of the glands, muscles and integuments, and releieving stings, cuts, bruises, sprains, &c. With this preperation "there is no such word as fail." The first journals in America, medical men of the highest eminence, prominent citizens of all professions, and ladies who have used it for years in their dressing rooms and nurseries, admit with one accord, that for imparting vigor, gloss, luxurience and curl to the hair, eradicating scurf and dandruff, healing wounds, curing contusions, sprains, stings, &c., and relieving diseases of the skin, the glands and the muscles, it has no equal, among the multitude of compounds advertised in the public prints, or used in private practice. In cheapness as well as efficacy, Barry's Tricopherous is unrivalled. The immense cash sales of the article have enabled the Inventor to supply it at retail, at 25 cents per bottle, which is from 50 to 100 per cent. less than the price of any other preperation for the hair now in use. The scientific treatise on the hair and the skin, (embracing valuable directions for the culture and preservation of Nature's choicest ornament,) in which each bottle is enclosed, is alone worth the money.

The affinity between the membranes which constitute the skin, and the hair which draws its sustenance from this triple envelope is very close. All diseases of the hair originate in the skin oi the head. If the pores of the scalp are clogged, or if the blood and other fluids do not circulate freely through the small vessels which feed the root with moisture, and impart life to the fibres, the result is scurf, dandruff, shedding of the hair, graveness, dryness and harshness of the ligaments, and entire baldness, as the case may be. Stimulate the skin to healthful action with the Tricopherous, and the torpid vessels, recovering their activity, will anihilate the disease. In all affections of the skin, and of the substrata of muscles and integuments, the process and the effect are the same.—It is upon the skin, the muscular fibre, and the glands, that the Tricopherous has its specific action, and in all affections and injury of these organs, it is a sovereign remedy.

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York; and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States and Canada. [134is

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

Among the numerous discoveries Science has made in this generation to facilitate the business of life—increase its enjoyment, and even prolong the term of human existence, none can be named of more real value to mankind, than this contribution of Chemistry to the Healing Art. A vast trial of its virtues throughout this broad country, has proven beyond a doubt, that no medicine or combination of medicine yet known, can so surely control and cure the numerous varieties of pulmonary disease which have hitherto swept from our midst thousands and thousands every year. Indeed, there is now abundant reason to believe a Remedy has at length been found which can be relied on to cure the most dangerous affections of the lungs. Our space here will not permit us to publish any proportion of the cures affected by its use, but we would present the following opinions of eminent men, and refer further enquiry to the circular which the Agent below named, will always be pleased to furnish free wherein are full particlars, and indisputable proof of these facts.

From the President of Amherst College, the celebrated PROFESSOR HITCHCOCK.

"James C. Ayer—Sir: I have used your CHERRY PECTORAL in my own case of deep-seated Bronchitis, and am satisfied from its chemical constitution, that it is an admirable compound for the relief of laryngial and bronchial difficulties. If my opinion as to its superior character can be of any service, you are at liberty to use it as you think proper.

PROFESSOR SILLIMAN, M. D., L. L. D., Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, &c., Yale College, Member of the Lit, Hist. Med. Phil. and Scientific Societies of America and Europe.

"I deem the CHERRY PECTORAL an admirable composition from some of the best articles in the Materia Medica, and a very effective remedy for the class of diseases it is intended to cure."

New Haven, Ct., Nov. 1 1849.

MAJOR PATTISON, President of the S. C. Senate, states he has used the CHERRY PECTORAL with wonderful success, to and inflammation of the lungs.

From one of the first Physicans in Maine.

SACO, Me., April 26, 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell. Dear Sir: I am now constantly using your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, and prefer it to any other medicine for pulmonary complaints. From observation of many severe cases, I am convinced it will cure coughs, colds, and diseases of the lungs, that have put to defiance all other remedies.

I invariably reccommend its use in cases of consumption, and consider it much the best remedy known for that disease.

Respectfully yours, I. S. CUSHMAN, M. D.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impetency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cerdial cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without offspring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co., of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper.

WONDERFUL CURES!

AND

CANCHALAGUA;

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to

CONSUMPTION.

NOTHING LIKE IT.

CURE FOLLOWS CURE!

READ THE EVIDENCE!!

The above invaluable Medicine has now been before the public sufficiently long to have its virtues thoroughly tested. It has been used by all classes of the community, under every possible variety of circumstances, and has everywhere proved itself a most powerful and efficient Cough Medicine. Lung Diseases of all kinds, yield to its influence, as mists pass away upon the rising of the Sun. This is no fiction. We give you below, letters from persons who are now living in the state of New York, and who declare, over their own signatures, all that we could possibly desire to say in its favor. Those who can read their statements and yet remain incredulous, must be beyond the reach of human testimony.

A LOVELY YOUNG LADY

CURED OF CONSUMPTION!

☞ The following is from the pen of WM. H. LEVISON, Esq., the distinguished Editor of the U. S. Military and Naval Argus under date New York, Jan. 25, 1850. What could be more conclusive?

"It is seldom we permit ourselves to occupy a space in these columns to speak in praise of any article in the patent medicine way; but when we see the life of a fellow-creature saved by the use of any medicine whatever, we consider it as our right, if not a duty, to give a simple statement of facts, that others may, in like manner be benefitted. The case which has induced us to pen this article, was that of a young lady of our acquaintance, who, by frequent exposure to the night air, contracted a cold, which settled on the Lungs before its ravages could be stayed. (This occurred two years ago this winter.) Various remedies were used, but with very little effect or benefit. The cough grew worse, with copious expectoration, and the sunken eye, and pale, hollow cheek, told plainly that PULMONARY DISEASE was doing its worst on her delicate frame. The family physician was consulted and although he would not admit to the young lady that she really had the CONSUMPTION, yet he would give no encouragement as to a cure. At this crisis, her mother was persuaded to make use of a bottle of Dr. Rogers' Compound Syrup of LIVEWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA and we are happy to state, she was perfectly cured in less than three months by this medicine alone, after even hope was destroyed. It is useless to comment on such a case as this, for the truth will reach where polished fiction never can. If any doubt the authenticity of this statement, let them call at this office.—*U. S. COUGH AND DISEASE

OF 14 MONTHS STANDING.

CURED.

AFTER BEING GIVEN UP TWICE

BY EMINENT PHYSICIANS!

Albany, June 9th, 1849.

Messrs. A. L. Scovill & Co.—I herewith forward to you a Certificate of a Cure, effected by your Compound Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua The Cough and expectoration was of fourteen months standing, and had baffled the skill of several of our eminent physicians in New York, Albany, and Cooperstown. I am the person in whom the cure was effected, and as I had previously no faith in patent medicines, I have since tried it on others, and have become satisfied of its value. Mine was as GREAT A CURE as ever was performed, as I had, during my sickness, been given up twice by my physicians. I have now commenced my business, after taking, I think about eight bottles.

Yours, repectfully, THOS. C. FAULDER.

BLEEDING AT THE LUNGS CURED.

☞ SEE HOW PROMPTLY IT ACTS!

Statement of Mr. A. Lang, Baker, No 388 Pearl street, N. Y. A few days before last Christmas, I was taken unwell, and soon commenced bleeding freely at the Lungs. I called in a Homœopathic Physician, but his medicine did not seem to help me. I read your advertisement, and thought I would try Dr. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA. Before I had takea up the third bottle, by bleeding had stopped, my Cough was gone, and I felt well as usual. My health is now good. I consider it a most excellent medicine, and cordially reccommend it to my friends. [This statement was made to the Proprietors, March 12th 1850.]

A SERMON

Concerning the Original Population of the Earth.

BY SOLYMAN BROWN, A. M.

"All things were made by Him, and without Him was not any thing made that was made."—John i. 3.

The proper distinction between original creation, and subsequent combination, deserves to be noted carefully. It is one thing to originate, and quite another thing to modify.

Man has created nothing. He is himself a creature, conversant only with created things. His time is finite, and even his immortality finite, because the one has end, and the other has beginning.

Man is an organ of communicated life, and capable of modifying even his own existence; an existence which he did not originate, and which he cannot extinguish. He may indeed derange the structure of his mind, as well as of his body; for such is his delegated power as a free moral agent He may also modify many of the existences around him: separate combine, improve, or abuse them; and yet, the language of Inspiration, in relation to the Deity, remains in all its force: "All things were made by Him; and without him, was not any thing made that was made."

On the present occasion, I have proposed to contemplate Deity in the exalted character of the Creator of the earth on which we live, and its proper inhabitants. This is indeed to take but a partial view of the mighty productions of Omnipotence; merely to examine one drop of water in an unfathomable ocean—one blade of grass in the verdant landscape of illimitable creation—one particle of light in a sphere so large and luminous, that darkness finds no abiding place beyond its wide circumference.

And yet, for man, a mere spark of intelligence, kindling into fervour on the surface of creation, intermittent in its splendours as the phosphorescence of the glow-worm, even such a subject is sufficiently comprehensive.

They tell us in their creeds, which one might think were invented as stories for the nursery, that precisely 5833 years ago, the infinite Jehovah, in six natural days, created, out of nothing, the world in which we live! To give it light, he placed in the firmament, the sun, the moon, and the stars. To fishes, he gave the ocean, seas, and rivers; to beasts the meadows, fields, and forests; to birds the circumambient air. Thus earth was pefectly replenished with living creatures, all excepting man. He was produced alone—the solitary being of his race. Woman, afterward, was added as his meet companion. From these two the earth was ultimately covered with inhabitants, who perished in a deluge! Eight persons only survived, from whom mysteriously sprung the white inhabitants of the North, the yellow children of the East, the red men of the West, and the black men of the South! Winds and waves have wafted them to every island; the force of habit has adapted them to every climate; metamorphosed their features, the structure of their bones, the proportion of their limbs, the contexture of their skins, the quality of the natural covering of their heads; their habits, tastes, intellectual energies, moral sensibilities--every thing--resulting in the wide extremes of the beautiful Circassian, and the squalid Hottentot; the intelligent European, and the stupid Tartar!

It becomes me not, as a believer in a Divine Revelation of spiritual truth, to accommodate the doctrine of original creation, to any theory of natural philosophy, or literal theology.

He who reads the Bible as a history of the new creation—the moral generation of man, by which he is born, not into the kingdom of nature, but into the kingdom of heaven—will as soon search the scriptures for the annals of China, as for the history of material creation He will devote his labours with equal zeal in search of the crystalline spheres of Ptolemy, as of the wife of Lot, converted to a saline statue:

It matters not to him who believes concerning scripture, that "the letter killeth, but that the spirit giveth life," agreeably to the sentiment of Paul, by what means, in any natural sense, the serpent in the garden conversed with Eve in human language, without even exciting her surprise; or how the ass of Balaam conducted a colloquy with his master.—The spiritual Christian recalls the truth so plainly declared by the Divine Author of his religion; "my words are spirit, and they are life." And he listens to the command, so frequently repeated—"he that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

But granting to the literal commentator all that he can fairly claim, even if the Bible be a natural history, it appears that we learn only concerning the era of creation, that the earth was created in the beginning. Thus Moses expresses it; and it is remarkable of the Christian scriptures, that they use the same expression to denote the eternity of Him who made the world.

Moses says, Gen. i. 1, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." St. John says in his gospel, i. 1, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and God was the Word. All things were made by Him, and without Him was not anything made that was made."

The precise era, denoted by either of these sacred penmen, computing by any data which man possesses, never can be known. The periods of planetary motions are totally inadequate to such a computation. Every period connected with the solar system, returns perpetually into itself, with all the nice precision of mathematical exactness. The great Platonic year, resulting from the motion of the apsides of the earth's orbit, equal to more than 25000 revolutions around the sun, is utterly indeterminate in relation to the question, whether the present be the first or the millionth period in that progression. Nothing indicates obstruction, retardation, or decay, in the mighty movements of the silent machinery of nature!

But, if the era of original creation is thus infinitely removed from the customary methods of human computation, just as the ubiquity of nature transcends all finite measurement, we may be well assured of the strict propriety of the following positions.

First: That the earth on which we live was created in connexion with the whole solar system; and that the system of our sun was created in connexion with the systems of all the suns that gild the starry firmament. The harmony and mutual dependence of the revolving universe, balanced by a principle of attraction, and counterbalanced by moving forces, urges us to this conclusion.

"Let Earth, unbalanced, from its orbit fly,
Planets and Suns run lawless thro' the sky;
From Nature's chain, whatever link you strike,
Tenth, or ten thousandth, breaks the chain alike."

I am perfectly aware, that there are those among us, who rigidly insist on the very letter of the Mosaic history; contending that the earth was created before the sun; and that successive days of light and darkness were actually known before the planet had revolved once upon axis, or the central luminary was kindled in the heavens; as preposterous as to declare that a son was the progenitor of his father, or that to-morrow will be anterior to yesterday.

But I would not willingly deprive the literal reader of any possible satisfaction connected with his favourite opinions. Perhaps he may be of the number of those who publicly avow the sentiment that religious opinions are always to be prized in the ratio of their absurdity. The argument of these men is this: "That which is unreasonable, is superhuman, and that which is superhuman, is divine. Or, sometimes, thus: "That which is impossible, is beyond the ability of man; and therefore, Deity does every thing that is impossible."

I answer nor for the logic of these conclusions, and covet not the satisfaction they afford. I would rather court the higher satisfation attending a spiritual application of the sacred oracles, and a rational contemplation of the book of nature.

Secondly. We may rest safely in the conclusion, that the earth which we inhabit, together with all the earths in all creation, are co-existent, in relation to antiquity, with the first volition of the Eternal mind to produce a universe. Whenever Deity willed it, the desire was undoubtedly accomplished. Neither time, nor succession, day nor night, measured the progress of the work. No obstacles resisted, no hesitancy embarassed, no amendments delayed, the accomplishment of his design.

Here I shall be met with the history of the six days' labour and the seventh day of rest, as given by Moses. And yet I can conceive of no fatigue, no necessity of rest, no progressive operation, in the nature or works of the Most High. "He spake, and it was done; He commanded, and it stood fast."

But perhaps I shall be asked, "Why not as readily admit the age of nature to be 5000 years, as a period indefinite?"

For this plain reason. It would be to admit a proposition without the smallest evidence, while it makes a finite computus the measure of infinity.

Again I may be told, that every thing around us intimates progression, growth, and increase. The oak is first a shrub; the day is first a dawn, and a man, at first, an embryo. I know this well; and I know as well, that reproduction, by secondary causes, is not creation. A rolling snow-ball may increase in magnitude, although a revolving planet were never developed from an egg.

Thirdly. We may rationally conclude, that the creation of the universe, and its preservation, which is but continued creation, is a development of the infinite resources of the divine nature. Hence the world was not made out of nothing, as is vulgarly supposed, and theologically taught. Rather should we say, the universe was created out of every thing; for Deity is all in all—the Alpha and Omega of universal being.

Fourthly. God created nature "very good." So good, that it was perfect; so perfect, as to remain for ever incapable ef improvement, derangement, or decay.

The only apparent exception to this position, is the ability of man to do right or wrong, according as he uses, or misuses his moral freedom; in other words, as he moves in the order of creation, or in opposition to that order. But all this evinces only the absolute perfection of that system, a deviation from which by man's free will, results in misery. The gift of that freedom, whether improved or perverted, ir God's best gift: for,

Fifthly. The universe with all its furniture; its wide domains; its treasures of delight; its beauty and eternity; was made for man the only creature of rational intelligence, voluntary virtue, illimitable improvement, and inextinguishable joys!

Of every kingdom—animal, vegetable, and mineral—man is the delegated potentate, and sovereign master: The luminaries of nature beam in their spheres to light up the theatre of his action; and truth and virtue offer to conduct him through all the splendours of intellect, to all the luxuries of love.

Such is man; the favourite of his Maker, and the constituted heir of all his communicable goods. It is not enough merely to consider his race, moving for successive generations, upon all the continents and islands of the world which we inhabit; nor to spread its varieties over the still larger surface of Jupiter, Saturn, and Uranus, with all their habitable moons; nor to expand the vast idea over the limited section of creation that meets our sight. It is not enough to rest at the conception which the glass of the astronomer contributes to inspire. 'Tis infinity that calls for our astonishment, and eternity that absorbs our admiration!

And yet, we are told, that rational devotion demands no other information concerning the race of man, than that a single human being was formed by the hand of Deity and placed in the west of Asia, to populate the world, improve the universe, and people heaven!

Breathren, what think ye of man—the rational inhabitant of earth—the heir and the offspring of heaven?

We discover that all the kingdoms of nature are subsidiary to his happiness. The mineral supports the vegetable, the vegetable sustains the animal, and the resources of all are concentrated in man. He converts every thing to his purposes; and seems to be stationed in that part of the circle of existences, from which he can return every thing to its fountain in the form of ardent adoration and glowing gratitude!

"Thus God is paid, when man receives;
"To enjoy is to obey."

How dignified then, is he, as the priest of the Most High, while all surrounding nature brings to him her tribute of gold, and frankincense, and myrrh, that he may offer them upon his altar!

Such being the office and dignity of man, it is but reasonable to conclude, that as God created the earth with fruits and seasons; covering it with verdure, and filling its atmosphere, waters and forests, with animal existences; so also he created man, as a natural and necessary inhabitant of every continent and habitable island on the globe: that his natural constitution was perfectly adapted, as history has always found it, to all the varieties of food—diversities of climate—and modes of living: that his means of knowledge, and his motives to be good and happy, have been meeted out with strictest impartiality: and that sorrow and misfortune have attended him only as his heart departed from its duty.

I am well aware that many of those who hear me, may be strongly attached to the ecclesiastical tradition, that three sons of Noah, preserved with their father in the ark, populated the world: Japhet Europe; Shem, Asaia; and Ham, Africa. I know, also, that some are strongly bigoted to the doctrine, that Deity is partial in distributing his favors; giving light to some, and darkness to others, heaven to the few and hell to the multitude. Still, shall I prefer to "justify the ways of God to man," rather than speak for popularity; exhibiting the creator as a God of justice—never as an arbitrary tyrant.

There is indeed an endless variety of worldly conditions, and outward circumstances, in which Deity has placed his creatures. It is certainly a different state of being, to be born and educated in one of the polished capitals of Europe, with a fair complexion, a comely form, surrounded with the elegant arts of civilized society; and to be brought into existence in the south of Africa, a hideous Kaffir, black, stupid, and deformed—consigned to inevitable ignorance of all the arts, and sciences, and polished elegance, of the north.

There is certainly a striking contrast between the potentate of the old world, drest in the robes of majesty—glittering with stars and diomonds—slumbering in his stately palace; and the Indian chieftain of America—armed with his bow and tomahawk, and roaming in naked independence through the forest. But who can tell, if a change of condition were proposed, which of the two would most readily accept it?

The lordly tenant of St. James, or St. Cloud, received from the hand of Heaven the common lot—a mixture of joy and sorrow. Logan and Tecumseh received no less,—received no more! Which of them, hereafter, shall reap the purest joys, Deity alone can tell; for He alone can know which of them had exercised on earth the purest virtue, acting in best conformity to the laws of his creation.

Even in the same country, exposed to like advantages of fortune, the greatest diversity of condition will be found. Some are always healthy—others alwaks sick; some are learned—others ignorant: some rich, and others poor. The same individual, even, is successively sick and well—rich and poor, happy and afflicted.

But all this determines nothing concerning the equity of Providence. He who can do no wrong, has done all things well.

But it is not to justify the ways of God, that the literal interpreter of the scriptures would people the world by the sons of Noah. He does it to defend a creed, the truth of which I propose to examine.

The doctrine is, that all mankind originated in Asia, seperating in the plain of Shinar, at the confusion of Babel, 2208 years before the birth of Christ; and that all the present diversities of our race have been produced by natural causes.

In the first place, and in opposition to this doctrine, I shall alledge the fact, that no history of any portion of the earth however remote, has left us an account of any continent, peninsula, or island, capable of supporting human beings, which was not densely populated, at its first discovery by those nations who have left historical records.

In the second place, I alledge that other fact, of equal notoriety, that since the dawn of authentic history, no similar effects of natural causes, have been known to be produced.

The strength of the argument may, in some degree, depend on the comparative length of the two periods; that from the confusion of Babel, to the era of authentic history; and that from the earliest historians to the present day.

Herodotus, whose work is the oldest history extant, commenced his narrative with the birth of Cyrus the Great, B. C. 590, or 2419 years from the present time. From Cyrus to the confusion of tongues, was only 1618 years, a period less than the former by 801 years.

The argument, therefore, stands thus: In the lapse of 1618 years, the effect of climate was so considerable, as to create all the varieties of the human species; although no such effect has been produced, amid all the migrations and colonizations of 2419 years, during the age of history.

Garthage, on the north coast of Africa, was settled by a colony from Asia, 800 years before Christ. The natives of Africa, therefore, became black, with woolly locks, in a period of 1618 years; although the presnt race inhabiting the states of Barbary—from which the blacks were expelled by Asiatics and Europeans—remain unchanged for 2629 years; for we find them Asiatics and Europeans still—possessing none of the peculiarities of the African aborigines.

From the period of Herodotus, to the present day, the history of the world has been extended to all the remotest portions of the habitable globe.—The Romans, at the period of the Christian era, found the whole of Europe, all the West of Asia, and North of Africa, covered with inhabitants, and marked with the same distinctive characteristics as exist in our own time.

The East of Asia, embracing the vast empire of China, when first discovered by Europeans, was found to be more populous than the very region where the race of man is said to have originated—to be versed in many arts totally unknown to western natons; and whose great philosopher, Confucius, was born 550 years before Christ, and compiled a history, commencing 172 years previous to his own birth.

When the art of navigation, and the use of the magnetic needle, added a new continent to the old, that too was covered with inhabitants; and, what is still more strange, the smallest islands of the ocean, how far soever from the continents, are uniformly found with human occupants, in every instance, where the vegetable products are sufficient to sustain them.

All the animals, too—great as well as small, innocent as well as noxious, savage and domestic, excepting only aquatic animals—must have taken their departure with man from the region aboht Shinar; for they also survived the flood only by the instrumentality of the ark. The mighty mammoth, the Polar bear, the buffalo of Oregon, the lama of Peru, together with thousands of animals never known in the West of Asia, must either have swum the ocean, or leaped its straits, or have been conveyed by man without a compass—perhaps in a bark canoe—to every portion of the globe! Say not that they were produced by a miracle; for, if scripture be literally true, the animals of every species, were saved expressly to reproduce their like.

Calculate the period required for the sloth of South America, to make a journey from the centre of Assyria, to the source of Oronoko. Estimate the probability that a colony from Mount Lebanon would transfer the rattlesnake to the clefts of the Alleganies; count the years in which the strait hair of an Indian, would be converted into wool, by a torrid sun, or a fiery furnace, and you may then enter the field of contention for a natural and literal revelation.

Till, then the Book of God will retain its character, with every reasoning mind freed from the shackles of superstition—as the chart of the soul, a history of the path to heaven. In this capacity it deserves to be folded to the bosom of every living man—the light of his life—the anchor of his hope—the characer of his salvation. Through tears of joy, glittering on his eyelids, he should read it constantly—it will make him wise; he should live by its precepts—it will make him happy!

RATHER EXPRESSIVE.—That eccentric genius, Dow, Jr., in one of his discourses, in which he describes, the contrast between semblance and reality, hits off a ball scene:—"A woman," says he, "may not be an angel, though she glides through the mazes of the dance, like a spirit clothed with a rainbow and studded with stars. The young man may behold his admired object on the morrow in the true light of reality, emptying a wash-tub in the gutter, with frock pinned up behind—her cheeks pale for the want of paint—her hair mussed and mossy, except what lies in the bureau; and her whole contour wearing the appearance of an angel jammed through a brush fence into a world of wretchedness and woe!"

JUST THINK OF IT.—A correspondent of the "Carpet Bag" who is "good at figures," has made a calculation that if a women wears five pound of skirts more than is necessary for health and comfort, during sixty years, "it will be the same as carrying 2,191, 500 pounds, or 978 tons over the space of one mile. Now if this travel were confined to a circle of one mile, and the freight were deposited at each return and a new load received, the entire amount of freight removed during the sixty years would be 978 tons. If she were to travel a mile out and a mile back she would remove 489 tons from each to the other end of the route."

It is awful to think of a refined and delicate lady making herself such a "beast of burden" as the above would indicate.

THE SCIENCE of GOING TO BED.—The earth is a magnet, with magnetic currents constantly playing around it. The human body is also a magnet; and when the body is placed in relation to the earth, these bodies harmonize—when in any other, position should be chosen in which the magnetic currents of the earth and body will not conflict. This position as indicated by a theory and known by experiment is to lie with the head towards the North pole. Persons who sleep with their heads in the opposite direction, or lying crosswise, are liable to fall into various nervous disorders. When they go back to the right position, these disorders, if not too deeply impressed upon the constitution, soon vanish,—Sensitive persons are always more refreshed by sleep when their heads point due North. Architects in planning houses, should bear this principle in mind. Exchange.

The Boston Post tells a story of a man who said he had not slept for three nights—"last night, to-night and to-morrow night."

Mulloney says that people who don't believe in purgatory may go farther and fare worse.—Dutchman.

QUERY.—Would the devil beat his wife if he had one?"

ANS.—Guess not—for women generally beat the d——l.

"Molly," said a lady to her servant, "I think you'll never set the river on fire." "Indade, ma'am" Innocently replied Molly, "I'd never be after doing anything so wicked—I'd be burning up all the little fishes."

A lady in a menagerie being asked why she so closely scanned the elephant with her opera glass? replied that she was "looking for the keyhole to his trunk!"

The man who had to lower his shirt collar to pass under the Wheeling Bridge, arrived in Cincinnati last week. He was laboring under a slight attack of the collar-y morbus.

It is said of the Marquis of Townsend, that when a young man, and engaged in battle, he saw a drummer at his side killed by a cannon ball, which scattered his brains in every direction. His eyes were at once fixed on the ghastly object, and seemed wholly to engross his thoughts.

A superior officer, observing him, supposed he was intimidated by the sight, and addresed him in a manner to cheer his spirits.

'Oh,' said the young Marquis with calmness but severity, 'I am only puzzled to make out how any man with such a quantity of brains ever came to be here.'

WHAT are the most unsociable things in the world? Mile stones! you never see two of them together.

☞ SEVERE THUNDER AND LIGHTNING—CHURCH STRUCK.—This place and vicinity was visited on Saturday last with several showers, accompanied by the most severe thunder and lightning that we ever reccollect to have witnessed. During the shower in the morning, about 4 o'clock, the lightning struck a tree standing by the house of Mr. Joel Dunn, at the lower end of Main-st, occupied by Mrs——— Runyon, and after descending part way to the ground a portion of the fluid followed a limb which hung down to within a few feet of the eve and corner of the house which it struck, bursting off two or three weather-boards and thence followed the tin leader to within abont three feet of the foundation where it again threw off one or two weather-boards and shattered the foundation to the bottom of the cellar, while another portion followed the upper beam, which it shattered, across the gable end and there descended by the tin leader at the other corner of the house, where it also bursted off one or two boards. Although the family, consisting of several persons, some of whom were up, were in that part of the house, none of them were injured nor did not know that the house had been struck until informed of it by Mr. Dunn, who was within about fifty yards of the trae at the time it was struck.

On the arrival of the afternoon train from the White House, the same day, we were informed by Mr. John Ayers, of this place, who was on the spot immediately afterwards, that the Presbyterian Church at Boundbrook was struck by lightning about half past 1 o'clock that afternoon. The lightning struck the steeple which it nearly demolished, thence descending into the vestibule by the middle wall, shattering it and throwing of the plastering in numerous places passing into the body of the church nearly destroyed the pulpit and chandeliers and damaging other fixtures of the church.

Another severe shower arose in the evening attended with the most vivid and incessent lightning and the most startling and terrific thunder we ever reccolect to have heard. The lightning struck a ladder standing against a tree by the house of Mr. William Ayers, in Second-st in this village, and after descending part way to the ground struck the house, stuning the inmates and prostrating the daughter of Mr. Ayers to the floor, heating the hair pins in her hair so hot as to burn the head; the injury sustained was not serious, all having recovered in a short time; the damage to the house was but trifling. It also struck a post of the garden fence in the rear of the house of Mr. H. A. H Martin, at the lower end of Second-st. in this vilage, completely shattering it to piecees while it left a tree ten or twelve high within a foot of the post untouched.

The house of Mr. Andrew Cadmus, just out of the village, was also struck, tearing off the weather-boards, shivering the rafters and starting the whole gable end outwards, which is now chained in for fear of its falling; the family were uninjured, being stunned only for a few moments.

☞ "COPWAY'S AMERICAN INDIAN."—We have received the first number of a paper bearing the above title, owned and edited by Mr. George Copway, the educated American Indian. It is a large and handsome sheet, neatly printed on superior quality paper, and filled with interesting miscellaneous matter pertaining to the History, Manners and Customs of the Aborigines of America. This, according to its prospectus, will be its leading feature; its editor will be assisted in his labors by the first literary talent of the country, among whom, and some of whose articles grace its columns, we find the names of J. S. Adams; W. L. Bryant; J. R. Chandler; J. Fennimore Cooper; Washington Irving; Major Richardson; H. R. Schoolcraft.—Those who heard Mr. Copway (Kah-ge-gaw-bowh) deliver his lecture, some time since at Laing's Hall, in this Village, on the Manners and Customs of the Indians, or who are otherwise acquainted with him, will need no assurance from us that he is every way qualified to make his paper well worthy the support of the American Public. It is published at 82 Nassau st. N Y. at $3. per annum in advance. For the convenience of the public we will cheerfully act as agent in forwarding subscriptions.

☞ The corner stone of the 2d Universalist Church on Halsey-street, opposite the foot of Cedar-street, Newark, will be laid with appropriate exercises on Thursday of this week at 6 o'clock P. M. Rev. E. H. CHAPIN, of New York, will deliver an address.

RAILROAD ACCIDENTS.—On Sunday afternoon the Philadelphia train from this City ran over and killed a cow just this side of Passaic Bridge. While the train was passing the Centre-st. Depot in Newark, a horse attached to a light wagon became frightened and turning suddenly around, threw the drived out of the wagon, and jumped between two of the cars, the hindmost of which knocked it down killing it almost instantly. The driver was not seriously injured.

A German, named William Freitz, was found dead yesterday morning about 5 o'clock, nearly a mile below Elizabethtown, on the side of the Railroad. It is supposed he was struck either by the Philadelphia train of Sunday evening, or by the gravel train which passed about 3 A. M. yesterday. He was dreadfully crushed about the head and shoulders, and must have died instantly. He was about 40 years of age and leaves a wife and five children. The body was brought to Elizabethtown, and an inquest held upon it before A. M. Elmer, Esq. from which it appeared that he was out gunning on Sunday, and was intoxicated.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—A sad accident occurred near Mansfield Square, in this county, on Wednesday last. Mr. Noah Brown, a respectable farmer, was engaged in drawing hay, and running into a bees nest aroused them, and they lit upon his horses and commenced stinging them—he attempted to hold them by the head, and in their efforts to get loose they knocked him down and ran off. The horses and wagon both passed over him, killing him instantly.—Bordentown Register

Boonton,

Iron Company—Identity of Interest of Employed and Employers—Land Reform Meeting—the most Christian use of Sunday—The Bloomer Costume, &c.

Extract from a letter of a correspondent dated Dated Boonton July 12. 1851.

This is a pleasant and very romantic little village embosomed amid the green hills of old Morris—numbering somewhere between one and two thousand inhabitants; a school district is incorporated by special act, and numbers 260 children between the ages of five and sixteen—assesses a tax this year for building a school house of $2,000—contains 3 churches with medium congregations as to numbers and also a number of religious nonconformists. The "Sons of Temperance," and "Native American Mechanics" have each an organization.

This being the location of the "New Jesrey Iron Company," is a place of considerable business activity—manufacturing Bar, Hoop, Bloom and Pig Iron and Nails. Its water power is extensive—the machinery the most improved; the managers are honorable and enterprising, the workmen energetic, willing and intelligent. The whole aspect of things indicates a progressive and independent public sentiment, comporting with the spirit of the age;—in proof thereof I may mention among other evidences, that then was a Land Reform meeting, participated in by workmen and bosses—endeavoring to solve the problem of social inequality.

On Sunday there was a large meeting in the Public Square, under the trees. It was respectable and orderly as a whole, with the exception of an unmannerly exhibition of mirth and jest, by some rude lads and silly girls, who were more to be pitied and forgiven than blamed and punished. The subjects presented to this meeting were the most Christian use to be made of Sunday—the social wrongs—ignorance—poverty and misery that beset humanity—and the means of relieving, obviating, and preventing them. The meetings are free for any one to give their views, and are held every Sunday.

A number of the most intelligent and respectable women of the place have adopted the "Bloomer Costume;" it is favored and encouraged by the general intelligence and morality of the community—one of the leading and wealthiest ladies of the village having fully identified herself with the reformers—and in the exercise of a benevolence for which she is noted, has selected some of the most necessitous and destitute, colored girls, and clad them in the improved style of dress; setting a commendable example of independence of the tyrant Custom—a freedom from prejudice characteristic of a nobleness of soul—a practical manifestation of love for the advancing interest of humanity worthy of imitation.

☞ DISTINGUISHED ARRIVAL.—We learn from the Salt River Journal that the literary lion, Sontag, is reposing from the toils of composition amid the quiet beauties of that level and charming retreat. The Journal "is authorized to say" that hopes are entertained that his exhausted energies will be so far recruited as to enable him to resume the labors of the pen early in the coming Spring—until which time he is compelled to crave the indulgence of the ladies.

Further particulars. Sontag is suffering severely, at present, from an attack by a mosquito, but is considered entirely out of danger.

ARRIVAL OF THE CRESCENT CITY.—The U. S. Mail Steamer Crescent City arrived at New York on Sunday, from Chagres and Jamaica. Besides the California Mails, and those from Kingston, she brings a large number of passengers and more than a million dollars in gold.

From Jamaica the accounts of ravages by cholera are terrific. The disease attacks all classes and colors with unusual violence.

☞ THE CROPS IN SUSSEX CO.—According to the Sussex Herald the agricultural prospects of that county are uncommonly promisng this year, and the present crop of wheat alone, is estimated at 400,000 bushels. Add to this their oat, corn, and potato crop, their beef, pork, and great staple, butter, to say nothing of the under-ground wealth in zinc and iron ore, and we have a picture of agricultural prosperity perhaps unequalled by any similar extent of country in the United States.

"CHOLERA AT PRINCETON.—This disease has reappeared at this ill-fated place, after a short cessation, and caused 13 deats in a few days."

We cut the above from an exchange paper. We see it has been going the rounds and has been published in almost every paper of note in this section. Persons at a distance would naturally conclude that it referred to Princeton in this state. And those having friends there would feel anxious on their account. We presume it refers to Princeton, Kentucky. With regard to Princet on, New Jersey, we know of no more healthy and delightful village in the state, if we except Bordentown, Not a vestige of the cholera has yet visited Princeton or any other town in New Jersey this season. Papers copying the above, in justice to the literay institutions of that place, ought to add the state to the paragraph so there will be no mistake.—Bordentown Register.

PORTLAND, Friday, July 18.

This morning about 200 feet of the Atlantic and St. Lawrence company's railroad wharf gave way, carrying with it 1200 tons of railroad iron, and three cars loaded with pressed hay. Four hundred tons of the iron belonged to Wood, Black & Co. and the balance to Andros Cloggin and the Kennebec railroad company. The property sunk in eight or ten feet of water at low tide.

THE NEW BELL-TOWER—An iron bell-tower, to be 100 feet high, is now being erected in 32d-st. near the North River. The bell for this tower will weigh 20,000 pounds, being about double the weight of any other bell now in use in the State. The foundation is laid 14 feet below the surface of the ground, and is supported and braced with iron shafts sunk in solid rock. The tower will command a view of tne whole city and island, and a watch will be in the observatory for fires, under the direction of the Fire Department.

A friend says the following is good grammer.—"That that 'that' that that man uttered was not that 'that' that that other gentleman referred to." Hartford News.

"Mrs. Dobson, where's your husband?" "He's dying, marm, and I don't wish anybody to disturb him." Considerate woman, that.

WON'T DO—'John,' said a cockney solicitor to his son, 'I see you will never do for an attorney; you hove no HENER-gy.' 'Skuse me, father,' replied John, 'what I want is some of your CHICKEN-ry.'

☞ Three individuals were fined $10 each in Paterson, on Mondy, for selling alcoholic drinks without license.

Later from Europe.

Arrival of the Pacific.

The Collions Steamer Pacific arrived at New York on Monday evening at 9 o'clock. She sailed from Liverpool on the 9th at 5 1-4 P. M., and made the passage in 12 days 3 3-4 hours. This delay was caused by an accident.

The arrival of the Pacific last night put an end to a feeling of anxiety we had began to entertain in regard to her. We are so accustomed to see her regularly perform her trips in ten days or less, that when she is out two days longer one must suppose that some accident has happened. Such was the fact in the present instance. On the 17th, when she was eight days out, she broke a part of one of her engines, which rendered it necessary to stop and disconnect the two, causing a delay of three hours. The rest of the passage was done with a single engine. The damage will, we presume, be repaired in ample time for this noble ship to sail on her regular day.

—The news is of no special importance. The letter of KOSSUTH to the American representative at Constantinople, will be read with great interest, though we trust the melanchoy tone which prevades it has, ere this, given place to the satisfaction attending the release of the illustrious writer on board the American steamer dispatched to bring him to this conutry. We hope that the next mail may bring us positive intelligence that he is free.—N. Y. Tribune.

QUAKERS FOR LIBERIA.—The Boston Journal of Friday says: There was quite a gathering at the depot in New-Bedford this morning, to witness the departure of Eli and Sybel Jones to Liberia. They go out in the capacity of Elders or Preachers, and they intend to pass some time in Liberia. They go out in the capacity of Elders or Preachers, and they intend to pass some time in Liberia, and also in visiting other places on the coast of Africa. They are said to be the first American Quakers who have ever visited Africa for the purpose of preaching peace, love and good will. They go out under the direction and support of the Society called 'Friends.' They have letters of introduction to President Roberts from Hon. Henry Clay, Bishop Waugh, and other distinguished friends of the cause, and are expected to sail from Baltimore in the Liberia packet on Sunday next.

☞ THE NEW-YORK ACADEMY OF EDUCATION held its last meeting on the evening of the 9th inst., in the chapel of the New-York University, the President, Joel Blackner in the chair. Mr. Orson Kellog delivered a very scientific lecture on "Geology considered in connection with the Mosaic account of the Creation." After alluding to the fact that every great discovery in Science has been suspected of hostility to revelations, and naming by way of illustration, the cases of Galileo, Bacon, Locke and others, the lecturer remarked that the recent discoveries in Geology have also had their prejudices to encounter. He said that, while some other scources of alarm from the developments of Geology existed in the apprehensions of certain minds, the high antiquity of the earth was the predominant one; the Scripture being understood to represent the earth to have been created from nothing in six literal days, and within the recent period of six thousand years, while the investigations of Geology affords incontestible proof of its having been many thousands of ages, if not millions of years in the progress of formation.

NO MARRYING ALLOWED IN IOWA FOR THIRTY DAYS.—We are informed that under the new code which went into effect on the 1st inst., marriage licenses can be issued only by the County Judge—and that during the time which must elapse from the taking effect of the law and the electing of a Judge—a month off yet—no provision whatever has been made, authorizing the Clerk of the District Court, as heretofore, to make out the necessary "documents." This is a joke "as is a joke," and one which will probably be felt as a pretty serious one in some quarters, If, however, parties cannot wait, and prefer to have the law on their side, they have the opportunity of crossing over into the State of Missouri, Illinois or Wisconsin, against which privilege, we believe, the new code, in the haste of preparation, neglected to provide.—Burlington Telegraph.

REPORTS FROM CUBA.—The letters of our Havana correspondent, published this morning, bring intelligence of a revolutionary movement at Puerto Principe. The report is that there has been a conflict between some five or six hundred of the people of that place and the Government troops, in which the latter were defeated. We are not inclined, from the tone of our correspondent's letters, to attach a great deal of importance to this report, or to regard the affair as at the worst anything more than a local outbreak, which the Government will have little difficulty in suppressing. There is, however, a feverish state of affairs in Cuba, and we shall wait with no little interest for further advices.—Tribune.

A HORSE FRIGHTENED TO DEATH BY AN ELEPHANT.—A very remarkable case of the effects of fright upon a horse belonging to Mr. Palmer was grazing in the yard near the fence, when the elephants belonging to the menagerie recently in this city, were passing along. The horse did not observe them till they were quite close to him, when, looking up and seeing the huge animals, he started back in a fright, ran to the opposite side of the yard, stood for a moment quivering, and then dropped dead. He was literally frightened to death.—Norwich (Conn.) Aurora, Jnly 18.

FEMALE LECTURER.—The Reading (Pa) Journal speaks quite favorably of Mrs. Buckley, a female lecturer who recently visited that place. She appeared in the new costume, and was greeted by a large and intelligent audience, who were so well pleased with her as to desire its repition.

A PUZZLE—The Trousers Question.—A correspondent of the Brattleboro' Eagle tells us that he has an English edition of the Bible—published many years before King James' edition—in which it is stated of Adam and Eve that "they sewed fig-leaves together and made themselves "breeches," instead of aprons, as in later translations. Now as we are told, afterward, that God made them "coats of skin," we have the original pair in coats and breeches.—Query—Was the man in woman's clothes, or the woman in man's clothes?

'CAPTAIN,' said a ragged country urchin to a city dandy with an immense shirt collar, 'captain, are you going to haul manure to-day?'

'No, you ragged rascal, what makes you ask that question?'

"Why. kase you have got such thunderin' big side boards up.'

AN ACT IN ADDITION TO AN ACT.—To knock a man down and then kick him for lalling.

From the portland (Me.) Pleasure Boat.

"Souls, not Stations.

Who shall judge a man from manner?
Who shall know him by his dress!
Paupers may be fit for princes,—
Princes fit for something less.
Crumpled shirt and dirty jacket
May beclothe the golden ore
Of the deepest thoughts and feelings—
Satin vests could do no more.
There are springs of crystal nectar
Ever welling out of stone;
There are purple buds and golden,
Hidden crushed and overgrown.
God, who counts by souls not dresses,
Loves and prosper you and me,
While he values thrones the highest
But as pebbles in the sea.

Man, upraised above his fellows,
Oft forgets his fellows then;
Masters—rulers—lords—remember
That your meanest kinds are men!
Men by labor, men by feeling,
Men by thought and men by fame,
Claiming equal rights to sunshine
In a man's ennobling name.
There are foam-embroidered oceans,
There are little weed-clad rills,
There are feeble inch-high saplings,
There are cedars on the hills,
But God, who counts not souls by stations,
Loves and prospers you and me,
For to him all vain distinctions
Are as pebbles in the sea.

Toiling hands alone are builders
Of a nation's wealth and fame,
Titled laziness is pensioned,
Fed and fatted by the same;
By the sweat of others forheads,
Living only to rejoice,
While the poor man's outraged freedom
Vainly lifteth up its voice.
But truth and justice are eternal,
Born with loveliness and light,
And sunsets wrongs shall never prosper,
While there is a sunny right;
And God whose world-heard voice is singing
Boundles love to you and me,
Will sink oppression, with its titles,
As the pebbles in the sea."

☞ Young ladies who are accustomed to read newspapers are always observed to possess winning ways, most amiable dispositions, invariably make good wives, and always slect good husbands—a fact.

"FIRST-RATE NOTICE" OF PEACHES.—We have noticed some favorable medical recommendations of this soon-expected fruit, and we may add that planters in Louisiana find the use of good fruit so beneficial to the bodily condition of their negroes that they flog their ebony chattels to make them eat freely of ripe peaches, nutmeg melons, grapes, strawberries. and other delicacies of the vegetable world. At least, so says the New-Orleans Courier General Felix Houston, says that paper, has tried the peach experiment most extensively and sucessfully, on his plantation on the Mississippi. The Courier says:

"The statistics of Gen. Houston's plantation verify this remark. Before he bought it, great mortality prevailed there. One of its former owners lost fifty negroes. He whipped his negroes whenever they were caught eating a peach, a melon or an apple. Gen. Houston has one hundred slaves on his place. He plants thirty acres in melons. His negroes live in the peach orchard. He whips them unlsss they eat the best and choicest—and this they take care to do! There have been but three deaths on the place—and those were old, obstinate negroes, who wouldn't eat peaches.

EXCHANGE OF BABIES.—The Alleghany (Pa.) Enterprise tells of a singular occurrence which took place a day or two since, at the house of Mr. Collins on the Franklin Road, about 14 miles out. A young girl of genteel appearance entered the house with an infant in her arms, and asked for a drink, upon which Mrs. C. started to the spring for fresh water, leaving an infant of her own in the cradle. On her return the stranger had very mysteriously departed, and in about an hour afterwards discovered, to her horror and surprise, that her own child had been token from the cradle, and a colored one left in its place. Nothing has been heard of them since.

MODELS.—Among the models afloat here is the "Model Husband," who is made so, as will be perceived, by his "Model Wife:"

"Mrs. Smith has company to dinner, and there are not strawberries enough; she looks at Mr. Smith with a sweet smile, and offers to help him, (at the same time kicking his shin with the heel of her shoe under the table,) he always replies, No, I thank you, dear, they don't agree with me.'"

The total value of the real and personal estate in the city of St. Louis, as fixed by the Assessors, for the year 1851, is $34,433,529,21.

TRIFLE NOT WITH THE SPOILER!

CONSUMPTION, like the rattle-snake, always gives warning of its approach. The dry and frequent Cough, the sense of oppression at the chest, the short quick breathing of the patient, are certain indications that serious mischief is going on in the Organs of respiration. At this stage of the disease, Dr Rogers Syrup of Liverwort Tar and Canchalagua will not only be a certain but a rapid cure. The three vegetable ingredients of which it is composed form, in their compound state, a medicine which is at once anti-febrile tonic, and healing in its properties. If the pulse is excited, it soothes it; if the strength is declining, it restores it; and if the Lungs are inflamed, and ulceration is threatened, it heals and invigorates them. Such is the philosophy of its operation, and thousands rescued from the verge of the grave can testify to its practical effect. For full details, see pamphlet and advertisement in another place.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS, or Medicated Compound.

Not a family in the land should be without a supply of this inestimable preparation which is no less valuable as an immediate and unfailing remedy for diseases of the skin, the muscles and the glands, and all external injuries, than as a means of eradicating scurf and dandruff, renewing the hair and preventing its loss, and imparting to the fibrous mass a rich luxuriance and a brilliant lustre

Throughout the length and breadth of the United States the Tricopherous has received the sanction and approval of the Faculty, and Professor BARRY now holds, and is prepared to exhibit to all who desire to see them, original testimonials from eminent medical men of the most conclusive character. The instantaneous effect of this great counter-irritant in reducing external inflammation, however fiery and by whatever cause produced, is striking and extraordinary. The superficial absorbents which acting like so many syphons, take up whatever is applied to the surface, whether it be balm or poison, convey this gentle, stimulating, yet anti-inflammatory fluid into the external circulation supplying thereto a healthful tone, and enabling the vessels of the skin to throw off by evaporation through the pores the materies morbi or elements of fever. By this process the irritating principle which occasions pimples rashes, blotches, crysipelas, hettle rash, prickly heat, scald head and which is equally active in cuts, bruises, burns scalds and the bites and stings of insects, is rapidly expelled, the pain and itching are alleviated; the redness fades; and a complete cure is invariably accomplished. The same stimulating property which restores health, vigor and vegetative power to the scalp, and through the scalp to the hair, enables the skin upon any part of the body to relieve itself from disease. The whole action of the Tricopherous is in harmony with the well understood principle that nothing but healthful external stimulus will determine the fluids to the surface and enable the exhausted and torpid vessels which have been conquered by inflammation, to conquer in their turn, and put the fiery intruder to flight.

The cheapness of the Tricopherous places it within reach of the poorest—its varied uses and acknowledged efficacy render it indispensable to all.

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York; and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States Canada, Mexico, West Indies Great Britain, France, &c.,

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels; such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

WHEN IT OCCURS.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt.

The bowel having protruded as a rupture, or burst and known by the external LUMP OR TUMOR, should be cartfully and thoroughly returned into the abdomen and retained there by means of a suitable instrument, as a TRUSS BANDAGE, or SUPPORTER. The application of such mechanical aid in the relief and final cure of hernia, is a matter requiring much special study, skill and experience not only in the mechanism of the body, but also in that of instruments as relating to their application; for apart from the different methods of producing pressures, the disease calls for exact adaptation in the TRUSS PAD or pledget used for the purpose of retaining a hernia.

SUCH IS TRUTH.

The above truths are now being appreciated by the public having been brought particularly to their notice through the recent improvements made by Frederick M. Butler in Supporter and Hernial pads and introduced by the Hull's Truss Office, in their treatment for the relief and radical cure of Hernia. Over two year experience has now been had in the application of BUTLER'S recently patented Truss Pads—proving through numerous cases, that from their peculiar form and bearing they lie over and upon the inguinal canal, dislodge the bowels thoroughly, contract the rings or natural openings, thicken the muscular walls, and thereby effect a cure.

The office is provided with experienced male and female attendants, who apply instruments direct to the person of patients, and the public may rely upon that care being made in the application which will most likely tend to the relief and cure of the several complaints coming under their treatment, whether it be Hernia, Prolapsus Uteri, Prolapsus Ani, Piles, or other similar weakness, requiring the mechanical support of a Truss, Supporter, Belt, Braces or Bandage. HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE,

4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St Paul's Church, New-York.

FREDERICK M. BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The male and female departments are separate and distinct. Children trussed when only two years old and invariably cured. [145is.

JOHN PRICE,

OPTICAN, AND MANUFACTURER OF

GOLD AND SILVER SPECTACLES.

WOULD respectfully inform the citizens of Plainfield and the public generally that he has removed his Store to 345 Broad-st.

oppositethe City hotel, Newark,

And that he has on hand an extensive assortment of GOLD, SILVER AND STEEL SPECTACLES, Of every description. Gold, Silver, Steel and Tortoise Shell reading Glasses, also Hand, Quizzing, Opera and magnifying Glasses, in great variety: Telescopes, Perceptives, Goggles, Eye preservers; a first rate assortment of PEBBLES' Double Concave Glasses, Cataract Glassess, &c. Particular attention is called to

PRICE'S PREMIUM PRISCOPIC SPECTACLES.

Being made of the finest materials, which through their high polish and true ground, produce the purest vision and are recommended by competent judges as being decidedly the best and most natural in their effect of all others, for preserving and improving the sight in continued reading, writing, sewing, &c. Persons with weak eyes can be fitted with Glasses which will greatly benefit and not strain the sight. Short-sighted persons and such as have been operated upon for Cataract, can also be suited.

J. P. would be happy to see at his store all persons that have found difficulty in getting Glasses that were adapted to their sight, as the most difficult cases are easily fitted upon a fair trial. Any person purchasing Spectacles at his Store, can exchange them if not well suited, any time within three months, without extra charge The subscriber has also on hand a large assortment of Silver Spoons, Prince Albert, Threaded and plain patterns, Butter Knives, Sugar Spoons, Mustard Spoons, Salt Spoons, Cream spoons, &c. Also heavy Silver Thimbles, Gold Pens, Paper Weights, Silver-plated, plain and threaded, Table Preserve, Tea and Salt Spoons, Plated Forks, &c. [179.

BABY JUMPER

AND

WALKER COMBINED.

The subscriber having invented and made application for a patent for the above article would hereby call the attention of the public to its superiority over all others.

It forms a neat article of furniture, somewhat resembling an ottoman; it being upon castors, the little occupant can move it in all directions around the room with the utmost ease. The top opens by a spring and then closes around under the child's arms and locks. The child sits in an upright position upon a saddle or seat, stuffed perfectly soft, bearing no weight on his arms, with its feet resting upon the floor. The child can easily raise the article, and as there is a spring in each leg it can use it as a jumper for its amusement, or push itself around the room, thus learning to walk without other asistance. As the springs buoys the child up, thereby preventing too much weight upon its feet, it gradually learns to use its legs and soon learns to walk. The child can in no manner receive injury; a trial or inspection will satisfy the most skeptical of its superior utility.

Prices from $5 to $10 each, according to style of trimmings &c. Orders punctually attended to by

E. RICE, Cor. Broad and Mechanic-sts, near the Depot, ELIZABETHTOWN. N. J.

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

Among the numerous discoveries Science has made in this generation to facilitate the business of life—increase its enjoyment, and even prolong the term of human existence, none can be named of more real value to mankind, than this contribution of Chemistry to the Healing Art. A vast trial of its virtues throughout this broad country, has proven beyond a doubt, that no medicine or combination of medicine yet known, can so surely control and cure the numerous varieties of pulmonary disease which have hitherto swept from our midst thousands and thousands every year. Indeed, there is now abundant reason to believe a Remedy has at length been found which can be relied on to cure the most dangerous affections of the lungs. Our space here will not permit us to publish any proportion of the cures affected by its use, but we would present the following opinions of eminent men, and refer further enquiry to the circular which the Agent below named, will always be pleased to furnish free wherein are full particlars, and indisputable proof of these facts.

From the President of Amherst College, the celebrated PROFESSOR HITCHCOCK.

"James C. Ayer—Sir: I have used your CHERRY PECTORAL in my own case of deep-seated Bronchitis, and am satisfied from its chemical constitution, that it is an admirable compound for the relief of laryngial and bronchial difficulties. If my opinion as to its superior character can be of any service, you are at liberty to use it as you think proper.

EDWARD HITCHCOCK, L. L. D.,
From the widely celebrated

PROFESSOR SILLIMAN, M. D., L. L. D., Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, &c., Yale College, Member of the Lit, Hist. Med. Phil. and Scientific Societies of America and Europe.

"I deem the CHERRY PECTORAL an admirable composition from some of the best articles in the Materia Medica, and a very effective remedy for the class of diseases it is intended to cure."

New Haven, Ct., Nov. 1 1849.

MAJOR PATTISON, President of the S. C. Senate, states he has used the CHERRY PECTORAL with wonderful success, to and inflammation of the lungs.

From one of the first Physicans in Maine.

SACO, Me., April 26, 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell. Dear Sir: I am now constantly using your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, and prefer it to any other medicine for pulmonary complaints. From observation of many severe cases, I am convinced it will cure coughs, colds, and diseases of the lungs, that have put to defianice all other remedies.

I invariably reccommend its use in cases of consumption, and consider it much the best remedy known for that disease.

Respectfully yours, I. S. CUSHMAN, M. D.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impetency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cerd al cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap dangs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without offspring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co., of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper.

WONDERFUL CURES!

AND

CANCHALAGUA;

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to

CONSUMPTION.

NOTHING LIKE IT.

CURE FOLLOWS CURE!

READ THE EVIDENCE!!

The above invaluable Medicine has now been before the public sufficiently long to have its virtues thoroughly tested. It has been used by all classes of the community, under every possible variety of circumstances, and has everywhere proved itself a most powerful and efficient Cough Medicine. Lung Diseases of all kinds, yield to its influence, as mists pass away upon the rising of the Sun. This is no fiction. We give you below, letters from persons who are now living in the state of New York, and who declare, over their own signatures, all that we could possibly desire to say in its favor. Those who can read their statements and yet remain incredulous, must be beyond the reach of human testimony.

A LOVELY YOUNG LADY

CURED OF CONSUMPTION!

☞ The following is from the pen of WM. H. LEVISON, Esq., the distinguished Editor of the U. S. Military and Naval Argus under date New York, Jan. 26, 1850. What could be more conclusive?

"It is seldom we permit ourselves to occupy a space in these columns to speak in praise of any article in the patent medicine way; but when we see the life of a fellow-creature saved by the use of any medicine whatever, we consider it as our right, if not a duty, to give a simple statement of facts, that others may, in like manner be benefitted. The case which has induced us to pen this article, was that of a young lady of our acquaintance, who, by frequent exposure to the night air, contracted a cold, which settled on the Lungs before its ravages could be stayed. (This occurred two years ago this winter.) Various remedies were used, but with very little effect or benefit. The cough grew worse, with copious expectoration, and the sunken eye, and pale, hollow cheek, told plainly that PULMONARY DISEASE was doing its worst on her delicate frame. The family physician was consulted and although he would not admit to the young lady that she really had the CONSUMPTION, yet he would give no encouragement as to a cure. At this crisis, her mother was persuaded to make use of a bottle of Dr. Rogers' Compound Syrup of LIVEWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA and we are happy to state, she was perfectly cured in less than three months by this medicine alone, after even hope was destroyed. It is useless to comment on such a case as this, for the truth will reach where polished fiction never can. If any doubt the authenticity of this statement, let them call at this office.—U. S. Military and Naval Argus Office, No 79 Chatam N. Y.

COUGH AND DISEASE

OF 14 MONTHS STANDING.

CURED.

AFTER BEING GIVEN UP TWICE

BY EMINENT PHYSICIANS!

Albany, June 9th, 1849.

Messrs. A. L. Scovill & Co.—I herewith forward to you a Certificate of a Cure, effected by your Compound Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua The Cough and expectoration was of fourteen months standing, and had baffled the skill of several of our eminent physicians in New York, Albany, and Cooperstown. I am the person in whom the cure was effected, and as I had previously no faith in patent medicines, I have since tried it on others, and have become satisfied of its value. Mine was as GREAT A CURE as ever was performed, as I had, during any sickness, been given up twice by my physicians. I have now commenced my business, after taking, I think about eight bottles.

Yours, repectfully, THOS. C. FAULDER.

BLEEDING AT THE LUNGS CURED.

☞ SEE HOW PROMPTLY IT ACTS!

Statement of Mr. A. Lang, Baker, No 388 Pearl street, N. Y. A few days before last Christmas, I was taken unwell, and soon commenced bleeding freely at the Lungs. I called in a Homœopathic Physician, but his medicine did not seem to help me. I read your advertisement, and thought I would try Dr. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA. Before I had takea up the third bottle, by bleeding had stopped, my Cough was gone, and I felt well as usual. My health is now good. I consider it a most excellent medicine, and cordially reccommend it to my friends. [This statement was made to the Proprietors, March 12th 1850.]

☞ This whole paper might be filled with letters, similar to the above, from those who have been cured.

PRAYER.

Pray without ceasing.—[PAUL.

WHEN the ruddy morn is breaking
And the birds their nests forsaking,
Sounds of gladness are awaking,
Filling all the morning air;
In the general praise partaking
Lift thy voice to GOD in prayer.

When the noonday sun is glowing,
Withering flowrets in their growing,
Shrinking streamlets in their flowing,
And his rays are every where;
With soul enkindled, case unknowing,
Send on high thy fervent prayer.

When the ling'ring day is dying,
And the birds are homeward flying,
When the evening breeze is sighing
O'er a world of sin and care;
With a heart unwearied, rest denying,
Waft to heaven thy lowly prayer.

When the night her tears is weeping,
And the stars their watch are keeping,
And the moon the earth is steeping
With her silver sheen so fair;
Humbly kneeling, ere thy sleeping,
Pour out thy heart in thankful prayer.

Thus as down time's stream thou'rt drifting,
And the scenes of life are shifting,
Let thine eyes be constant lifting
To the goal bright gleaming there;
While from sin thy heart thou,rt sifting,
Never cease thy strain of prayer.

THE WRECK.

'BY HARRY.'

The Keys of Florida presents to the mariner of the Straits, even in the most geniel weather, a formidable appearance; but when the white winged tropic tornado flaps its pinion over the narrow channel, and on the walls of vapory blackness paints the sailors doom in vivid and bewildering letters of electral fantasy, and the harsh voice of the giant gale wakes the fiends of the storm to ride upon the wave-tops, with their attendant, meagre Death, or sit, malicious, and grinning upon the bowsprit, as if to welcome the sailor to his lasting sleep beneath the wave; there they are terrific.

Could the Perils of the coral groves commune with man, they could relate wild tales of moulder-ing foams entwined by sea weed set with the rarest brilliants of the mermaid's home; of the last agonizing shreiks of doomed mortals, as a dark and mighty mass shot like a meteor from the regions of air, and plunging half buried in the sands of the the deep sea, there, eternally wave-washed: to be the abode of fancy millions.

Midnight, dark and drear, cradled its sombre form upon the waters of the eastern Mexican Gulf. The night-born storm hissed by in fearful gusts, driving before it waves of descending rain and sleet, and dashing the briney hillocks, capped with foam, far along the sand, but to recoil again, and gathering might, leap forward with a fiercer violence upon the trembling shore.

On such a night the light house at Key West trembled from the foundation to the lantern, while those within, a father and his son listened to the storm as it howled around their resting place. The elder sat moody and silent, occasionally raising his head and gazing out from beneath his dark and shaggy eyebrows upon the younger, or started suddenly as some gust wilder and fiercer than the preceding one wailed around the beacon. The other, a noble looking youth of twenty years, sun-browned and hardy, sat at the opposite side of the little room, gazing through a narrow window upon the scene so replete with wild and capricious beauty without. Thus sat father and son, each apparently communing with memory and their own thoughts, or mayhap turning slowly, and with the mind's eye perusing the mystic pages of the future, only awakened from their occupation by some new voice or beauty of the gale. Without, a life boat swung from a pile driven fathom deep in the sand:

Thus sat father and son, when on a sudden a distant and storm-broken report, the deep toned boom of the 'Minute gun at Sea,' fell on their ears. As its first sound came thro' the night, they sprang to their feet. Its import they knew to well:

'It is a dreadful night,' said the father, 'to be among the Keys, and on a lee shore.'

God aid the mariner, responded the young man, but they cannot be in iminent danger thus distant.'

'There is but a narrow chance of safety among these waters in such a gale as this,' was the reply.

They listened a moment intently—the oft repeated reports were heard, and, seemingly, the vessel approached them with frightful rapidity. They sprang to the door, descended the flight of stone steps, and stood upon the sand beach. Anon, by the gleam of the zig-zag lightning, they saw a large ship standing down toward the light, as if all unconscious of the hazard thus run.

'My God!' ejaculated the young man 'the Isaacs are not fifty fathoms from her bows. and she is bearing directly upon them; in five minutes that ship will strike, and every soul must perish, for no aid can reach them from the land; from Heaven alone their help must come.'

'God aid the mariner,' he again exclaimed, as the noble ship, by a flash of heaven's intensest fire, was seen to leap high upon the rocks.

First came through the storm the crash; and then a wild unearthy shrieks, as the drowning wretches saw Death yawning to swallow them in the depths of the Ocean.

The sole spectators of this awful scene closed their ears with their hands, and heart sick sprang to their boat.

'None but the boat of Anson, the Wrecker, can live in a sea like this,' said the old man, 'and he must do his best.'

They cast off the fastning, and the wreckers of the Isaacs were soon battling the boiling surface toward the shattered ship. Well had he said that Anson's boat could only live, for like a bubble was it hurled from wave crest to abyss, and called forth the utmost skill of those hardy sons of the wave to prevent it from swamping. But half the distance when again that superhuman shriek hurled through the air. They turned and saw the noble creation of man part and her oaken hull disappear beneath the foam fringed hills of translucent emerald. They strained each nerve, to save, if possible. any remaining. A spar drives by them and upon it a surge washed form. They save her, but all else is lost.

The storm, and a month are gone. The scene is changed. A gentle breeze is fanning its perfumed flight from the Gulf, over and among the orange groves of Florida. A maid as beauteous as the first blush of womanhood of Venus, sat upon a moss cushioned knoll within a bower, around which bloomed, in their richest profusion, the myrtle and the wild rose, burdening the heavy atmosphere with their sweetest perfumes.

Nor did she sit alone. Ralph, the young and manly wrecker of the Isaacs, reclined upon the sward carpet near her. Could you have seen that couple thus, then you would have beheld as beautiful a pair as ever grouped, meet your eyes. Both dark but not alike: her skin was transparent as purest crystal, showing the southern blood, dark, proud and rich; coursing in quickened pulsations beneath its mellow texture, and bounding to her heart, returning in richer currents, through her system,

Her hair, black as the raven's glossy plumage, fell in ringlets upon her shoulders. Her eyes, clear and deep as the celestial fountains of the Mahomedan's paradise, beaming with an affectionate smile upon the Adonis at her feet, while she listened to the deep tones of his mellow voice, as he rehearsed some tale to her listening ear. His voice, like the crystal bells, and she, drinking in the sound like the freed spirit quaffing its first draught from one of the numberless goblets filled with living waters, swelling from the throne of Allah. His brow flushed as he spoke' and the olive of his check deepened in a richer glow.

'Can you continued, he 'born as you were to an in-heritance of wealth, listen to a tale of love from one who but earns his daily bread by the misfortunes of others, and lives by preying upon the remains of misery left by hnngry gale?'

'Your avocation,' responded she 'though dangerous in the extreme, is indeed a noble one, and many are the hearts beside my own that must ever be bound in gratitude at least to those who have perilled their lives for their safety, and so nobly succeeded.

Will that gratitnde merge in love?'

'Ralph, I have been constrained by poverty to accept the hospitality of your father's roof. The tempest swallowed my last remaining parent, my father, and all that he possessed in this world, and I remain but a dependent upon the bounty of those to whom I already owe a debt I can never hope to pay, that of gratitnde. I have not a friend in the wide world, Ralph, and I am even poorer than thyself.'

Ralph rose from his position, and sat behind her.

'And poor as I am, 'said he, ,am I doing wrong to ask that my future path through life may be brightened by a beacon star as bright as it is perfect?

Where you wealthy, I would not dare to claim you as the bride of a wrecker—but share with me the life and hard earned pittance of a son of the sea'

Her heart was fiilled, and she replied not, but her head sunk upon his shoulder and he gently kissed her.

Another month is passed and Ralph, the wrecker is the happy husband of the maid of the wreck,

Then, and not till then, did she tell him the amount of her father's wealth in the sea, The Isaacs are surrounded by shallows· Ralph searched long and found at last. An almost untold wealth was the dower of his bribe.

To this day Ralph, the wrecker, oft relates to his children's children, the tale of the WRECK.

The Family Opposed to Newspapers.

The man that dont take his county paper was in town yesterday. He brought his whole family in a two-horse wagon. He still believed that Gen. Taylor was President, and wanted to know if the "Kamschatkians" had taken Cuba, and if so where they had taken it. He had sold his corn for twenty-five cents—the price being thirty-one—but upon going to deposit the money, they told him it was mostly counterfeit. The only hard money he had was some three-cent pieces, and those some sharper had "run on him" for half dimes! His old lady smoked a "cob pipe" and would not believe that anything else could be used. One of the boys went to a blacksmith's shop to be measured for a pair of shoes, and another mistook the market house for a church. After hanging his hat on a meat hook, he piously took a seat on a butcher's stall, and listened to an auctioneer, whom he took to be the preacher. He left before "the meetin' was out," and had no great opinion of the "sarmint."

One of the girls took a lot of "seed onions" to the post office to trade for a letter. She had a baby, which she carried in a "sugar trough," stopping at times to rock it on the sidewalk. When it cried, she stopped its mouth with an old stocking and sang "Barbary Allen." The oldest boy had sold two "coon skins" and was on a "bust." When last seen, he had called for a glass of "sody and water," and stood soaking gingerbread and making wry faces, The shop keeper, mistaking his meaning, had given him a mixture of sal soda and water, and it tasted strongly of soap. But "he'd hearn tell of sody and water, and was bound to give it a fair trial, puke or no puke." Some "town fellow" came in and called for a lemonade with a "fly in it," whereupon our "soaped" friend turned his back and quietly wiped several flies into his drink.

We approached the old gentleman and tried to get him to "subscribe," but he would not listen to it. He was opposed to internal improvements," and he thought "larnin" was a wicked invention, culterwaten nothin" but wanity and wexation." None of his family ever learned to read, but one boy, and he "teached school awhile, and then went to studying diwinity."

In early childhood you lay the foundation of poverty or riches, in the habits you give your children. Teach them to save everything—not for their own use, for that would make them selfish,—but for some use. Teach them to share every thing with their playmates, but never allow them to destroy anything.

Age and Wisdom.

"People always fancy," said Goethe, laughing. "that we must become old to become wise; but, in truth, as years advance, it is hard to keep ourselves as wise as we were. Man becomes, indeed, in the different stages of his life, a different being; but he cannot say that he is a better one, and in certain matters, he is as likely to be right in his twentieth, as in his sixtieth year. We see the world one way from a plain, another way from the heights of a promontory, another from the glacier fields of the primary mouutains. We see; from one of these points, a larger piece of world than from the other; but that is all, and we cannot say that we see more truly from any than from the rest. When a writer leaves monuments on the different steps of his life, it is chiefly important that he should have an innate foundation and good will; that he should, at each step, have seen and felt clearly, and that, without any secondary aims, he should have said distinctly and truly, what has passed in his mind. Then will his writings, if they were right in the step where they originated, remain always right, however the writer may develope or alter himself in after time,"

THE USE OF FRUIT.—As the fruit season is approaching. and as many believe their use to be unwholesome, we copy the annexed paragrah in relation to the subject from the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal

"Instead of standing in fear of a generous consumption of ripe fruits, we regard them as positively conducive to health. The very maladies commonly assumed to have their origin in a free use of apples, peaches, cherries, melons and wildberries, have been quite as prevalent, if not equally destructive, in seasons of scarcity. There are so many erroneous notions entertained of the bad effects of fruit, that it is quite time a counteracting impression should be promulgated, having its foundation in common sense and based on the common observation of the intelligent. We have no patience in reading the endless rules to be observed in this particular department of physical comfort. No one, we imagine, ever lived longer, or freer from the paroxysms of disease, by discarding the delicious fruits of the lands in which he finds a home. On the contrary, they are neccessary to the preservation of health, and are therefore caused to make their appearance at the very time when the condition of the body, operated upon by deteriorating causes not always understood, requires their grateful, renovating influence."

THE SUSPENSION OF CAPT. FRAZER—FLOGGING SEAMEN.—The National Intelligencer, in explanation of the rumors of the dismissal of Capt. Frazer from the revenue service on the Pacific, says: There is more foundation for the report than usually exists in numerous other cases. The power to dismiss a commissioned officer rests only with the President; but the Department has suspended Capt. Frazer in consequence of the charge of his having flogged one of his crew at the gangway, in violation of the act of Congress abolishing corporeal punishment, and of the general order of the Department issued in pursuance of that law. Capt. Frazer, of course will be heard in his defence before any such extreme measure as dismissal is carried into effect.

Lazy Bones.

Of all the pests of society, the voluntary idler sins the most without excuse, and bears the most disgusting character. Men there are, in some paris of the world, (Heaven help them!) who can get nothing to do, and with manly hearts and willing hands seek in vain for labor enough to feed and clothe them.

Poor as such are, they are kings and princes by the side of those men who, with all God's gifts of power—with minds to think and plan, arms to work, and a purse at command, imagine they find their highest happiness in allowing all these gifts to lie idle, or in using them only more perfectly to secure and render still more easy, their blessed case. What a life! Think of it! What a destiny—to make up the great sum of earthly existence by periodically stuffing and taking off and putting on a rotten pair of pants! Oh, voluntary idler in God's busy universe, if you have nothing to do, get something to do Every working, worthy man despises you, if you do not despise yourself. A lazy man cannot be happy, and if you are possessed with a lazy devil, cast him out, though it tear those chair-glazed breeches into a thousand shreds. Cast him out, and do something to keep bright and healthy those faculties which in a future life must measure themselves with the wings of angels.

THE POTATO DISEASE.—DR. T W Harris the Librarian of Harvard College, and a skilful entomologist, has lately put forth a statement that the Potato Rot, an old bone of contention, has no connection whateyer with insect depredations. He states that the so-called catepillar found burrowing in the stalks of that plant, and the small, black, jumping beetles which infest squash-vines are identical. It has not been shown, and cannot be, that any species of insect of sufficiently destructive powers to prove extensively injurious to the Potato crop is to be found alike on the plants of Europe and America.

BALLOONING.—Mr. Wise, æronaut, made a very successfull balloon ascension from Philadephia on Monday afternoon. The voyagers were Mr. Wise, his wife and son, Miss L. Denton, and W.R. Stockton, of Spring Garden. The balloon rose gracefully to the height of over one hundred feet, and remained stationary for a few minutes, It was then drawn down by means of a windlass, to which the end of the rope was affixed. At half past six o'clock the rope was cut, and the balloon, with the same persons, shot upwards, and continued to rise to a great height, perpendicularly, It afterwards took a northeasterly direction, and was perceptible to view for nearly an hour.

The Tribune of the 25th. of July, contains a long article, in reference to the use of Camphene, Fluid, and Spirit Gas. It records a long list of accidents, occurring from the use thereof, which we presume does not amount to one hundredth part of the accidents, almost constantly occurring, and which in most cases are the results of carelessness.

The Ear-Trumpet Held Fast.

An aged sailor, on the coast of Kent, (Eng.) was recently an object of much solicitude to some pious persons, who were acquainted with his state. He had pased his eightieth year, was so deaf that he could hear no one speak, and was rapidly advancing to the grave as he could not take food, and would not employ medicine. The opposition he had manifested to divine truth was now diminished, but it was only as, in common with other objects of dislike he became less sensible of their real character.

The anxiety of those who pitied his spiritual condition was in consequence increased, and a speaking and ear trumpet were both employed, in the hope of gaining an entrance to his mind. The experiment succeeded; he could now hear what was said, and truths of the first importance were plainly and faithfully stated. So offended, however, was he with the appeal of a Christian minister, that for ten days he would not allow him to be readmitted to his room. But tracts—so often useful under the blessing of God—were not thus excluded, and he suffered several of them to be read to him, some of which proved both interesting and instructive. Still it was observed, that he carefully removed the ear trumpet whenever any part of a sentenee bore hard on his state as a sinner before God.

In his second interview, the minister made more guarded and careful approaches to the conscience of the old sailor, and by gradually exhibiting his state in the use of seafaring allusions, he awakened his attention. Aware of the artifice of his auditor, he held the ear-trumpet fast with his own hand, and by day and by night he explained and enforced the great truths of the Gospel of God.

At length success crowned his efforts. Animated by the injunction—"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand; for thou knowest not which shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good;" he had the happiness of seeing that sailor, once so hostile to divine truth, humble, teachable, grateful, and prayerful. He died in the spring of 1839, in the attitude of prayer, leaving behind him satisfactory evidence that the language of devotion was followed by that of praise. His remains were interred before a small place of worship in one of the bays of the Kentish coast; and it is delifghtful to add, that his widow and three daughters rejoice, it is believed, in a Scriptural hope of meeting him in Glory.—Smith's Anecdotes.

A boy carried over Niagara Falls.

Niagara Falls, Monday, May 18.

A boy two years old, named James McGrath, was carried over the Falls this moruing, He was playing on a board at Street's factory, on the Canada side in company with an elder brother; their father saw them and chided the elder one, who suddenly jumped off, when the other was precipitated into the rapids, and the father hurried to rescue him; but in vain—the boy went over the Falls.

We one day saw two little boys playing around a grog-shop; one heard a warning voice and fled, the other, went over the Falls.

Another time we noticed two little boys swearing boldly; one suddenly broke off; the other, went over the Falls.

Again we saw two little boys playing at cards.—Both became expert. One had a warning from his father. and never played again; the other went over the Falls.

Two little boys were fond of smoking. From morning to night a cigar was in their mouths.—Both were warned, One threw away the filthy weed, and became a sober, steady youth; the ether from smoking took to drinking, and from drinking to swearing, and soon he was over the Falls.

There is no certainty, that two little boys, beautiful in their play, and innocent in all their habits, will grow up alike. One listens to the voice of reproof, the other slights it, hardens his neck, and perishes, O, let the smallest casualties teach us our dangers, An innocent and lovely youth may perish amid the fascinations of the destroyer. How certain the ruin of him who stops his ears and hears no warning. The little boy was precipitated by accident over the Falls. If you go over, it will not be by accident, but because you will not be warned, and will not take heed to your ways.—Youth's Temp. Gaz.

The Glory to be Revealed.

Dr. Arnold very strikingly remarks, 'Men forget what they were in their youth, or at best only partially remember it; it is hard even for those whose memories are strongest and liveliest to put themselves exactly into the same position in which they stood as boys; they can scarcely fancy that there was once a time when they cared so much for pleasures and troubles which now seem so trifling. And it may be, that if we rise hereafter to angels' stature; if wisdom be ours such as we dream not of; if being counted worthy to know God as he is, the poorness of all created pleasures shall be revealed to us, flashing upon our uncreated spirits like light—it may be that we shall then feel it as hard to fancy how we could have cared for what we now deem most important; how twenty years, more or less, taken from this span of our earthly life; how being parted for a few years, more or less from those dear friends with whom we are now united forever—how this could have seemed of any importance to beings born for immortality. It is quite reasonable to suppose that the interests of manhood will hereafter appear to us just as insignificant, I ought rather to say ten thousand times more so, than the interests of our boyish years seem to us now.'

READING AND THINKING.—It is not hasty reading, but seriously meditating upon holy and heavenly truths, that makes them prove sweet and profitable to the soul. It is not the bee's touching of the flowers that gathers honey, but her abiding for a time upon them, and drawing out the sweet. It is not he that reads most, but he that meditates most, that will prove the choicest, sweetest, wisest, and strongest Christian.

Witty sayings are as easily lost as the pearls slipping off a broken string, but a word of kindness is seldom spoken in vain It is a seed, which, even when dropped by chance, springs up a flower.

Thursday; July 31, 1851.

☞ Mr Albert D. Drake is our authorised agent to receive subscriptions and advertisments.

☞ Mr. E. W. Carr, Third street, Philadelphia, opposite the Exchange, is our authorised agent for that city.

To the Public.

We hereby give notice to all whom it may concern, that we have disposed of our right, title and interest in the Plainfield Gazette, to U. M. Osborn, Esq., of this place, taking effect on the 24th July inst.—All debts due us on account of said paper, for subscriptions, advertisements or job work, are payable to him; all contracts for the same entered into by us will be scrupulously fulfilled by him. All debts due by us on account of said paper will be paid on presentation at the office of the same on the first day of August 1851.

WM. M. DRAKE & SON.

Although the publication of the Gazette has been no sinecure to us, yet, thanks to the liberal and enlightened spirit of our citizens and of the public at large, we have derived an honest and honorable livelihood thereby; we feel grateful for having received so much at their hands. Having commenced its publication under unfavorable circumstances, and despite the obstacles of inexperience and the prognostications of some of our cotemporaries, we have succeeded in establishing a paper on a permanent basis, which in its typographical appearance at least, will compare favorably with any other published in the state. We trust therefore that the enterprising citizens of our town who have sustained us will continued to sustain an enterprise that is so well calculated to promote their own and the general welfare, to aid and assist in building up the prosperity of our beautful and thriving town; so important an auxilary to the public welfare we feel assured will receive a generous support. We need not tell our readers in this enlightened age, especially those who are in favor of free schools, liberal and just laws securing to all equal rights and privileges, that the public press was the most efficient power by which these have been and greater than these are to be obtained; that it is the mighty bulwark by which freedom is sustained, guarantied and perpetuated, that by its aid knowledge and liberty is everywhere diffused among men; that bigotry is fast being dispossessed of its blind attachment to creeds, rituals and useless ceremonies and adopting in their stead the sober second thought of englightened experience, the practical teachings of reason and common sense. By it fanaticism is disarmed of its persecuting spirit, and all enjoy under its powerful protection, through its independent and enlightened discussion, those rights and privileges which God and nature endowed them with. By no other means so rapidly, so economically, certainly and effectually can knowledge, liberty and virtue be diffused among men as by an enlightened public press; therefore by no better or surer means can universal "peace on earth and good will to man" be promoted and secured. Therefore, as no reflecting man can fail to see the vast advantages that thus accrue to the welfare and happiness of the human race and especially to the prosperity and happiness of the community where it is immediately located and directly felt, and as individual prosperity is so intimately connected with the prosperity of the mass, we trust that none will be so careless of their own interest as to neglect the fountain head from whence they derive its main support. For past favors we return our grateful thanks to the liberal and enlightened community from whence they were derived, receiving from the experience thus derived the consoling and sustaining assurance that honest industry and mental independence will never fail of its due reward, and as it has thus far ever sustained us in all our undertakings we confidently adopt and recommend it as a fundamental principle, as the polar star or guide of all in every condition and position of life

☞ In assuming the management of the Gazette, we are compelled for the first time, to endeavor to fulfil, the duties of the Editorial department; a duty at once arduous and difficult, although, to the casual observer, it may appear an easy task to write, in such a manner, as will please the tastes of all.

Let any person, be placed in a situation to which he is unaccustomed, and he will feel his inability to perform the duties allotted to him.

Such, is the position in which we are placed; but with a firm determination to succeed, and to persevere through every difficulty, we hope to give entire satisfaction, to our numerous readers, in a short time should we fail now.

At the present time, we are aware that the country is flooded, with daily papers, which by means of the two, greatest inventions of the age, Steam and Telegraph, are enabled to give to their readers the latest news, at the earliest possible period; this fact tends to make country papers still less interesting: to obviate this difficulty, we shall endeavor to procure an abundance of local news, and communications; and thus create an interest, which would not otherwise be felt.

We shall give a general summary of news in the form of items, embracing all, that is of interest to the general reader.

In neatness and general typographical appearance the Gazette is second to no no in the state (thanks to our predecessor,) and, by proper care and attention, together with a liberal support, from the citizens of Plainfield and vicinity we hope to be in advance of all others, dailies excepted.

Politically we have taken a decidedly neutral position, independent of all party hacks, aiding the views of all, but subservient to the interests of none.

Selections will be made from the leading Journals of both political parties; and we also invite a free discussion, of political and local subjects unless they become personal; in such cases, we shall receive or reject at our pleasure.

In a religious view we shall endeavor to gain a high moral character, always devoting a column or more to choice selections from papers and publications of no particular sect, but a portion from each.

We shall also devote a portion of our paper to the Farming interest of our community; the season is approaching when the Farmer can devote a portion of his time to reading; and we hope, by sparing neither pains or expense to obtain for him, together with our other readers a selection of reading matter, which shall be at once, instructive, profitable and amusing. We would beg leave to ask of our numerous friends a liberal patronage, and we promise faithfully to use our utmost exertions to make them a proper return for the favors which they may confer upon us.

We do not know of any village in our state which so generally calls forth the praise of the travelling community as our own, and with a population of some three thousand, we do not fear but that we shall receive a general and liberal support.

Correspondence of the Gazette.

Letters to a City Cousin.

PLAINFIELD July 22. [51.

DEAR COUSIN:

Having become domesticated here and somewhat acquainted, I will redeem my promise of describing the villagers.

My circle of acquaintance is as yet limited, but so far, I like the people very much, if I except two faults; the first is, a propensity for gossiping, the other, a species of bigotry, or more properly speaking, an uncharitable feeling toward each other, in church affairs.

I have received many kind attentions from different families here, and will ever treasure in my memory their affectionate endeavors, to render the stranger happy and content.

Well now Coz. for the dark side of the picture. I repeat there is a great deal of gossip, and occasionally some malicious slander.

I cannot believe that these tattlers, generally intend to wound people's feelings, or injure their reputation; but you are aware, that an insinuation—a jest—or a scornful curl of the lip, when speaking of a person, is often the foundation of a slander, which may blast one's fame, or blight her happiness for ever.

The circumstances I intend relating to you, are illustrative of the impressions, which may be conveyed by an inuendo, or an ambiguous expression.

Suppose me to be walking down the principal street of the village, with an old residenter, we meet a handsome woman, I being a stranger ask who it is? my companion replies, "that is Mrs. X—her husband has been away some time, but she enjoys herself, for she is not quite so devoted to her absent Lord as was Penelope," of course I form my opinion of the lady, based on that slur, and the manner in which it was said.

A few squares below, we met another lady, my guide whom we will for the sake of convenience call "Mrs. Gossip," directed my attention to the rich brocade silk the person wore, "well" said she, "there is that Mrs. Y—dressed so magnificently, and her poor husband has to toil incessantly, to support her extravagance, why he is really so embarrassed, that he cannot half the time pay his "butcher's," and his "baker's," bills, as they become due.

The natural consequence of this information was, that I conceived a dislike for the vain creature, whose ruling passion is dress, and yet all that was said may be false or at least exagerated.

We next stopped at the Post Office, where I was introduced to a very ladylike person, with whose address I was quite pleased; her conversation was interesting, and animated, so I determined to cultivate her acquaintance.

After we seperated I expressed to Mrs. Gossip the favorable impression the lady had made.

"Oh yes" replied Mrs. Gossip, Mrs. Z—is certainly very fascinating, she generally captivates persons at once; but if her conquests were confined to her own sex, it would be more creditable."

Really Mrs. Gossip you surprise me very much, for if (as I believe) countenance be an index to character, I should judge Mrs. Z—to be a virtuous and noble minded woman. "I did not say there was anything criminal, in her conduct," quickly retorted the scandal monger.

"When you spoke of a married woman's conquests, and sneeringly too, I could but infer, that she was at least culpable of flirting."

"Oh no! I did not assert such a thing" stammered Mrs. Gossip, "I merely meant that I had observed her to be unusually agreeable, in the society of gentlemen, as if she were more anxious to make a favorable impression on them, than on her own sex, and my opinion is, that she should conduct herself, so as to be like, Cæsar's wife above suspicion."—Contempt for the malicious Mrs. Gossip, prevented further remarks on my part. You cannot imagine dear Coz how indignant I felt, to think that a person should thus have her motives misconstrued, by a prude, merely, because she was buoyant and lively. I might multiply instances of the kind, but this will suffice to explain, the origin of the many scandalous libels now in circulation.

* * * * * * *

The most fashionable Church here, is the "2nd Presbyterian," the Minister of which, is a very talented and well educated man; it is the only church I have as yet attended, except the "Methodist," the Pastor of which, I consider a true disciple, and faithful servant of the Lord, he is such a benevolent, kind, fatherly man, you would at once become attached to him. While speaking of religion I cannot forbear mentioning the uncharitable feelings, that exist among certain denominations, it is really calculated to injure the cause of christianity, not content with calling each other "hypocrites," "wolves in sheep's clothing," et cetera, they ridicule each other most unmercifully; do not suppose I speak of the churches as a body, I have reference to a certain class of people, who seem to have neither grace nor charity. In each of the churches there are many that I esteem, and it is painful to witness such rancor and envy.

* * * * * * Now that you have seen the shades, we will change the scene and introduce you to the Plainfield ladies, whose beauties I fear will dazzle your imagination. I think this village can boast of more pretty girls than any place of its size I ever visited, many of them are talented, and accomplished, and I dare say all amiable and agreeable.

You are doubtess anxious to know which is the "belle of the village," that is a matter which never could be decided, the candidates for that honor, are two young ladies equally beautiful, and fascinating; but of entirely different styles of beauty. One is tall, noble looking, and majestic, with magnificent hazel eyes, beautifully arched brows, and a splendid forehead. The other is a perfect little sylph, with blue eyes, light hair, pearly teeth, and a figure as petite and perfect as that, of the Fairy Queen "Titania."

Notwithstanding all these attractions, there are but few beaux here, the gentleman generally go off to seek their fortunes, and become devotees at the shrine of "Mammon," instead of at that of "Beauty" yet after all, so enchantingly lovely are the village girls, that they attract beaux from New-York, and the neighboring cities. therefore the society here is very good. The people are very industrious, consequently very moral, and upright, if it were not for that bad habit of gossiping, it would be one of the most agreeable places in New Jersey.

Your devoted cousin,

AMERICANA.

Amidst the most adverse circumstances, there are still reasons for cheerfulness. So long as there are motives to gratitude, there is a cause for cheerfulness.

Rev. Wm. Wilson of Cincinnati sailed for Europe on the 26 th. inst.

MR. EDITOR:—I am honored through the Union of this week by Sontag with a "sweet flower"—which, I believe, in the language of love, is a symbolical proffer of a gentleman's heart. Of course, it is a mere piece of gallantry, and is so regarded. But as it would be unhandsome in me not to make some acknowledgment, however inadequate, of a gift so tastefully selected and so gracefully tendered, I have endeavored to attest my appreciation of the compliment by complying with the request of the courteous donor—to "take this sweet flower" and "watch o'er its leaf." I have taken leave, however, to presume that a gentleman of his winning address, in the enjoyment of a polished leisure—and, withal, whose position in society is so commanding—must have his affections fixed on a far worthier object than myself; and I have, accordingly endeavored to develope this idea in the latter part of the following "effusion" by representing the "sweet flower" to have quite reached its maturity under other culture—and therefore, though watered with tears and watched with anxious care, to have languished and died under mine. The love-flower blossoms but once; and its sweet blossoms once gathered, it is idle to attempt to raise a second crop. In this respect it differs from clover.

I must take shelter under cover of poetic license for introducing seasons between two successive days. Why, Mr. Editor, do you allow geeen-eyed Envy to annoy Sontag through your paper? I'm sure he is a dear love of a man! D.

To Sontag.

How fondly I cherished that sweet little flower,
Sincerely I wished it would flourish and grow;
Enraptured to view it I came ev'ry hour,
Then regretted each hour that its growth was so slow.

From the rude wintry winds it had long been protected,
From the storms it was sheltered with tenderest care,
And truly I thought should it not be neglected,
That when the Spring came I might find blossoms there.

With the mild beams of morn each leaf had been glowing,
All day through its folinge the cool zephyrs played,
And at evening the dew-drops, new freshness bestowing,
O who would have thought such a flower would fade?

Though deceived, still how madly I cherished it yet,
As the only fair flower that my garden adorns;
And long will this heart, disappointed, regret,
For it came seeking blossoms, but it found only thorns.

Canst thou tell why it faded, or why it declined?
It could not be the climate, for too well I know
That there is not a spot where the sun ever shin'd
But if nourished it would to maturity grow.

I discovered too late why my flower had withered—
It blossoms but once—while the flowers remain
'Twill flourish and bloom—but if they are gathered.
Though it sometimes survives, yet it ne'er blooms again.

My flower had blossom'd, but every bright gem
That adorn'd it, had long since been gather'd with care;
And nought but the thorns can be seen on the stem—
The bright gems were love, and the thorns are—despair

DESDEMONA.

Telegraphic Dispatch.

CHARLESTON, Friday, July 25.

ED. N. Y. SUN:—There has been sent by the Isabel a paper printed a few minutes before her leaving stating that the patriots had been defeated in one of their positions. This is false. It was printed by order of the Government to deceive the people of the United States.

The patriots defeated the Spanish troops in an engagement on the 15th July. They fought bravely for twelve hours, with but few fire arms, making many prisoners; among them the Colonel of the Fifth Regiment. The patriots had many wounded and five killed.

Their cry was—LOPEZ, QUITMAN and LIBERTY!

Very Interesting from Texas, &c.

NEW-ORLEANS, Friday, July 25. 1851.

Advices from Texas to the 18th inst., announce that great excitement prevailed at Rio Grande, in consequence of the Mexicans refusing to deliver up a runaway slave. It is said there are 2,000 fugitives in Mexico. An armed party of Texans had threatened to capture Presidio. The political feeling in Texas is runnihg very high. The prospects of the growings crops are favorable.

The steamship Alabama sailed from this port today, for Chagres.

Gen. Twiggs arrived in New-Orleans yesterday.

Late from Cuba.

The National Intelligencer has intelligence from a passenger by the Isabel, who states that Havanna was filled with rumors of the revolt in the eastern part of the island. Three companies of Regiment Cantabria, are said to have thrown down their arms and joined the insurgents. The remainder of the regiment has been publicly disbanded at Havana.

The Queen's troops, in an engagement, had suffered a severe loss.

It is also rumored that the people of San Juan de los Remedious are in open insurrection, and have established a provisional government.

Several towns in the interior are represented as being in arms, to the number of 5,000 strong.

The Gazette of Havanna contains an official announcement of a rout of two small parties of insurgents and the ordering of a court martial for the trial of the prisoners

Temperance Convention.

The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser says:

The Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance of Western New-York, has been in session in this city since Wednesday evening. There have been between two and three hundred members in attendance, and about one hundred initiations. The condition of the Order, as represented in the reports, is flourishing and prosperous—there having been a large increase of subordinate Divisions within the jurisdiction.

Matters of considerable interest have come before the Grand Division—but the Quarterly Sessions are not so well attended as the annual, when the officers are chosen, &c.

Yesterday the members of the Order had a public demonstration; but owing fo the rain which prevailed nearly all the forenoon, they were not out in large numbers—their being only about 500 to partake of the refreshments which were abundantly provided, in the Grove. Several hundred were expected from Canada, and the Divisions from the surrounding country had made arrangements to come in, but were prevented by the rain. Excellent speeches were made by G. W. P., and Hon. Philip S. White.

There are 31 Divisions in the County, about 2,000 members, and the numbers are increasing.

For the Gazette.

Mr. Editor:—The Gazette having passed into other hands, I hope I may be permitted to ask in the name of the community, in which it is to circulate, that nothing personal will be admitted into its columns, which, without proposing to accomplish any good, is calculated to awaken bitterness of feeling in the bosoms of individuals. This bitterness will invariably follow abuse, except in those rare cases where, fortunately, the object of the attack happens (as in the instance referred to below) to have dignity and sense enough, to treat it with cool contempt. A few weeks since, some verses, addressed to a lady by a gentlemen, appeared in the Union which, as it seems to me, were quite equal to the average merit of poetry published from time to time in that paper. Their construction was pleaseant to the ear,—the thoughts embodied appropriate enough—and the whole peice (with the exception of the last line of the first verse) intelligible. But in less than forty-eight hours after its appearance, a parody was placed, through the colums of the Gazette, in the hands of every one whose taste led him to enjoy ridicule at the expense of a refined and delicate mind.

We hope for better things under the present Editorial reign. Q—s.

TRIFLE NOT WITH THE SPOILER!

CONSUMPTION, like the rattle-snake, always gives warning of its approach. The dry and frequent Cough, the sense of oppression at the chest, the short quick breathing of the patient, are certain indications that serious mischief is going on in the Organs of respiration. At this stage of the disease, Dr Rogers Syrup of Liverwort Tar and Canchalagua will not only be a certain but a rapid cure. The three vegetable ingredients of which it is composed form, in their compound state, a medicine which is at once anti-febrile tonic, and healing in its properties. If the pulse is excited, it soothes it; if the strength is declining, it restores it; and if the Lungs are inflamed, and ulceration is threatened, it heals and invigorates them. Such is the philosophy of its operation, and thousands rescued from the verge of the grave can testify to its practical effect. For full details, see pamphlet and advertisement in another place.

NEW GOODS! NEW GOODS!

Constantly arriving at the

CHEAP

DRY GOODS STORE.

THE undersigned fully appreciating past favors would hereby call the attention of their friends and a generous public, that while Goods are constantly forsaking our shelves and counters, by reason of the ready inclinations of customers; the deficiency is mere than realized by the constant arrival of new, cheaper and more desirable goods—to which we pledge ourselves that for quality, stile and especially price cannot any where be surpassed (Brunswick not excepted)—to satisfy all that the above is correct, call at ROCAP & SHEPPARD'S,

Cheap Dry Goods Store.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S

TRICOPHEROUS,

or Medicated Compound.

Not a family in the land should be without a supply of this inestimable preparation which is no less valuable as an immediate and unfailing remedy for diseases of the skin, the muscles and the glands, and all external injuries, than as a means of eradicating scurf and dandruff, renewing the hair and preventing its loss, and imparting to the fibrous mass a rich luxuriance and a brilliant lustre

Throughout the length and breadth of the United States the Tricopherous has received the sanction and approval of the Faculty, and Professor BARRY now holds, and is prepared to exhibit to all who desire to see them, original testimonials from eminent medical men of the most conclusive character. The instantaneous effect of this great counter-irritant in reducing external inflammation, however fiery and by whatever cause produced, is striking and extraordinary. The superficial absorbents which acting like so many syphons, take up whatever is applied to the surface, whether it be balm or poison, convey this gentle, stimulating, yet anti-inflammatory fluid into the external circulation supplying thereto a healthful tone, and enabling the vessels of the skin to throw off by evaporation through the pores the materies morbi or elements of fever. By this process the irritating principle which occasions pimples rashes, blotches, erysipelas, hettle rash, prickly heat, scald head and which is equally active in cuts, bruises, burns scalds and the bites and stings of insects, is rapidly expelled, the pain and itching are alleviated; the redness fades; and a complete cure is invariably accomplished. The same stimulating property which restores health, vigor and vegetative power to the scalp, and through the scalp to the hair, enables the skin upon any part of the body to relieve itself from disease. The whole action of the Tricopherous is in harmony with the well understood principle that nothing but healthful external stimulus will determine the fluids to the surface and enable the exhausted and torpid vessels which have been conquered by inflammation, to conquer in their turn, and put the fiery intruder to flight.

The cheapness of the Tricopherous places it within reach of the poorest—its varied uses and acknowledged efficacy render it indispensable to all.

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York; and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States Canada, Mexico, West Indies Great Britain, France, &c.,

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequent occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels; such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

WHEN IT OCCURS.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt.

The bowel having protruded as a rupture, or burst and known by the external LUMP OR TUMOR, should be eartfully and thoroughly returned into the abdomen and retained there by means of a suitable instrument, as a TRUSS BANDAGE, or SUPPORTER. The application of such mechanical aid in the relief and final cure of hernia, is a matter requiring much special study, skill and experience not only in the mechanism of the body, but also in that of instruments as relating to their application; for apart from the different methods of producing pressures, the disease calls for exact adaptation in the TRUSS PAD or pledget used for the purpose of retaining a hernia.

SUCH IS TRUTH.

The above truths are now being appreciated by the public having been brought particularly to their notice through the recent improvements made by Frederick M. Butler in Supporter and Hernial pads and introduced by the Hull's Truss Office, in their treatment for the relief and radical cure of Hernia. Over two year experience has now been had in the application of BUTLER'S recently patented Truss Pads—proving through numerous cases, that from their peculiar form and bearing they lie over and upon the inguinal canal, dislodge the bowels thoroughly, contract the rings or natural openings, thicken the muscular walls, and thereby effect a cure.

The office is provided with experienced male and female attendants, who apply instruments direct to the person of patients, and the public may rely upon that care being made in the application which will most likely tend to the relief and cure of the several complaints coming under their treatment, whether it be Hernia, Prolapsus Uteri, Prolapsus Ani, Piles, or other similar weakness, requiring the mechanical support of a Truss, Supporter, Belt, Braces or Bandage. HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE,

4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St Paul's Church, New-York.

FREDERICK M. BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The male and female departments are separate and distinct. Children trussed when only two years old and invariably cured. [145is.

JOHN PRICE,

OPTICAN, AND MANUFACTURER OF

GOLD AND SILVER SPECTACLES,

WOULD respectfully inform the citizens of Plainfield and the public generally that he has removed his Store to 349 Broad-st.

opposite the City hotel, Newark,

And that he has on hand an extensive assortment of GOLD, SILVER AND STEEL SPECTACLES. Of every description. Gold, Silver, Steel and Tortoise Shell reading Glasses, also Hand, Quizzing, Opera and magnifying Glasses, in great variety: Telescopes, Perceptives, Goggles, Eye preservers; a first rate assortment of PEBBES' Double Concave Glasses, Cataract Glassess, &c. Particular attention is called to

PRICE'S PREMIUM PRISCOPIC SPECTACLES.

Being made of the finest materials, which through their high polish and true ground, produce the purest vision and are recommended by competent judges as being decidedly the best and most natural in their effect of all others, for preserving and improving the sight in continued reading, writing, sewing, &c. Persons with weak eyes can be fitted with Glasses which will greatly benefit and not strain the sight. Short-sighted persons and such as have been operated upon for Cataract, can also be suited.

J. P. would be happy to see at his store all persons that have found difficulty in getting Glasses that were adapted to their sight, as the most difficult cases are easily fitted upon a fair trial. Any person purchasing Spectacles at his Store, can exchange them if not well suited, any time within three months, without extra charge The subscriber has also on hand a large assortment of Silver Spoons, Prince Albert, Threaded and plain patterns, Butter Knives, Sugar Spoons, Mustard Spoons, Salt Spoons, Cream spoons, &c. Also heavy Silver Thimbles, Gold Pens, Paper Weights, Silver-plated, plain and threaded, Table Preserve, Tea and Salt Spoons, Plated Forks, &c. [179.

BABY JUMPER

AND

WALKER COMBINED.

The subscriber having invented and made application for a patent for the above article would hereby call the attention of the public to its superiority over all others.

It forms a neat article of furniture, somewhat resembling an ottoman; it being upon castors, the little occupant can move it in all directions around the room with the utmost ease. The top opens by a spring and then closes around under the child's arms and locks. The child sits in an upright position upon a saddle or seat, stuffed perfectly soft, bearing no weight on his arms, with its feet resting upon the floor. The child can easily raise the article, and as there is a spring in each leg it can use it as a jumper for its amusement, or push itself around the room, thus learning to walk without other asistance. As the springs buoys the child up, thereby preventing too much weight upon its feet, it gradually learns to use its legs and soon learns to walk. The child can in no manner receive injury; a trial or inspection will satisfy the most skeptical of its superior utility.

Prices from $5 to $10 each, according to style of trimmings &c. Orders punctually attended to by

E. RICE, Cor. Broad and Mechanic-sts, near the Depot, ELIZABETHTOWN. N. J.

☞ Also for sale at 240 Broadway, New-York.

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

Among the numerous discoveries Science has made in this generation to facilitate the business of life—increase its enjoyment, and even prolong the term of human existence, none can be named of more real value to mankind, than this contribution of Chemistry to the Healing Art. A vast trial of its virtues throughout this broad country, has proven beyond a doubt, that no medicine or combination of medicine yet known, can so surely control and cure the numerous varieties of pulmonary disease which have hitherto swept from our midst thousands and thousands every year. Indeed, there is now abundant reason to believe a Remedy has at length been found which can be relied on to cure the most dangerous affections of the lungs. Our space here will not permit us to publish any proportion of the cures affected by its use, but we would present the following opinions of eminent men, and refer further enquiry to the circular which the Agent below named, will always be pleased to furnish free wherein are full particlars, and indisputable proof of these facts.

From the President of Amherst College, the celebrated PROFESSOR HITCHCOCK.

"James C. Ayer—Sir: I have used your CHERRY PECTORAL in my own case of deep-seated Bronchitis, and am satisfied from its chemical constitution, that it is an admirable compound for the relief of laryngial and bronchial difficulties. If my opinion as to its superior character can be of any service, you are at liberty to use it as you think proper.

EDWARD HITCHCOCK, L. L. D.,
From the widely celebrated

PROFESSOR SILLIMAN, M. D., L. L. D., Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, &c., Yale College, Member of the Lit. Hist. Med. Phil. and Scientific Societies of America and Europe.

"I deem the CHERRY PECTORAL an admirable composition from some of the best articles in the Materia Medica, and a very effective remedy for the class of diseases it is intended to cure."

New Haven, Ct., Nov. 1 1849.

MAJOR PATTISON, President of the S. C. Senate, states he has used the CHERRY PECTORAL with wonderful success, to and inflammation of the lungs.

From one of the first Physicans in Maine.

SACO, Me., April 26, 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell. Dear Sir: I am now constantly using your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, and prefer it to any other medicine for pulmonary complaints. From observation of many severe cases, I am convinced it will cure coughs, colds, and diseases of the lungs, that have put to defianice all other remedies.

I invariably reccommend its use in cases of consumption, and consider it much the best remedy known for that disease.

Respectfully yours, I. S. CUSHMAN, M. D.

BY MEANS OF THE POCKET ESCULAPIUS, or, Every one his own Physician! Thirtieth edition, with upwards of a hundred engravings, showing private diseases in every shape and form, and malformations of the generative system,

BY WM. YOUNG, M, D.

The time has now arrived, that persons suffering from secret diseases, need no more become the victim of quackery as by the prescriptions contained in this book any one may cure himself, without hindrance to business, or the knowledge of the most intimate friend, and with one tenth the usual expense. In addition to the general routine of private disease, it fully explains the cause of manhood's early decline, with observations on marriage—besides many other derangements which it would not be proper to enumerate in the public prints.

☞ Any person sending TWENTY-FIFE CENTS enclosed in a letter, will receive one copy of this book, by mail, or five copies will be sent for one dollar. Address, "DR. W. YOUNG, No. 152 SPRUCE Street, PHILADELPHIA." Post-paid.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazzetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impotency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cerdial cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless xalue to those without offspring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

It also possesses the unrivalled qualities of curing incipient Consumption, and I have administered it with great success to patients who have sought our delightful climate for the restoration of their health and the result is that a medicine has been added to the catalogue for the cure of insipient consumption.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co., of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper.

WONDERFUL CURES!

AND

CANCHALAGUA;

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to

CONSUMPTION.

NOTHING LIKE IT.

CURE FOLLOWS CURE!

READ THE EVIDENCE!!

The above invaluable Medicine has now been before the public sufficiently long to have its virtues thoroughly tested. It has been used by all classes of the community, under every possible variety of circumstances, and has everywhere proved itself a most powerful and efficient Cough Medicine. Lung Diseases of all kinds, yield to its influence, as mists pass away upon the rising of the Sun. This is no fiction. We give you below, letters from persons who are now living in the state of New York, and who declare, over their own signatures, all that we could possibly desire to say in its favor. Those who can read their statements and yet remain incredulous, must be beyond the reach of human testimony.

A LOVELY YOUNG LADY

CURED OF CONSUMPTION!

☞ The following is from the pen of WM. H. LEVISON, Esq., the distinguished Editor of the U. S. Military and Naval Argus under date New York, Jan. 26, 1850 What could be more conclusive?

"It is seldom we permit ourselves to occupy a space in these columns to speak in praise of any article in the patent medicine way; but when we see the life of a fellow-creature saved by the use of any medicine whatever, we consider it as our right, if not a duty, to give a simple statement of facts, that others may, in like manner be benefitted. The case which has induced us to pen this article, was that of a young lady of our acquaintance, who, by frequent exposure to the night air, contracted a cold, which settled on the Lungs before its ravages could be stayed. (This occurred two years ago this winter.) Various remedies were used, but with very little effect or benefit. The cough grew worse, with copious expectoration, and the sunken eye, and pale, hollow cheek, told plainly that PULMONARY DISEASE was doing its worst on her delicate frame. The family physician was consulted and although he would not admit to the young lady that she really had the CONSUMPTION, yet he would give no encouragement as to a cure. At this crisis, her mother was persuaded to make use of a bottle of Dr. Rogers' Compound Syrup of LIVEWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA and we are happy to state, she was perfectly cured in less than three months by this medicine alone, after even hope was destroyed. It is useless to comment on such a case as this, for the truth will reach where polished fiction never can. If any doubt the authenticity of this statement, let them call at this office.—*U. S. COUGH AND DISEASE

OF 14 MONTHS STANDING.

CURED.

AFTER BEING GIVEN UP TWICE

BY EMINENT PHYSICIANS!

Albany, June 9th, 1849.

Messrs. A. L. Scovill & Co.—I herewith forward to you a Certificate of a Cure, effected by your Compound Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua The Cough and expectoration was of fourteen months standing, and had baffled the skill of several of our eminent physicians in New York, Albany, and Cooperstown. I am the person in whom the cure was effected, and as I had previously no faith in patent medicines, I have since tried it on others, and have become satisfied of its value. Mine was as GREAT A CURE as ever was performed, as I had, during my sickness, been given up twice by my physicians I have now commenced my business, after taking, I think about eight bottles.

Yours, repectfully, THOS. C. FAULDER.

BLEEDING AT THE LUNGS CURED.

☞ SEE HOW PROMPTLY IT ACTS!

Statement of Mr. A. Lang, Baker, No 388 Pearl street, N. Y. A few days before last Christmas, I was taken unwell, and soon commenced bleeding freely at the Lungs. I called in a Homœopathic Physician, but his medicine did not seem to help me. I read your advertisement, and thought I would try Dr. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA. Before I had takea up the third bottle, by bleeding had stopped, my Cough was gone, and I felt well as usual. My health is now good. I consider it a most excellent medicine, and cordially reccommend it to my friends. [This statement was made to the Proprietors, March 12th 1850.]

REMEMBER.

REMEMBER!—but 'tis useless, idle all,
To bid thee think of what the mind can never
From off its shoulders fling, till like a pall
Dropped from a corse, the spirit doomed forever
To a wakeless sleep, falls from its primal height,
No more to be a part of that dread Power
That called him from the dust—the Infinite;
Whose breath destroyeth nations in a day,
And builds up sceptres in a desert land,
Where naught but savage feet were known to stray.

Yet remember, when the wrapt confusion
Of the spirit's struggle points the fairy land
Where pleasure holds the mirror of delusion,
And fiction colors with a witching hand—
Place thy fair hand upon thy heart, and feel
If there is not a throb still true to me;
But let no tear the tell-tale truth reveal;
For what am I that thou should'st weep for me?

But yet I'd have thee give to Memory's grave
A generous drop, so that it does not dim
The lustre of those eyes, whose glories gave
My love its birth, by thee accounted sin.
If though my nature I at times transgress,
And human weakness lets the Tempter in,
Pause, softly pause, and hear thy heart confess,
That, if thus tempted, it would likewise sin;
Look at the throng of sorrows it has nursed,
The pangs of misery that have been its trust;
Then tear again its fibres, if thou dirst,
And trample all its succor in the dust.

Contemn it not—you know not half its care.
The power that sin had o'er it when it fell;
But kneel, and give to Heav'n thy grateful prayer
That thou, untempted, passed the hour so well;
It may have struggled wildly to desry
The path to you made plain, but hid from it,
And turning from the search with swimming eye,
Would in excitement its despair forget;
And when the follies of my early youth
Hung up their pictures to thy gazing soul,
O let one noble thought, or act of truth,
If there be one, be found within the bowl.

There beats no heart whose thoughts are wholly sin;
No heart but has at least a portion good;
A flame that's smothered, or, if burning dim,
That waits but life to be all understood;
That it is so, I feel—for in my own
There lives forgiveness for the heart which crushed
The flowers of hope; till I had almost grown
Wild with despair, but that long since is hushed.
I would not if I could revenge the deed,
Though like a knife it cuts the heart away;
'Twould blunt the shaft that righteous Heaven will speed,
On its dread errand at a later day;
And in thy hours of peaceful blessedness—
For that thou may'st be happy is my prayer—
The only one that from my wretchedness
Plucks out a feather from the wings of care.

My wretchedness! but wherefore it reveal
When it concerns none else?—why tell another
That the heart is sad, if that same heart can feel
No angel pity for a stricken brother?
No! I will strive to hide it in the dirk
Of my own sorrow; there, at least, I find
A silent home, a desolated ark,
In which to dwell while reason lights the mind.

How dreary is the scene! hung round by gloom,
The heart, poor thing, now madly asks to break,
Since a long sleep within the cheeless tomb
Is all that's left to bid it cease to ache.
We might have been as happy as he flowers,
When summer's golden wings their bosoms fan;
But thou hast willed me dark, distorted hours,
And I must love to be the thing I am.

Think what I might have been, led on by thee,
Who had posession of my inmost soul,
So that I lived, and thought, and dwelt in thee,
And kneeled before no altar but thine own;
But as thy tongue pronounced the final doom,
I will not murmur at the stern decree,
But round thy head will creep a thicker gloom,
And memory still will point me out to thee.

OSCAR G. HUGHAN.

From the Pictorial Drawing Room Companion.

THE STEP-MOTHER.

BY HARRIET N. HATHAWAY.

Ah cold distrust, a blinding veil
Around the soul it flings;
Full many a fond heart it assils,
And chills its gushing spring.

Reader mine, with your permission, we will in our mind's eye enter a delightful country-seat, in the environs of the city of N——. In a richly furnished chamber, that looked out upon a spacious garden, were two young and beautiful girls, of the ages of seventeen and fifteen, and seated on the carpet was a golden-tressed, blue-eyed, child the exact counterpart of the elder of the group. One would imagine, as they glanced around the room, and beheld the costly furniture, the large and elegant library, and the chaste and beautiful paintings that adorned the walls of the apartment, that nothing could be wanting to complete the happiness of its occupants, unless indeed, they had learned that affluence does always insure this.

"O, Bertha—Bertha!" exclaimed the eldest, as she removed the handkerchief from her face, where the traces of recent tears were plainly visible, "to think, that the calamity we have dreaded of all others, should have at last come upon us,—that of having a step-mother, and one so young, and aunt Mary says she is proud and poor, but very accomplished. It surely was not for love that she married father—as much older as he is—but to become mistress of his home, and to be enabled to partake of the luxuries which necessity has denied her. I can never respect, and never—never love her;" and as she said this, she rose, and going towards her mother's picture, gently raised the veil that covered, it and her tears flowed afresh.

"My own pretty mama," said the little girl, as she ran towards her sister, and twined her arms lovingly around her. "Papa says my new mama is coming to-day, but I will not love her, for she is not gentle and good as my own mama; she is naughty and wicked, for she makes you and Bertha cry, does she not, Ida! O, she is very, very cross. I will not sing to her, nor pick flowers for her, and she shall not hear me say my prayers at night; you and Bertha must do everything for me;" and here the half-unconscious prattler resumed her play, while Ida and Bertha continued to converse upon the cause of all their present trouble.

"An' sure, young leddys, and ye did not know that yer farder is comin' up the hill?" said Kathleen, an Irish woman, who had lived with them many years, and who was looked upon as one of the family, as she thrust the door open without ceremony. "I was looking out on the turnpike, an' I see a rale hape o' dust, an' I think it is he, an' if it beent, why thin, an' sure it is somebody else. But Miss Ida, ye've been crying, dear child; ye've tuk a deal o' trouble to yerselve, but ye must meet the new leddy with smiles, as yer farder will be rale displeased wid ye; come, wipe yer eyes, that's a darling."

"Yes—yes, it is they," said Bertha, as she glanced her eye from the window; "they have turned into the avenue. O, dear Ida! how you look! bathe your eyes quickly, for they will soon be at the door; there, now you look more like yourself; let us hasten down to meet them."

A frail, fair looking girl was the bride of Charles Merton, and as she advanced to meet Ida and Bertha, an almost childish flush stole over her face; but there was that in their bearing that repelled her, and the half uttered words of kindly greeting died upon her lips, and tears sprang to her eyes, as the thought for the first time came home to her heart, that she might be deemed an intruder; but she strove to banish it, unwelcome as it was.

"Where is our little Carrie?" said Mr. Merton, when they were seated in the drawing-room; "how happens this, that she does meet me as usual? I am impatient to see my little pet; you cannot think how much we all love her, Mary," he continued, addressing his young wife, "she is so gentle and winning; but here she comes."

"She is indeed lovely," said Mrs. Merton, as the child came bounding in and climbing upon her father's knee, threw her white, dimpled arms about his neck, imprinting a shower of kisses upon his lips and forehead.

"Carrie, this is your new mamma," said Mr. Merton, gently drawing her towards her; "she is very kind and good, and loves little children very much, go kiss her."

"Never!" said Carrie, opening her blue eyes wider than before, and drawing from her. "I think she is very cross and homely, and I do not want her for my mama, for I don't love her; let me go and and see Ida and here the little girl ran from the room in search of her sisters.

"Carrie—Carrie!" said Mr. Merton; but she was already out of hearing, so glad was she to regain her liberty. "Don't look so sad, Mary," he continued, this is nothing but a childish caprice. I ought to have told you that she is excessively shy of strangers; when she becomes acquainted she will be kind and docile."

When left alone, Mrs. Merton glanced her eye around the elegantly furnished apartments, but it did not bring one ray of pleasure to her heart to feel that she was mistress of so fine an establishment; for hers was not a sordid love, and she would rather have inhabited an humble cottage with Mr. Merton, where she would meet with a cordial, heartfelt welcome, than to have shared all the cold splendor that riches could afford,—and she sighed as she thought of her own peaceful home, and the tenderly cherished ones whom she had left behind. Her love for her husband was pure and deep, and she felt the witness in her own bosom that it was fully reciprocated by him.—And well indeed might he love the fond, confiding being who was henceforth to be the partner of his joys and sorrows. Twenty-eight summers' suns had come and gone over her head, but so youthful was her appearance, that one would have scarce thought her twenty; beauty of a high order was her's; but it did not and could not exceed the beauty of her mind; and it might truly be said of her, that "none knew her but to love her." She would gladly have believed that the restraint which had so pained her was all in her own imagination; but the more she reflected upon it, the more fully did she become convinced that this was not the case; but she wisely resolved to lock the thought in her own bosom, and summoning all her resolution, she commenced making preparations to meet the family at the tea-table, and although tremblingly alive to the delicacy of her situation, she succeeded in throwing off her reserve, and to a careless eye appeared composed and happy.

"An' sure our new leddy is rale swate looking," said Kathleen, to one of her fellow domesties, "and puty as a doll but I guess there'll be a dale o' trouble, sich a young thing; an' sure I would niver take her to be a day older than Miss Ida; and then she's so different from our dear leddy that's gone. O, a sad day that was to my poor old sowl!—I shall never see her like agin an' sure;" and here she drew her rough hand across her eyes, to wipe the tears that the fond recollections of the departed had called from their briny fountain.

Days wore on, and although Mrs. Merton was kind and attentive to the wishes of the family, still it was evident that her efforts to please were looked upon by Ida and Bertha with distrust. If unwittingly she removed a piece of furniture from its wonted place, to the girls it appeared sacrilegious, for there it had remained, occupying the same place that it did previous to their mother's death, and these were assigned them by her own hands. It was not to be wondered at' that the domestics, who were all fond of the girls, should be influenced by their views, and this Mrs. Merton was not long in discovering, as the following incident will show.

The first week of her arrival, owing to poor health she did not venture below stairs to oversee the domestic department; but on the second, having been in the habit of attending to household duties while at home, and finding her time hanging heavily on her hands, she made her appearance in the kitchen. Although it was a warm day, a large fire was burning upon the hearth to no purpose, and as she had been taught to economise, she said in a pleasant way to Nancy—the girl who assisted Kathleen in the kitchen:

"Had you not better lay off a part of that wood! for it seems to be burning to waste."

The girl opened her eyes wide with astonishment, at this request, and replied:

"Why, mam, I do whatever Kathleen tells me, and I'm sure she ought to know best."

Kathleen hearing her name repeated, and not being in a very pleasant mood, made her appearance, and inquired into the matter.

"Why, ye see," said Nancy, "the lady thinks ye are too wasteful with the wood."

"An' indeed,', said Kathleen, whose quick, Irish spirit was aroused by the reflection cast upon her, "ye would be after finding fault wid me, would ye? Menny and menny is the long year I've spent in this kitchen, when our good leddy—the Lord rest her dear sowl—was alive, and niver was the first word o' fault she ever found wid me. Only two or three times a year did she tuk the troubie to come below stairs, an' then she was so swate and pleasant; an' sure, if ye are not satisfied wid me, I can leave ye, although I love the dear leddy's children as well as if they were part wid my own flesh and blood."

Mrs. Merton, as soon as her surprise would allow her to speak, offered some concilitary words to Kathleen, and disappointed and disheartened sought her own apartment, and sinking upon a seat, buried her face in her hands and wept, for she was indeed unhappy.

"If there was only one to smpathize or direct me," she said to herself; "but there is not, for I cannot trouble Charles with it, and besides, he might think it was jealousy in me, for the girls show no lack of respect before him. O, if mother could be with me for a few hours! I must see her and tell her my troubles, or my heart will break."

"Mary," said Mr. Merton, on his return from business that evening, as he seated himself by her side, and caressingly brushed her dark hair from her white brow, "you look pale and sad. I fear you are not happy in your new home, or perhaps you are not well, and it might benefit you to go home a few days and enjoy the country air."

"I should be delighted to go," said Mrs. Merton; "but I feared you would think it selfish in me to wish to go so soon, but as you have so kindly offered, I think I shall accept."

Mrs. Merton, after spending a week at the old homestead, returned, refreshed and strengthened, to her new duties.

"Carrie," said Mrs. Merton, as she came bounding into the room alone, the girls being absent from home, "will you not come and see mama?" The little girl went towards her with evident reluctance, and she gently took her in her arms and imprinted a fond kiss on her warm cheek, and whispered, "does not my little girl love me? come kiss me, and let us be friends."

Unpleasant Bed-Fellows.

MANY years ago, a young man twenty-one years of age, and whom I will call Daniel, was hired to work on a farm by Mr. W——, a man of considerable note as a farmer, in Massachusetts. Mr. W— had a daughter, and a hired girl, both about eighteen years of age; and Daniel being of a steady turn was not talkative enough to suit their fancy; and after trying various plans and tricks, without success, to—as they said—raise his ideas, they caught a large frog, and put it into Daniel's bed. On going to bed, he soon discovered the where-abouts of his bed-fellow, and pitched his frogship out of the window, and never afterwards betrayed the least sign of knowledge in regard to the joke.

About a month afterwards, Daniel found a lot of chestnut burs, nearly as sharp as thistles, and contrived to deposite nearly half a peck in the girls bed; and after the girls went to their room and had time to undress, he took a candle, went to the door and rattled the latch, when the girls put out their light, and jumped into bed, and such a squalling was never heard before. Daniel now opened the door, and stood in it with light in hand.

"Dan, torment your ugly picture; I wish you were as far beyond the light-house as you are on this side," said Sukey.

"Why, what is the matter? have you any frogs there?" said Dan.

"Dan. if you don't shut the door and clear out, I will call Mrs. W——," continued Miss Sukey.

"I will call her myself, if you wish" said he.

"Daniel" said Anna W——," if you will shut the door, and go back to the kitchen, there shall be no more tricks or jokes put upon you, by us, for six months, at least."

Daniel, thinking he had punished the girls enough, shut the door and left them. A few moments after, Sukey came out to light her candle.

"I thought you had gone to bed, Sukey?" said Mrs. W——.

Sukey made no reply, but looked daggers at Dan and quickly returned. After this, the girls put no more tricks upon Dan. He was a steady, faithful man—saved every dollar of his earnings, and six years from that time owned a farm, married Anna W——, and was three years first selectman of the town, which he afterwards represented in the State Legislature.

DYSENTERY AND BOWEL COMPLAINT.—The Baltimore Patriot has the following recipe for these distressing complaints, and strongly reccommends a trial of it:

One pint of clean oats, to be browned the same as coffee, but not ground; put in a clean vessel, with two quarts of water; then let it simmer over the fire until reduced to one quart; when cool decant it off. Dose for a grown person, a common sized tumbler, sweetened with loaf sugar, but no milk or cream.—Three tumblers in almost all cases will afford relief.

FOOL HARDINESS.—As the 6 A. M. train from Philadelphia was passing the cross road at Metuchin at full speed on Saturday, a man on horse back when within a few huudred yards of the track, started his horse under the whip and on the full run, and attempted to cross the track ahead of the train. The horse was struck by the locomotive, and the rider thrown some distance into a pond of water by the side of the road. The train was immediately stopped, and the man, found not to be hurt proceeded on his way.

PLAINFIELD GAZETTE.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Thursday; August 7, 1851.

☞ Mr Albert D. Drake is our authorised agent to receive subscriptions and advertisments.

☞ Mr. E. W. Carr, Third street, Philadelphia, opposite the Exchange, is our authorised agent for that city.

To Correspondents,

H. L. M.—Your note has been received and shall be complied with.

TRAVELLER—Shall appear as soon as possible.

To the Citizens of Plainfield.

We have this week issued a sufficient number of copies of the Gazette, to supply every family in the place, intending to canvass the town in person, the latter part of this or the first of next week. The present number being the second of our issue, we presume that all can form an idea of what the future will be.

Fire Association Meeteng.

At a meeting of the citizens of Plainfield held at Laing's Hall on Tuesday eveuing Aug. 5th. Mr. Elston Marsh was called to the chair. and Mr. Jonathan Cory elected sec.—Mr. Z Webster stated the object of the meeting to be for the purpose of organizing an efficient Fire Association, which was proposed to be effected by forming a voluntary association; the members of which do mutually agree to be taxed by an assessor chosen from their own body, and also if neccessary a Court of Appeal, selected from the members of the association. On motion, a committe of seven was appointed viz. Jas. Leonard, Lewis Runyon, Wm. C. Ayers, Z. Webster, Joel Dunn, Elisha Runyon, Clark Johnson, to district the town, obtain signatures to the association, and report upon the feasibility of the above plan at the next meeting.

The committee were also instructed to resolve the town into a Fire District, for the benefit of the fire department, and report the boundaries of the same at the next meeting.

Moved, that we adjourn to Tuesday evening Aug. 12th. at 8 o.clock at the same place.

☞ The above committe are requested to meet at the house of Wm, C Ayers to night (Wednesday) at 8 o'clock.

We cannot pass over the present era in the history of Plainfield, without urging upon the citizens the necessity, and that too immediately of adopting some measure to promote the safety of the place from a general conflagration; we do not know of a place which has been so highly favored, in respect to fires as has this, but it may not be long ere we will be startled from our beds, by the appalling cry of Fire! Fire! and the whole of our beautiful town or a good portion of it be laid in ashes.

We do not wish to be the chroniclers of an event of this kind, and we presume none of our readers wish it any more than we do.

Then to immediate action, the matter is one not to be delayed, a year may elapse, and possibly not one day before, the dread element shall have completed its work of destruction.

Two Fire Companies are now organized with about forty members each, who are ready to risk their lives, health, and rest in the noble act of rescuing, what? their own property, no; but that of their neighbors, and for what? for paltry gold? no. far from it, but actuated by far nobler feelings the fireman leaves his bed at midnight at the cry of fire, and rushes out to contend with the subtile element; it may be midst the lightning flash, or the driving and pelting of a wintry storm, but what cares he, the thrill of danger contained in that cry, banishes from his eyes and thoughts all sense of other elements than the one with which it is his delight to contend for the mastery! comfort is the last thought of a thorough fireman, often drenched by water, often scorched by fire, he still contends, inch by inch for the mastery and at last when it would seem as if human nature could sustain no more he conquers the subtill elements.

Shall such be the name which our firemen shall gain, if so, we would urge again upon the citizens of Plainfield to yield their hearty support. Those who do not wish to unite with the companies, put your hands into your pockets and encourage by money those who are willing for no pay, no honour, to risk their lives to save your property from the devouring element, it is better to give your portion now, than to lose hundreds or thousands at some future day. Yes, but I am insured say some, well, suppose that you are insured in a Mutual Company, you are not insured for full value, or if you are, you had better for the sake of economy, pay twenty Dollars or more for the purpose of putting in proper order the engines and apparatus of the fire department, than to be obliged to pay the full amount of your note to the insurance company, to meet the losses upon perhaps other property than your own.

Yes but says one, let citizens do fire duty. Let us suppose a case, it is midnight, and all around is wrapt in silence except the roaring of the wintry wind and the pelting of the driving snow and hail, the streets are full of drifts, when you are awakened from a sound sleep by the cry of fire, you rush to the window, it is at a distance, you do not wish to expose yourself to the elements, you retire to your beds, but, perhaps not to sleep; you arise on the morning and your first enquiry is, where, and what was the fire last night; it was Mr. A—s! did any of the engines get there? yes, but they were so out of order that they were comparatively of no use, and Mr. A, has lost not only his house which was insured, but sad to relate none of his family escaped but himself; Now we candidly ask, is it as probable that such a case would occur were the engines in order for use at a moments warning, and manned by men whose delight is to serve others by their experience.

☞ We notice, that the new Rail-road Depot in this place is nearly completed and is an ornament to our town, as well as to the road to which it belongs.

While upon this subject, we would respectfully urge, upon the consideration of the Company, the propriety of placing upon the road, more trains, as the increase in travel has been much greater than the amount of facilities for conveyance.

Let a train leave here at half past nine A.M. and connect, with the Philadelphia train going south at Elizabethtown. which train. might also connect with the Philadelphia train going north, at half past ten, or by the boat at eleven, and return by the train which leaves New York at seven o'clock per N.J. R.Road.

This arrangement would accommodate a large class of our citizens, and we doubt not would be profitable to the company.

Correspondence of the Gazette.

MR. EDITOR:—I regret that ONE sentence of my last letter, should have been misconstrued.

In speaking of the uncharitable feelings existing between the churches, I had reference to certain members of the congregations, and not to the Clergy. I would suggest that those who have misunderstood me, should read the paragraph again, and they will perceive the error they have committed, in accusing me of such an act. I repeat that my object in writing, is merely to hold up a mirror, in which 'Mrs Gosssip,' 'Madam Chronicle,' 'Mesdames,' 'Tittle-tattle,' 'Trie-trac,' and other members of that clique, may see them themselves reflected; and thus have an opportunity of removing the blemishes that render them so disgusting.

If I sometimes fail to convey my ideas, for want of proper words to express them, I ask your indulgence; and beg you to attribute the error to the HEAD, rather than the HEART, of AMERICANA.

Letters to a City Cousin.—No. 2.

PLAINFIELD, Aug. 5. 51.

DEAR COUSIN:

Allow me to introduce gossip number two, under the sobriquet of "Madam Chronicle." This lady is well "posted up" respecting all misdeeds, committed by her neighbors, during the past ten years.—Every act worthy of commendation is buried in oblivion; while those faults or follies, which gentle "Mercy" would conceal, or forget, this "Harpy" treasures up in her memory, embalmed in bitter malice and spleen, for the purpose of emblazoning them to every stranger who becomes a resident of this village; for instance, she can tell you that "Mr such a one saved so much, twelve years since, by availing himself of the benefit of the Bankrupt-law"—"Mr. so and so shamefully cheated certain parties with whom he was connected in business seven years ago." The lady can also give you, the pedigree of every family in the vicinity of Plainfield.

As "Madam Chronicle" is possessed of a very retentive memory, she is able to report the characteristic traits, (provided they are discreditable,) of perhaps fifty persons in the village; from number one, "who has an inordinate passion for dress, and actually uses ROUGE," down to number forty nine, "who is addicted to gambling, and champaigne.

I presume you wonder why I listen to such a tirade!

Now suppose for instance I call on "Madam Chronicle," and immediately after exchanging the compliments of the day, she enquires, "have you heard the news?" my reply is, "nothing particularly interesting," the lady then, pitying my ignorance begins to detail the latest scandal, and finding no interruption, (because I am afraid to reply, least when the latter repeats the story to the next visitor' she should add, "Americana made such and such remarks on the affair,") she is pleased with the patience of her auditor, and pours forth a torrent of invective, satire, and venom, thus you perceive how difficult it is to avoid such scenes; unless perhaps, I had moral courage enough to say; "Madam Chronicle, I disapprove of the course you are pursuing, your remarks occasion a great deal of annoyance, if not actual trouble; and it would be more appropriate for a person of your age, and position to act the part of a "Mentor" than that of a 'Talebearer' Well admitting I assumed so much authority, what would be the consequence! nothing but the certainty of having my own reputation injured by her foul aspersions. Recollect too, that I do not occupy that position in society, which would authorise such a liberty.

Fortunately there are but few persons so severe in their remarks, as "Madam Chronicle." I believe the gossips by common consent, yield her the precedence; therefore I should have presented her to you before "Mrs. Gossip."

* * * * * * * * The principal men of the Village, propose having a "Public Library" in a few months, and then it is to be hoped the inhabitants generally will acquire a taste for literature, as it would have a tendency to correct the habit of tattling; for of course, when peoples' minds are cultivated and refined they will not condescend to perform the office of scandal-mongers, but will aspire to becoming at least, respected citizens, if not ornaments to society,

The Minister of the "2d. Presbyterian Church," lately preached a sermon on "Slander," which was really excellent, but not relished by some who suspected he was drawing their portraits. To Mr. W's. efforts I would add my feeble energies; and Heaven be my witness, that it is not malice, or revenge, that actuates me in writing on this subject, but merely a desire to assist in eradicating an evil, which is destroying the basis of social intercourse, and engendering hatred, mistrust and estrangement; let us hope however that there will soon be a reformation in this respect, followed by FRIENDLY reuinions of the villagers where instead of defaming their neighbors, there will be an exchange of refined sentiments and kindly regard.

P. S. I fear it will be impossible for me to write again, as my good Father, has a faint idea of who "Americana" is. Should his suspicions be confirmed, he will at once VETO further communicatiom, for he would rather see me wield the BROOM, than the PEN; if however I escape detection, you may expect a series of letters from, Yours truly

AMERICANA.

New Publications.

The Geology of the Bass Rock by Hugh Miller, is the title of an interesting work, just published by Robert Carter & Brothers, 285 Broadway, it is divided into 3 parts, viz: Geology of the Bass by Miller, Civil and Ecclesiastical History of the Bass, by T M'Crie, D, D., and the Martyrs of the Bass.

☞ The American mail steamship Atlantic, Capt. West, the pioneer of the Collins line, arrived at this port Sunday morning, She left Liverpool at a quarter past three o'clock on Wednesday afternoon the 23d ult., and reached her wharf at seven o'clock Sunday morning, making the passage in ten days fifteen hours and forty-five minutes.

THE COMPASSES.—Charity and faith make up one perfect pair of compases, that can take the true latitude of a christian heart: faith is the one foot, pitched in the centre immoveably; while charity walks about in a perfect circle of beneficence: these two never did, never can go asunder. Warrant me your love, I dare warrant your faith.—Bishop Hall.

HAPPINESS,—Wherever lies the path of duty, wherever you may be most useful, there the Almighty will make you most happy. Happiness is not the offspring and growth of indolent repose in this world: self-denying exercise is necessary to its production. The imagination of a state where everything will be to our taste is pure folly. We must be content to take our share in the ills of life, and look for our chief happiness in this world from seeking to do our duty.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

ANOTHER FIRE IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Three Millions Worth of Property Destroyed, and Several Lives Lost.

FURTHER FROM HAVANNA.

Progress of the Cuban Revolution, &c. &c. &c.

The Intelligence from California.

NEW-ORLEANS, July 31. 1851.

The steamship Alabama, which arrived here to day from Vera Cruz, brought advices from California to the 1st of July.

Another tremendous fire had occurred in San Francisco, by which ten squares of the city had been laid in ashes, and three millions of dollars worth of property destroyed.

It is also stated that a number of persons perished in the flames.

The origin of the fire was believed to have been the work of incendiaries.

The Cuban Revolution.

Later advices received here from Havana, state that Trinidad and Villa Clara had both declared against the government, and in favor of the insurgents.

A despatch just received from Cincinnaii, Ohio, announce that large bodies of young men in that region are awaiting an opportunity to join the revolutionists in Cuba.

A Model Conductor.

Those who have travelled much upon Rail-Roads have witnessed, if not experienced, the unaccommodating and often abusive conduct of the Conductors and it is a pleasure to record anything to relieve the profession, from that characteristic.—We give below a correspondence which passed between a number of the travellers, on the Central Road, and its Conductor Mr. Shattuck, on the occasion of their presenting him, with an elegant GOLD WATCH, and CHAIN; a compliment well bestowed, and as well deserved.

July 1851

Mr. L. H. SHATTUCK

SIR—The undersigned have the pleasure, of presenting to you a gold watch and its appendages, as an evidence, of the appreciation in which they hold your gentlemanly deportment to themselves, and your polite attention to their families, as well as your general efficiency, in the discharge of your duties as Conductor, of the passenger train of the Central Rail Road of New Jersey.

Very respectfully your Obt. Servants.

[Signed by a number of friends.]

Inscription engraved upon the watch.

"To Mr. L. H. Shattuck of the Central Rail Road of N.J, from a number of his travelling friends, July 1851.

White House Aug. 1 1851

Gentlemen

Please accept my sincere thanks, for your valuable gift, valuable for the costly materials of which it is made, but to me much more valuable as a token of your regard. As I have never done more than it was my duty to do, I cannot but regard this as a testimonial of your liberality and friendship, which I shall ever appreciate.—But gentlemen, I required not this testimonial, to convince me of your kind feelings toward me, your frequent friendly recognition long since convinced me that you were my friends.

It is a source of joy to me to know that while endeavoring to discharge my duties as a servant to the travelling public, I have had your approbation, and in future it will be my pleasure to do what I can (consistent with other duties,) to make your transit over this road, expeditious and pleasant

I remain your ob't servant.

L. H. SHATTUCK.

☞ Although we had not the pleasure of contributing towards the valuable gift in question, we can say with truth, that we have never in all our rail road travels, (and we have travelled some) met with so much polite attention from any conductor as we have from Mr. Shattuck. To ladies travelling alone, his attentions are at once easy and gentlemanly, while upon this subject Mr. Shattuck will please accept our thanks for services rendered to a member of our family, which perhaps he has forgotten but will be remembered by us.

By Request.

BLOOMERS.

To the universal girldom in long skirts.

Cut off those ugly skirts girls,
They're only in the way;
And when you make a whirl, g'rls,
And come the quick chasse;
There'll be no mud a-flying, girls,
Or stockings grimmed with dirt;
Then cease this useless crying, girls,
And off at once the skirt.

With Turkish pants and frock, girls,
You're masters of the State;
To skip and hop and run, girls.
With joy and ease elate.
Then where's the naughty man, girls,
Can catch you in a race?
There's not one lives that can, girls,
Unless it is by "grace."
Then don the pretty pants, girls,
And throw those skirts away,
And as through life you prance, girls,
You'll bless the changing day.

BRAVE CONDUCT.—James Darling, a passenger in the ship Marathon, which arrived here on the 31st ult., performed an act on the 14th, while on the passage, deserving of mention. James Farrell somehow or other got overboard, and Darling plunged into the water after him, and after a desperate struggle. rescued him. Unfortunately, Farrell died afterwards from the effects. But this does not detract from the brave conduct of the young man who perilled his own life to save that of a fellow-being.

DEATH IS THE TERMINATION,

But too often, of what, in its inception, was lightly treated, and fatally neglected as a common cold. The snow-ball does not increase faster by rolling, than does danger from an unchecked Cough or Cold. When inflamation once seizes upon the delicate tissue of the Lungs, the progress of fire is scarcely swifter or more fatal than that of Pulmonary Disease, through its various stages, to its terminus, death! Yet it may be arrested in all cases by a prompt resort to Dr. Rogers' Sprup of Liverwort, Tar, and Canchalagua. To this vital truth many among the first men in the land, have appended their attesting signatures. Read their testimony in the pamphlet in the hands of Agents. You are also referred to the advertisement in another column. [142

The Workingman's Day.

Among the existing varieties of the genus philanthropist—benevolent men bent on bettering the condition of the masses—there is a variety who would fain send out our working people to the country on Sabbaths, to become happy and innocent in smelling primroses, and stringing daisies on grass stalks. An excellent scheme theirs, if they but knew it, for sinking a people into ignorance and brutality,—for filling a country with gloomy workhouses with unhappy paupers. 'Tis pity rather that the institution of the Sabbath, in its economic bearings, should not be better understood by the utilitarian. The problem which it furnishes is not particularly difficult, if one could be but made to understand, as a first step in the process, that it is really worth solving. The mere animal that has to pass six days of the week in hard labor, benefits greatly by a seventh day of mere animal rest and enjoyment; the repose according to its nature proves of signal use to it, just because it is repose according to its nature. But man is not a mere animal, what is best for the ox and the ass is not best for him; and in order to degrade him into a poor unintellectual slave, over whom tyranny, in its caprice, may trample rough-shod, it is but necessary to tie him down, animal-like, during his six working days, to hard, engrossing labor, and to convert the seventh into a day of frivolous, unthinking action. History speaks with much emphasis on the point. The old despotic Stuarts were tolerable adepts in the art of kingcraft, and knew well what they were doing when they backed with their authority the book of sports, The merry unthinking serfs, who, early in the reign of Charles the First, danced on Sabbaths round the Maypole, were afterwards the ready tools of despotism, and fought that England might be enslaved. The Ironsides, who, in the cause of civil and religious freedom, bore them down, were stanch Sabbatarians.

In no history, however, is the value of the Sabbath more strikingly illustrated, than in that of the Scotch people, during the seventeenth and the larger portion of the eighteenth centuries. Religion and the Sabbath were their sole instructors, and this in times so little favorable to the cultivation of the mind, so darkened by persecution and stained with blood, that, in at least the earlier of these centuries, we derive our knowledge of the character and amount of the popular intelligence mainly from the death testimonies of our humble martyrs, here and there corroborated by the incidental evidence of writers such as Burnet. In these noble addresses from prison and the scaffold—the composition of men drafted by oppression almost at random from out the general mass—we see how vigorously our religious people had learned to think, and how well to give their thinking expression. In the quieter times which followed the revolution, the Scottish peasantry existed as at once the most provident and intellectual in Europe; and a moral and instructed people pressed outwards beyond the narrow bounds of their country, and rose into offices of trust and importance in all nations of the world. There were no societies for the diffusion of useful knowledge in those days. But the Sabbath was kept holy; it was a day from which every dissipating frivolity was excluded by a stern sense of duty. The popular mind, with weight imparted to it by its religious earnestness, and direction by the pulpit addresses of the day, expatiated on matters of grave import, of which the tendency was to concentrate and strengthen, not scatter and weaken the faculties; and the secular cogitations of the week came to bear, in consequence, a Sabbath-day stamp of depth and solidity. The one day in the seven struck the tone for the other six. Our modern apostles of popular instruction rear up no such men among the masses, as were developed under the Sabbatarian system in Scotland. Their aptest pupils prove but the loquacious gabbers of their respectable workshops,—shallow superficialists, that bear on the surface of their minds a thin diffusion of their ill-remembered facts and crude theories; and rarely indeed do we see them rising in the scale of society: they become Socialists by hundreds, and Chartists by thousands, and get no higher. The disseminator of mere useful knowledge takes aim at the popular ignorance; but his inapt and unscientific gunnery does not include in its calculations the parabolic curve of man's spiritual nature; and so, aiming direct at the mark, he aims too low, and the charge falls short.—Hugh Miller.

Extracts from Opinions of the Press.

Sacred Scenes and Characters—By Rev. J T Headley.—This work may very properly be considered a companion to the Sacred Mountains by the same author. Its object is to illustrate and render more life-like the Sacred Writings. It is not the author's design to supersede the Bible; but his wish is to excite a solicitude to obtain, and to become intimately acquainted and perfectly familiar with its history, doctrines, and laws; to know its truth to imbibe its spirit, feel its power, and partake of its salvation; in a word, to prize in some measure, as it deserves, this treasure which is indeed beyond price. We predict for it a circulation far beyond any of the author's former works.—The News. Jan. 7th,

Sacred Scenes and Characters—By Headley, author of the Sacred Mountains, &c.—This work will add greatly to the reputation of the author. In literary merit, it more than equals his Sacred Mountains. Mr. Headley excels in his glowing style and vivid descriptions. His works are a rich treasury of all the sublimity of thought, moving tenderness of passion, and vigorous strength of expressions which are to be found in all the languages by which mortals declare their minds.—Daily Globe, Jan 8th

Rambles and Sketches.—By Headley.—We have not for a long time sat down to a book with more pleasing anticipations, of found those anticipations more fully realized than in the perusal of the work before us—and we know it will be hailed with gratification by the many readers of the talented author His Napolean and his Marshalls was, perhaps as popular, and found at least as many readers as any book that can be mentioned. We think the Rambles and Sketches are destined to be as popular at least as any of his previous works. There is not a dull chapter in the work, filled as it is with an infinite variety. The author has ample room and verge enough for the employment of his fine talents to great advantage—and most successfully has he accomplished the task. The biographical sketch of the author is interesting and well considered, and adds much to the value of the book, which is got up in a very neat and attractive style by the publisher.—Portland Transcript, Dec. 15th.

Mr. Headley is one of the most promising writers of this country, and we have here one of his best books—one on which he can rest his fame. It possesses the unfatiguing charms of perfect simplicity and truth. There is a graceful frankness pervading the composition, which engages the interest of the reader in the author as well as in the subject His rambles about Rome, Paris, and London, exhibit a thousand lively traits of an ingenuous nature, upon which a man of taste will delight to linger We predict for this a sale equal to that of any of the authors works.—New York News.

The collection is one of which no author need be ashamed. It consists, indeed, of some of Mr. Headley's most brilliant and highly finished compositions—of those specimens of his abilities by which he may be judged with the greatest safety to his fame as a world-painter and thinker.—Tribune, Dec. 17. 49.

N. B the above Books will be forwarded to order, at the prices mentioned, free of postage, to any part of the United States, on the receipt of orders, with the money. Money may be sent by mail at my risk.

ARRIVAL OF

DR. C. W. ROBACK,

At New-York.

THE celebrated Dr. C. W. Roback from Sweeden, Professor of Astrology, Astronomy, Phrenology and Geomancy, having just arrived from Philadelphia, where he has met with the most extraordinary success for the last four years, offers now his services to the citizens of New-York and its vicinity. C. W. Roback, being the seventh son of the seventh son, and having made Astrology his exclusive study, since the early age of fifteen years, enjoys advantages derived from travelling and reflection, that are possessed by none in this country or in Europe, and being so gifted by nature, and having cultivated those blessed gifts, he is prepared to adopt them to the following uses and the immediate consummation of the following Topics:—He can be consulted with at his office, or by lettter, if prepaid, and he is prepared to make use of his power on any of the following topics:—Business of all descriptions; travelling by land or sea; courtships; advice given for their successful accomplishment; speculating in stocks, merchandise or real estate; the recovering of legacies in dispute; the purchasing of tickets, and the safety of ships at sea. He also has had the honor of receiving a certificate from the Honorable C. John Bernadotte, formerly King of Sweden, which it will give him great pleasure in showing to those who favor him with a call; he also offers his services respecting health, wealth, and marriage, love affairs, journeys, law suits, difficulty in business, fraud, sickness and death; past present and future events, and all the concerns of life, and invites all to call who are afflicted corporally or mentally. Terms—Ladies 50 cents. Gentlemen $1. Nativities calculated and read in full, according to the oracles and masculine signs, ladies $1; gentlemen $1 50. Nativities calculated according to Geomancy, for ladies $2, in full $3. Gentlemen $3, in full $5. Persons at a distance can have their nativities drawn by sending the date of the day of their birth. All letters containing the above fee will receive immediate attention, and nativities will be sent to any part of the United States, written on durable paper. All letters, on any of the above topics, if post-paid will be answered gratis. His office is at 6 White-street, two blocks below Broadway.

NEW GOODS! NEW GOODS!

Constantly arriving at the

CHEAP

DRY GOODS STORE.

THE undersigned fully appreciating past favors would hereby call the attention of their friends and a generous public, that while Goods are constantly forsaking our shelves and counters, by reason of the ready inclinations of customers; the deficiency is more than realized by the constant arrival of new, cheaper and more desirable goods—to which we pledge ourselves that for quality, stile and especially price cannot any where be surpassed (Brunswick not excepted)—to satisfy all that the above is correct, call at ROCAP & SHEPPARD'S,

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S

TRICOPHEROUS,

or Medicated Compound.

Not a family in the land should be without a supply of this inestimable preparation which is no less valuable as an immediate and unfailing remedy for diseases of the skin, the muscles and the glands, and all external injuries, than as a means of eradicating scurf and dandruff, renewing the hair and preventing its loss, and imparting to the fibrous mass a rich luxuriance and a brilliant lustre.

Throughout the length and breadth of the United States the Tricopherous has received the sanction and approval of the Faculty, and Professor BARRY now holds, and is prepared to exhibit to all who desire to see them, original testimonials from eminent medical men of the most conclusive character. The instantaneous effect of this great counter-irritant in reducing external inflammation, however fiery and by whatever cause produced, is striking and extraordinary. The superficial absorbents which acting like so many syphons, take up whatever is applied to the surface, whether it be balm or poison, convey this gentle, stimulating, yet anti-inflammatory fluid into the external circulation supplying thereto a healthful tone, and enabling the vessels of the skin to throw off by evaporation through the pores the materies morbi or elements of fever. By this process the irritating principle which occasions pimples rashes, blotches, erysipelas, hettle rash, prickly heat, scald head and which is equally active in cuts, bruises, burns scalds and the bites and stings of insects, is rapidly expelled, the pain and itching are alleviated; the redness fades; and a complete cure is invariably accomplished. The same stimulating property which restores health, vigor and vegetative power to the scalp, and through the scalp to the hair, enables the skin upon any part of the body to relieve itself from disease. The whole action of the Tricopherous is in harmony with the well understood principle that nothing but healthful external stimulus will determine the fluids to the surface and enable the exhausted and torpid vessels which have been conquered by inflammation, to conquer in their turn, and put the fiery intruder to flight.

The cheapness of the Tricopherous places it within reach of the poorest—its varied uses and acknowledged efficacy render it indispensable to all.

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York; and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States Canada, Mexico, West Indies Great Britain, France, &c.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequent occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels; such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

WHEN IT OCCURS.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt.

The bowel having protruded as a rupture, or burst and known by the external LUMP OR TUMOR, should be cartfully and thoroughly returned into the abdomen and retained there by means of a suitable instrument, as a TRUSS BANDAGE, or SUPPORTER. The application of such mechanical aid in the relief and final cure of hernia, is a matter requiring much special study, skill and experience not only in the mechanism of the body, but also in that of instruments as relating to their application; for apart from the different methods of producing pressures, the disease calls for exact adaptation in the TRUSS PAD or pledget used for the purpose of retaining a hernia:

SUCH IS TRUTH.

The above truths are now being appreciated by the public having been brought particularly to their notice through the recent improvements made by Frederick M. Butler in Supporter and Hernial pads and introduced by the Hull's Truss Office, in their treatment for the relief and radical cure of Hernia. Over two year experience has now been had in the application of BUTLER'S recently patented Truss Pads—proving through numerous cases, that from their peculiar form and bearing they lie over and up on the inguinal canal, dislodge the bowels thoroughly, contract the rings or natural openings, thicken the muscular walls, and thereby effect a cure.

The office is provided with experienced male and female attendants, who apply instruments direct to the person of patients, and the public may rely upon that care being made in the application which will most likely tend to the relief and cure of the several complaints coming under their treatment, whether it be Hernia, Prolapsus Uteri, Prolapsus Ani, Piles, or other similar weakness, requiring the mechanical support of a Truss, Supporter, Belt, Braces or Bandage. HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE,
4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St Paul's Church, New-York.

FREDERICK M. BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The male and female departments are separate and distinct. Children trussed when only two years old and invariably cured. [145is.

JOHN PRICE,

OPTICAN, AND MANUFACTURER OF

GOLD AND SILVER SPECTACLES.

WOULD respectfully inform the citizens of Plainfield and the public generally that he has removed his Store to 345 Broad-st.

opposite the City hotel, Newark,

And that he has on hand an extensive assortment of GOLD, SILVER AND STEEL SPECTACLES, Of every description. Gold, Silver, Steel and Tortoise Shell reading Glasses, also Hand, Quizzing, Opera and magnifying Glasses, in great variety: Telescopes, Perceptives, Goggles, Eye preservers; a first rate assortment of PEBBLES' Double Concave Glasses, Cataract Glassess, &c. Particular attention is called to

PRICE'S PREMIUM PRISCOPIC SPECTACLES.

Being made of the finest materials, which through their high polish and true ground, produce the purest vision and are recommended by competent judges as being decidedly the best and most natural in their effect of all others, for preserving and improving the sight in continued reading, writing, sewing, &c. Persons with weak eyes can be fitted with Glasses which will greatly benefit and not strain the sight. Short-sighted persons and such as have been operated upon for Cataract, can also be suited.

J. P. would be happy to see at his store all persons that have found difficulty in getting Glasses that were adapted to their sight, as the most difficult cases are easily fitted upon a fair trial. Any person purchasing Spectacles at his Store, can exchange them if not well suited, any time within three months, without extra charge. The subscriber has also on hand a large assortment of Silver Spoons, Prince Albert, Threaded and plain patterns, Butter Knives, Sugar Spoons, Mustard Spoons, Salt Spoons, Cream spoons, &c. Also heavy Silver Thimbles, Gold Pens, Paper Weights, Silver-plated, plain and threaded, Table Preserve, Tea and Salt Spoons, Plated Forks, &c [179.

BABY JUMPER

AND

WALKER COMBINED.

The subscriber having invented and made application for a patent for the above article would hereby call the attention of the public to its superiority over all others.

It forms a neat article of furniture, somewhat resembling an ottoman; it being upon castors, the little occupant can move it in all directions around the room with the utmost ease. The top opens by a spring and then closes around under the child's arms and locks. The child sits in an upright position upon a saddle or seat, stuffed perfectly soft, bearing no weight on his arms, with its feet resting upon the floor. The child can easily raise the article, and as there is a spring in each leg it can use it as a jumper for its amusement, or push itself around the room, thus learning to walk without other assistance. As the springs buoys the child up, thereby preventing too much weight upon its feet, it gradually learns to use its legs and soon learns to walk. The child can in no manner receive injury; a trial or inspection will satisfy the most skeptical of its superior utility.

Prices from $5 to $10 each, according to style of trimmings &c. Orders punctually attended to by

E. RICE, Cor. Broad and Mechanic-sts, near the Depot, ELIZABETHTOWN, N. J.

☞ Also for sale at 240 Broadway, New-York.

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

Among the numerous discoveries science has made in this generation to facilitate the business of life—increase its enjoyment, and even prolong the term of human existence, none can be named of more real value to mankind, than this contribution of Chemistry to the Healing Art. A vast trial of its virtues throughout this broad country, has proven beyond a doubt, that no medicine or combination of medicine yet known, can so surely control and cure the numerous varieties of pulmonary disease which have hitherto swept from our midst thousands and thousands every year. Indeed, there is now abundant reason to believe a Remedy has at length been found which can be relied on to cure the most dangerous affections of the lungs. Our space here will not permit us to publish any proportion of the cures affected by its use, but we would present the following opinions of eminent men, and refer further enquiry to the circular which the Agent below named, will always be pleased to furnish free wherein are full particlars, and indisputable proof of these facts.

From the President of Amherst College, the celebrated PROFESSOR HITCHCOCK.

"James C. Ayer—Sir: I have used your CHERRY PECTORAL in my own case of deep-seated Bronchitis, and am satisfied from its chemical constitution, that it is an admirable compound for the relief of laryngial and bronchial difficulties. If my opinion as to its superior character can be of any service, you are at liberty to use it as you think proper.

EDWARD HITCHCOCK, L. L. D.,
From the widely celebrated

PROFESSOR SILLIMAN, M. D., L. L. D., Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, &c., Yale College, Member of the Lit, Hist. Med. Phil. and Scientific Societies of America and Europe.

"I deem the CHERRY PECTORAL an admirable composition from some of the best articles in the Materia Medica, and a very effective remedy for the class of diseases it is intended to cure."

New Haven, Ct., Nov. 1 1849.

MAJOR PATTISON, President of the S. C. Senate, states he has used the CHERRY PECTORAL with wonderful success, to and inflammation of the lungs.

From one of the first Physicans in Maine.

SACO, Me., April 26, 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell. Dear Sir: I am now constantly using your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, and prefer it to any other medicine for pulmonary complaints. From observation of many severe cases, I am convinced it will cure coughs, colds, and diseases of the lungs, that have put to defianice all other remedies.

I invariably recommend its use in cases of consumption, and consider it much the best remedy known for that disease.

Respectfully yours, I. S. CUSHMAN, M. D.

FOR FEMALES AD MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impotency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cord al cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive, and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without offspring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

It also possesses the unrivalled qualities of curing incipient Consumption, and I have administered it with great success to patients who have sought our delightful climate for the restoration of their health and the result is that a medicine has been added to the catalogue for the cure of insipient consumption.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co., of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper.

WONDERFUL CURES!

AND

CANCHALAGUA;

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to

CONSUMPTION.

NOTHING LIKE IT.

CURE FOLLOWS CURE!

READ THE EVIDENCE!!

The above invaluable Medicine has now been before the public sufficiently long to have its virtues thoroughly tested. It has been used by all classes of the community, under every possible variety of circumstances, and has everywhere proved itself a most powerful and efficient Cough Medicine. Lung Diseases of all kinds, yield to its influence, as mists pass away upon the rising of the Sun. This is no fiction. We give you below, letters from persons who are now living in the state of New York, and who declare, over their own signatures, all that we could possibly desire to say in its favor. Those who can read their statements and yet remain incredulous, must be beyond the reach of human testimony.

A LOVELY YOUNG LADY.

CURED OF CONSUMPTION!

☞ The following is from the pen of WM. H. LEVISON, Esq., the distinguished Editor of the U. S. Military and Naval Argus under date New York, Jan. 26, 1850 What could be more conclusive?

"It is seldom we permit ourselves to occupy a space in these columns to speak in praise of any article in the patent medicine way; but when we see the life of a fellow-creature saved by the use of any medicine whatever, we consider it as our right, if not a duty, to give a simple statement of facts, that others may, in like manner be benefitted. The case which has induced us to pen this article, was that of a young lady of our acquaintance, who, by frequent exposure to the night air, contracted a cold, which settled on the Lungs before its ravages could be stayed. (This occurred two years ago this winter.) Various remedies were used, but with very little effect or benefit. The cough grew worse, with copious expectoration, and the sunken eye, and pale, hollow cheek, told plainly that PULMONARY DISEASE was doing its worst on her delicate frame. The family physician was consulted and although he would not admit to the young lady that she really had the CONSUMPTION, yet he would give no encouragement as to a cure. At this crisis, her mother was persuaded to make use of a bottle of Dr. Rogers' Compound Syrup of LIVEWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA and we are happy to state, she was perfectly cured in less than three months by this medicine alone, after even hope was destroyed. It is useless to comment on such a case as this, for the truth will reach where polished fiction never can. If any doubt the authenticity of this statement, let them call at this office.—*U. S. COUGH AND DISEASE

OF 14 MONTHS STANDING.

CURED.

AFTER BEING GIVEN UP TWICE

BY EMINENT PHYSICIANS!

Albany, June 9th, 1849.

Messrs. A. L. Scovill & Co.—I herewith forward to you a Certificate of a Cure, effected by your Compound Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua The Cough and expectoration was of fourteen months standing, and had baffled the skill of several of our eminent physicians in New York, Albany, and Cooperstown. I am the person in whom the cure was effected, and as I had previously no faith in patent medicines, I have since tried it on others, and have become satisfied of its value. Mine was as GREAT A CURE as ever was performed, as I had, during my sickness, been given up twice by my physicians. I have now commenced my business, after taking, I think about eight bottles.

Yours, repectfully, THOS. C. FAULDER.

BLEEDING AT THE LUNGS CURED.

☞ SEE HOW PROMPTLY IT ACTS!

Statement of Mr. A. Lang, Baker, No 388 Pearl street, N. Y. A few days before last Christmas, I was taken unwell, and soon commenced bleeding freely at the Lungs. I called in a Homœopathic Physician, but his medicine did not seem to help me. I read your advertisement, and thought I would try Dr. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA. Before I had takea up the third bottle, by bleeding had stopped, my Cough was gone, and I felt well as usual. My health is now good. I consider it a most excellent medicine, and cordially reccommend it to my friends. [This statement was made to the Proprietors, March 12th 1850.]

☞ This whole paper might be filled with letters, similar to the above, from those who have been cured.

THE TIME TO DIE.

When would I die?—when I no more
Am useful on this mortal shore?
When I no more shall feel or know
The joy to soothe another's wo;
When all my work on earth is done—
Then would I greet my spirit's home

When would I die? I have no choice.
In Autumn's wail, or Spring's glad voice,
If I my Savior's presence feel
When death's cold chill shall o'er me steal,
Then I would say, "Thy will be done,"
And greet with joy my spirit's home.

When would I die? when God shall will—
When through His mercy I fulfil
The mission He appoints for me,
While wafting o'er life's changeful sea;
When I the welcome gaol have won—
Then would I greet my spirit's home.

When would I die? I cannot say,
In winter bleak, or summer gay;
When life's brief day is in its prime,'
Or when its sun shall low decline;
If through earth's pilgrimage I share
Our Father's watchful love and care.

When would I die? 'Tis naught to me
To God I yield my destiny;
But through His grace, while here I stay,
I'll try to walk in wisdom's way;
Then, when the parting hour shall come,
With joy I'll greet my spirit's home.

THE STEP-MOTHER.

BY HARRIET N. HATHAWAY.

Concluded.

"I will kiss you, for father said I must, and he will not call me his sweet pet if I do not; but I can't love you, because you are wicked, and make Ida an Bertha cry all the time; my own mama did not use to do so. I am sorry you've come back again be because my brother Charlie is coming home and I'm afraid he will cry too, and will not play with me."

"O Carrie—Carrie!" said Mrs. Merton, gazing sorrowfully into the child's face, "how little, how very little the girls know of me. O, if they could only read my heart, they would find no cause for distrust; but it must be thus for the present; time, perhaps, may reveal the truth to them, and this thought shall cheer me on to the faithful performance of my duty."

"O Charlie has come! Charlie has come!" shouted Carrie, with her face radient with smiles, as a carriage stopped, and a beautiful boy of twelve years alighted from it, bounded up the steps, caught the little girl in his arms, and well nigh smothered her with kisses; then as if a new idea had stuck him, released her suddenly, and went on the run through the long hall, where he was met by Mrs Merton. A look of pleasant surprise flitted over his face, as she said, in a pleasant tone:

"I suppose this is our little boy, whom we have been so anxiously expecting."

"How do you like our new mama?" said Ida to Charlie a few hours after his return.

"How do I like her? I love her dearly already, she is so near like our own mama; and her voice sounded just as hers used to, as she placed her hand so gently on my head, and whispered, 'I hope our Charlie is a good boy.'"

"Just like her," said Bertha: "one would think she wonld have more respect for the memory of our mother than to speak in that way. Of course you are a good boy. I found her at mother's drawers, the other day, rummaging over the things, trying to find something to suit herself, I suppose, for she blushed when she saw me, and instantly left the chamber."

"I don't think it just right," said Ida to Bertha, "to try to prejndice Charlie against her. You know father would be greatly displeased with us were he to know it, and I have been really sorry that we have talked so much before Carrie."

"About Carrie, I do not think we were to blame for who'd ever thought of such a little thing's understanding what we were saying?" said Bertha.

"Well, I am half sorry that we have been so distant towards her, for she is really very unhappy. I have found her crying a good many times, and have you not noticed how pale she is to-day? and at the dinner-table, every once in a few moments, she would press her hand upon her temples, and she looked so sad that I could not help pitying her."

"I don't know but it is wrong, but I am sure I don't love her, and I never shall, and I don't believe in being deceitful, Ida; but now that you have mentioned it, I believe I did think she did not look quite well."

Mrs. Merton did not appear with the family at the tea table, that night, owing to a slight indisposition, as she termed it; but during the night lights might have been seen glimmering in different parts of the house, and long before morning, Mr. Merton entertered the girl's sleeping apartment, looking troubled and alarmed, and rousing Ida, he said:

Your mother is very sick! will you not come below and have a care, while I go for a physician? I dare not trust a servant, for a slight delay may prove fatal."

Ida rose, pale and trembling, and threwing on her morning-gown hurriedly, hastened to her mother's room, and her feelings amounted almost to agony, as she beheld her tossing from side to side of the bed and moaning incoherently. She would have given worlds to have recalled the past few months, but she felt how futile was the wish, and with an aching heart she took her station at her side.

The family physician soon made his appearance, and shaking his head, after looking upon her a few moments, he pronounced her disease to be a brain fever, and turning to Mr. Merton, he said:

"Her disorder must have been brought on by some secret trouble; something that has weighed heavily on her mind, or at least I judge so, from appearances."

At this remark, a pang shot through Ida's frame, and when the doctor had left the room in company with her father, she murmured:

"O if she would only speak, and say she would forgive me, I might bear it. How cruel I have been!"

Mrs. Merton opened her eyes, and gazed wildly round the room, then fixing them upon Ida with a vacant stare, she cried:

"O Charles—Charles! to think that I should have brought discord into your home! Mother! mother! take them away! Do not look so coldly at me!" And thus she raved, until exhausted, she closed her eyes, and sank into a troubled slumber.

Mr. Merton having heard her voice through the partially closed door, returned in time to hear her ravings, and as Ida saw the burning tears stealing down his manly face, her feelings overpowered her and she sought her own apartment, waiting, yet dreading the re-appearance of morning. What a train of thought passed through her young mind, as she reflected upon the past; and what severe reproaches she cast upon herself as the author of the calamity that had befallen them. In her imagination she already gazed upon the lifeless form of her mother, and then followed her to her long resting place, and heard the cold, damp clod falling upon her coffin, then beheld her father seeking his lonely home, bowed down with uncontrollable sorrow, at this unlooked-for determination to his fond hopes,

For seveal long, sleepless and wearisome days and nights, did Mrs. Merton hover all unconsciously between life and death, and now that the crisis of her disorder had arrived, what anxious hearts were those who bent over her pillow, watching her face, so pale and sunken, that it seemed as though death could scarcely leave it more so. Gradually she sunk into a gentle slumber, and with noiseless steps all stole from the room but Ida, who, with a heart filled with hope and gratitude, took the place at her side that she had never resigned but for a few hours at a time during her mother's sickness.

For hours the invalid slept, and when she at length opened her eyes, the first object that met her view was Ida, bending affectionately over her, and as she met the invalid's livid gaze, she imprinted a gentle kiss on her pale brow, and murmured softly, mother, for the first time.

What a world of meaning was there in that one simple word, and how did Mrs. Merton's heart thrill with happiness, as she felt the assurance in her own breast, that the barrier that had so long separated them, was at length removed. The happy change seemed to restore new life to her drooping form, and her recovery to convalescence was rapid.

"Ida," said Bertha, several months after Mrs. Merton's restoration to health, "I often think how unhappy we were for the first few months after father's marriage, and our unhappiness all arose from a foolish prejudice; was it not strange?"

"Yes, Bertha, it seems like a dream, when I think how much hatred I indulged towards one so gentle and good as our dear mother."

"The blessed virgin protect the dear leddy!" said Kathleen, who had been listening to the girls; "'twas a dale of trouble I tuk to meselve, when yer farder brought her to his hum, and indade it made my poor sowl ache to think she had cum for to take the place of yer own dear mother—the Lord rest her sowl—and niver did I belave I wud see the day that I wud love our new mistress—no more 'an yerselves—but she is so good and swate-hearted, and so kind to all of ye, that I cannot help it. O, she is a rale jewel."

Gentle reader, if your patience is not already wearied, we will look in upon the group assembled in the drawing-room.

Mr. Merton is seated near an open window, with a book in his hand, but his eye ever and anon wanders from it, and rests upon the happy face of his wife, who holds Carrie in her arms, while Charlie is hanging upon her chair, with his arm thrown about her neck, listening to the gentle words of instruction that fall from her lips, as she points to them the path that will lead their youg feet to happiness and heaven; and now that she has concluded, Carrie slides gently from her seat, and bowing her tiny form rests her young head upon her mothers knee, whose hand is resting among her golden curls, and repeats her evening prayer! then, with a fond kiss, and a sweetly murmured "good night," the two children seek their places of repose, happy in the consciousness of a mother's love.

"What a happy home is ours, Charles," said Mrs. Merton, when they were alone; "I sometimes think I am not half grateful enough for our many blessings."

"It is indeed a happy home, in contrast with the first year of your coming to it, and when I think of the change' I feel that it is all owing to your patient endurance, Mary, and the noble spirit with which you bore your many troubles, so uncomplainingly, that I scarce realized them. I knew the girls did not seem as cheerful as was their wont, but was not aware of the extent to which their naturally strong prejudices had led them; but, thank Heaven, that your gentle goodness has at last overcome them, and that they now bless the kind care of their faithful step-mother."

The man who climbed the forty feet freshly peeled poplar pole, and then drew it up after him has been engaged by the Schenectady circus to ride a switch-tailed horse chestnut tree round the ring without stirrups.

Publicans wife in Suffolk, whilst in church, fell asleep and let fall a bunch of keys. Aroused by the noise she jumped up and exclaimed, 'Sall there's another jug broken!'

An advertisement in a Western paper reads as follows: Ran away—A hired man named John, his nose turned up five feet eight inches high, and had on a pair of corduroy pants much worn.

A dull parson cornered a farmer whom he saw at ministrations, by asking him directly after a little reproof for his sin of ommission, "shall we see you at church next sabbath?" "Y-e-s he replied; slowly—Y-e-s I'll go—or send a hand!"

ENDS OF MAN.—Were a man designed only like a fly, to buzz about here for a time, sucking in the air and licking the dew, then soon to vanish back into nothing, or to be transformed into worms; how sorry and despicable a thing were he? And such, without religion, we should be. But it supplieth us with business of another nature and lofty importance; it setteth us upon doing things great and noble as can be; it engageth us to free our minds from all fond conceits, and to cleanse our hearts from all corrupt affections, to curb our brutish appetites, to tame our wild passions, to correct our perverse inclinations, to conform the dispositions of our souls and the actions of our life to the eternal laws of righteousness and goodness. It putteth us upon the imitation of God, and aiming at the resemblance of his perfections; upon obtaining a friendship and maintaining a correspondence with the high and holy love; upon fitting our minds for conversation and society with the wisest and purest spirits above; upon providing for an immortal state; upon the acquisition of joy and glory everlasting—Dr. Isaac Barrow.

VICE REQUIRES MORE SACRIFICE THAN VIRTUE.—I will venture to affirm that religion, with all her beautiful and becoming sanctity, imposes fewer sacrifices than the uncontrolled dominion of any one vice. Her service is not only perfect safety, but with perfect freedom. She is not so tyrranizing as passion, so exciting as the world, nor so despotic as fashion. Let us try the case by a parallel, and examine it, not as affecting our virtue but onr pleasure Does religion forbid the cheerful enjoyments of life as rigorously as avarice forbids them? Does she require such sacrifices of our ease as ambition, or such renunciations of our quiet as pride? Does devotion murder sleep, like dissipation? Does she destroy health, like intemperance! Does she annihilate wealth, like gaming? Does she embitter life, like discord? Or abridge it like duelling? Does religion impose more vigilance than suspicion, or haif as many mortifications as vanity? If the estimate be fairly made, then I will venture to assert that the balance is clearly on the side of religion, even in the article of earthly happiness and pleasnre.

Voltaire, the champion of infidelity, once remarked that "there was no hope of destroying the Christian religion, so long as the Christian Sabbath was acknowledged, and kept by man as a sacred day."

A Curious Historical Fact.

NEWSPAPER ERRORS.

Some hnndred years ago a number of the professors of the Edinburgh University attempted to publish a work which should be a perfect specimen of typographical accuracy.—Every precaution was taken to secure the desired result. Six experienced proof-readers were employed, who devoted hours to the reading of each page, and after it was thought to be correct, it was pasted up in the hall of the University, with a notification that a reward of £50 would be paid to any person who could discover an error. Each page was suffered to remain two weeks in the place where it had been pasted, before the work was completed, and the professors thought that they had attained the object for which they had been striving. When the work was issued, it was discovered that several errors existed—one of which was in the first line of the first page. If a case of this kind should occur after all the precautions which had been used, after full and ample time had been given for a correct and thorough reading, and that by day light, carpers at errors in newspapers should have some excuse for those who are compelled to read proofs in a hurry in order not to miss the mails.

THE 'FAKIR' AGAIN.

This wonderful necromancer assumes, proteus-like as many shapes as characters. We hear of his performing in the market yesterday the following experiment on an Egg man.

What is the price of eggs, asked the Fakir of a countryman.

Eight cents a dozen, for a single dozen.

I'll give you five cents for this one replies Fakir, cooly picking up an egg.

Well if you're such a fool you may take it.

The Fakir gave him the five cents, took out his knife and cracked the egg, and out rolled twelve half Eagles. Placing them in his pocket—I'll take another says the Fakir, giving the man another five cent piece.

Cracking the next, out rolled as many more.

I'll take all them eggs said the Fakir.

No you dont, says the man covering his coat tail over the basket, and making tracks for home in such haste that marbles would have laid on his coat tail.

We have not heard the result but rather guess as heow the eggs had'nt many half Eagles in em.

We saw the Fakir drop a dollar into the basket so that the man should lose nothing.

Black—Red—Greenberries.

It is an ancient joke that "all *black*berries are red when they are green," but the Salem Gazette describes some *black*berries, perfectly ripe, but of a perfectly light pea-green color, of a luscious sweetness and the brightest, cleanest, and handsomest of all the small fruits.

BENEVOLENCE.—This is of God. It shines in the sun; drops in the refreshing showers; whispers in the gentle breeze; sparkles on 'the diadem of night;' crowns the year with goodness, and our lives with blessings. It is so in man, in kind, but differs in degree. It would relieve all, heal all, save all, bless forever. Wherever there is sorrow, there it would be present with its balm; where there is suffering, there it sheds its beningn and healing influence. It is good-will to all; and all map feel its gracious and tender emotions.

PLAINFIELD GAZETTE.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Thursday; August 14, 1851.

☞ Mr Albert D. Drake is our authorised agent to receive subscriptions and advertisments.

☞ Mr. E. W. Carr, Third street, Philadelphia, opposite the Exchange, is our authorised agent for that city.

☞ The time is now approaching, when all the great political parties, shall have organized and thrown out the platform of principles, by which they are to be respectively guided. In several states, elections have been held but the returns come in so slow we are unable to give a correct account or judge as to which have lost or gained,

In Kentucky, the Governor will be democratic and the Lieut. Gov. whig. This result has been brought about by Cassius M Clay running as the emancipation candidate; the legislature is whig, the congressional delegation is a tie 5 whigs and 5 dem. In Indiana, the legislature is still uncertain, in Alabama, the legislature will be union by a large majority, the returns from the other states do not come in sufficiently correct to form any idea as to the result; but all the returns which are received from the southern states show more of a union spirit than secession.

We do not believe that even South Carolina, herself would be content with a separate state Government, and should she, or any others secede, we prophesy it would not be long ere they would pray for annexation as eagerly as ever did Texas.

At present there is no two great leading parties, although things have more the appearance of leaning that way at present, than they had some months back.

The probable cause of this is, the old leading issues have either been adopted, or are forsaken, as not to the interests of either of the old parties to make them their platform, such being the case we confess that we are not far sighted enough to look into the future, and ferrett out the issues which are to draw the party lines, nor do we wish to. We shall use our utmost endeavors to give in our columns the most important political articles taken from the leading journals of both or all parties should there be more than two, and we also solicit communications from persons who advocate the different measures of state or general politics, in this manner, together with a firm determination to swerve neither to the right or the left, we hope to be able to issue a strictly neutral paper, we know that it is a hard task but we at present feel confident of our ability to accomplish it,

At, a meeting of the citizens of Plainfield held at Laings Hall on Tuesday evening Aug 12th Mr. Z. Webster was called to the chair and E, Runyon Sec.

The committee appointed at last meeting reported and were discharged a committee was appointed to canvass the town and if possible ascertain the amount of perishable property by fire, and report at next meeting, on motion adjourned to Tuesday Aug. 19th. at the same place.

The Camden Democrat comes to us this week neater in appearance than ever, that establishment having been destroyed by fire and no insurance. Our friend Charley shows his indomitable and unconquerable spirit in the issue of this new sheet, which has arisen from its ashes, more beautiful than ever, we wish him success to the utmost his heart can wish.

THE NEWARK MURDER——VOLUNTARY SURRENDER BY MARGARET GARRITY. The Daily Advertiser of yesterday says: We learn that the unfortunate girl, Margaret Garrity, returned last evening with her brother to this city, from Brooklyn whither, she had fled on the night of this melancholy affair, and voluntarily surrendered herself to the officers.

Melancholy and Fatal Accident.

It is with pain we record a melancholy and fatal accident which occurred in this town early on Saturday morning last. Mr. James C. Butler and brother were preparing to start on a gunning excursion; and while the latter was about placing a cap upon the nipple of his gun, having lifted the hammer for that purpose, the piece being loaded, the former in passing moved the muzzle, which caused his brothers hold of the hammer to give way, and it fell, discharging the contents of the piece into James, near the groin, producing death in a few minutes. The accident and result sent a thrill of pain through our community as the deceased was a hard-working man, well known and respected for his usefulness and correct deportment; and much sympathy is felt for his widow and orphan children, who have so suddenly been bereft of him who was their support and protector, But a few months since, the deceased, while gunning, narrowly escaped the death he has now met, by the bursting of his gun. His remains were attended to the grave by the Sons of Liberty and U. A. Mechanics, of which he was a member, and a very large number of citizens.—Salem Sunbeam

THE TEN HOUR LAW.—It is now understood that a considerable number of the owners of Mills and Factories in New Jersey, are endeavoring to coerce the employers, children, into a non-observance of the Ten Hour Law. In Patterson, and indeed throughout West Jersey, they have determined to break down the virtual efficacy of the law; and it remains for the friends of humanity to insist upon its observance to the very strictest letter. We would say to the operatives, cease not your labor, but supply the evidence when wanted and there are those who will see that this law shall be carried into effect cost what it may. We rejoice to say that in our own city, our manufacturers have come up cheerfully to its provision, acknowledging their justice; and we consider it a stain on the character of our State, and a lasting reproach upon our people that any could be found contraveening a law so humane and just.—Newark Mercury.

A PHILOSOPHER.— Two fools at Lowell, a young married woman and a bachelor, ran off lately. The husband saw them, as they got seated in the cars, gave three cheers, waved his hat, bade them enjoy themselves if they could, and then went home a happy man.

☞ The geographical center of the United States at the present time, is in the Indian Territory, 120 miles west of Missouri. The present center of our representative population, which is constantly moving westward, is ascertained by actual calculation, to be just about at the city of Columbus, Ohio.

THE COSDEN MURDERERS.

THE AWFUL EXECUTION.

Taylor, Murphy, and Shelton, the murderers of the Cosden family, were hung to-day (Aug. 8th) in the presence of eight thousand people, whose behavior was very orderly.

The prisoners ascended the gallows with a firm step.

Taylor and Murphy made short addresses, positively denying their guilt. Shelton also denied his guilt. Murphy, when first brought to the gallows, exclaimed, 'Murderers, now do you, work; but bear in mind, that you do not hang murderers.'

The gallows was twenty-five feet high, and the fall full six feet. The ropes were bunglingly adjusted and when the trap fell the knot of Murphy's rope broke, and he fell violently to the ground, a distance of twelve feet His throat was horribly mashed and lacerated, and he was perfectly insensible. The other two men died without a struggle Murphy meanwhile had recovered, and again declared his innocence, he was again put on the gallows—with the blood streaming from his neck—and swung off. He died quite easily.

We learn that the Rahway Building Association held their first monthly meeting on Monday evening last when about Twenty Thousand Dollars of the stock was taken. This is considered a very fair beginning, inasmuch as the Prospectus and Constitution have not yet been published. They are expected to be ready for circulation the last of this week, when all can procure them at the office of the Association at the Rahway Savings Bank. It is encouraging to learn that while the Building Association is going into operation the deposits at the Savings Bank are continually being made.

These are kindred institutions, and will advance harmoniously together, giving to all classes their preference as to investment and conferring their benefits upon all who will avail themselves of their advantages. These institutions are in the hands of the right kind of men, and we look forward with confidence to the time as not far distant when they will be classed as among the most efficient means of advancing the best interests of our thriving Village.

A MONSTER ENGINE.—Messers. Rodgers, Ketchum & Grosnover, of Paterson, have built for the New York and Erie Railroad, a locomotive which went upon the line on Monday, calculated to draw forty loaded cars, or a weight equal to 800 tuns—a large freight for a ship.

A FOOL OR LUNATIC.—A passenger in the train of cars from New-York, Thursday evening, between Elizabethtown and Rahway, had his hat blown off his head, which he had out of the window. He ran to the door and jumped off after his hat and was, of course considerably injured. The train ran back to him and conveyed him to Rahway, where he was placed under proper care and medical treatment.

PEACHES CONDUCIVE TO HEALTH.—Dr Stone an eminent physician of New Orleans, and who has had a larger practice in fever than perhaps any other physician, declares that plenty of peach orchards are worth a thousand quarantines for public health.—"No more scurvey," says the doctor.

Eat stewed peeches if you would keep off indigestion.

Peaches in the New York market are increasing in quantity and improving in quality. Most of the peaches thus far received have come from Delware, over the Camden and Amboy Railroad. About 700 baskets arrived on Wednesday, and 1,000 on Tuesday. The best range from $1,25 to $2 per basket. Dealers generally estimate the crop of 1851 at about one quarter or one-third that of last year, when the market was glutted with them.

Among the curious events of the day is the colonizing of a small body of Gypsies in the woods near Hoboken. They came over recently from England. It is said they are the avant couriers, sent over to spy out the land to see if it will answer the purposes of their roving mode of life.

TO HAVE GREEN BEANS, PEAS, AND CORN IN WINTER.—A gentleman says that he saw in January green peas as succulent, to all appearance, as they were when plucked from the vine some five or six months before. The mode of preparing them is to pick, when of the proper size for eating, shell, and carefully dry on cloths in the shade. All the care necessary is to prevent them moulding; this done, they will be fine and sweet the following spring. Beans may be preserved in the same way, and with perfect success.

Green corn may be preserved in the following manner: Pluck the ears of green corn when fit for boiling, strip off husks, and throw the ears into a kettle of boiling water; leave them in until the water boils over them, when they must be taken out: shell off the corn by running the prong of a fork along the base of the grain, holding the ear with one end against the breast; this is more expeditious, and saves all the grain, including the heart or germ, which is the sweetest part.

After being thus prepared, it must be spread out thin on cloths in a shady, airy place to dry; it should be stirred every day until dried thoroughly. When cooked, it should be put in cold water and boild an hour or more, the water to be pretty well boiled off. When the water is nearly off a little milk added to it will improve the taste.

Beans, peas and green corn will retain their original flavor more perfectly by being preserved in hermetically sealed cans.

THE TONGUE.—Give not thy tongue too great liberty, lest it take thee prisoner. A word unspoken is, like the sword in the scabbard, thine. If ventured, thy sword is in another's hand. If thou desire to be heed wise, be so wise as to hold thy tongue.—Quarles.

The best dowry to advance the marriage of a young lady is when she has in her countenance mildness, in her speech wisdom, in her behavior modesty, and in her life virtue.

WHAT IS AN OLD BACHELOR?—An old bachelor is a bass solo—an unfinished piece of creation—the first volume of an interesting work—a watch without a regulator—a voluntary martyr, refusing Heaven's best gift—a fruitless blossom on the tree of life—a ship without a rudder, dashed by the waves of despair on the rocks of desolation—sometimes a gilded peg for aspiring relatives to hang their hopes on.

WEAKNESS.—A person pointed out a man who had a profusion of rings on his fingers to a cooper. "Ah, master," said the artizan, "it's a sure sign of weakness when so many hoops are used."

Rumors of Sir John Franklin—Four Bodies Found.

We find the following letter in the Dundee Advertiser of July 26:

DUNDEE, Tuesday, July 22. 1851.

MR. EDITOR: Through the medium of your highly respectable paper, I beg to lay the following important particulars before the public:

Discovery of the Bodies of Four Sailors, supposed to be part of the Crew who accompanied Sir John Franklin.—On Saturday, 19th ult., the whaler Flora, of Hull, J. Robb, master, who has been out one and a half years. cast anchor at Scromness, and sent her letters and papers by post. A letter was received in Aberdeen on Monday, by Mr. John Douglass, King-st., from his brother Mr. G. Douglass, mate of the aforesaid ship. It contains the following affecting narrative:

"In February last our ship's crew partially abandoned the vessel, and erected a large snow-house on the shore, it being in many respects more comfortable than on board, and better suited for hunting operations We had been at that time five months frozen up in Lancaster Sound. In one of our excursions we fell in with a party of Esquimaux Indians, nine in number; they had a slight knowledge of our language; they inquired whether we were English or Americans. On being satisfied on that point, they inquired if we belonged to Chief Frankan. The idea now flashed upon our minds that they knew something of Sir John and his crew, and we answered in the affirmative. They then pointed to the right, to a towering heap of snowy mountains, and by their gestures they signified they had gone to sleep. We brought them to our snow-house, when I instantly reported the case to Mr. Robb, our captain, and it was agreed that a party of twelve men would accompany the indians, and probe their story to its foundation. The party consisted of Mr. Page, our surgeon, J. Brown, carpenter, Wilson, Blair, Hall, Murray, Agnew, Crosley, Jones, Jenkinson, Rafferty, (seamen,) and myself. We had a plentiful supply of provisions, which were packed into a flat-bottomed boat, which was covered with sealskin, and several rifles. spears, &c. We started on our dreary journey on March 27. Our route was one of the wildest which can be conjectured. We proceeded in a zig-zag course up one hill, down another, then to the right, then to the left, then to the right again. On the fourth day, symptoms of discontent began to be manifested by our hardy tars; our feet were cut and wounded with the sharp projecting fragments of ice; the thaw was setting in, and we were apprehensive of being buried by the falling avalanche of snow, which descends like lightning down the sides of the mountains. On the 10th day, April 5, our guides led us into a large natural amphitheater among the mountains. After a journey of some miles we descried something waving over the snow—it was a black silk handkerchief tied to the top of a walking-stick. We eagerly drew out the staff, and commenced operations by digging about two feet deep. We came on the body of a man, and in a few minutes after we discovered three other bodies. They were frozen like icicles; decomposition had not commenced.—Their beards were long and shaggy, while their rigid features and wasted limbs spoke in the language of nature—they had died from want.

"Their dress was that of British seamen in cold latitutes. One man had his name written, or rather engraved, on his arm, "H. Carr" The rest were all more or less marked; some had crosses on their breasts, others stars, ships, &c. Our hearts sickened at the sight. We placed them in their cold desolate graves, and set up the same sad memento mori.—Poor fellows, I exclaimed, you have attempted to regain your homes by an overland journey, but you are left in the desert.

"The Indians could give us no more intelligence, so we returned. The most probable conjecture is a large party had set out from Sir John Franklin's expedition four had thus perished; in all probability the whole of them are now dead."

[Extracts from the letter of Mr G. Douglass to Mr. John Douglass, Aberdeen, on board the Flora.]

By inserting the letter, you will oblige

Yours, respectfully, THOMAS REID.

ONE.—One hour lost in the morning by lying in bed will put back all the business of the day

One hour gained by rising early is worth one month of labor in a year

One hole in the fence will cost ten times as much as it will do to fix it at once.

One diseased sheep will spoil a whole flock.

One unruly animal will teach all others in the company bad tricks and the Bible says "one sinner destroys much good."

One drunkard will keep a whole family poor and make them miserable.

One wife that is always telling how fine her neighbors' dresses are, and how little she can get, would look pleasanter if she talks about something else.

One husband that is penurious or lazy, and deprives his family of necessary comforts such as their neighbors enjoy, is not as desirable a husband as he ought to be.

One good newspaper is one good thing in every family.—Mansfield Herald.

TO CURE THE DISTEMPER IN HORSES.—Give a teaspoonfull, three times a day, of finely powdered gum myrrh (mixed with the food or otherwise), and a speedy cure, it is said, will in all cases be effected.

DEATH IS THE TERMINATION,

But too often, of what, in its inception, was lightly treated, and fatally neglected as a common cold. The snow-ball does not increase faster by rolling, than does danger from an unchecked Cough or Cold. When inflamation once seizes upon the delicate tissue of the Lungs, tne progress of fire is scarcely swifter or more fatal than that of Pulmonary Disease, through its various stages, to its terminus, death! Yet it may be arrested in all cases by a prompt resort to Dr. Rogers' Sprup of Liverwort, Tar, and Canchalagua. To this vital truth many among the first men in the land, have appended their attesting signatures. Read their testimony in the pamphlet in the hands of Agents. AMERICAN
PIANO-FORTE ASSOCIATION.

A SOCIETY for the purpose of supplying Pianos to those who need them, upon the payment of a small monthly sum. The object is that all persons, even in moderate circumstances, may own a valuable Piano, and that many who now hire instruments may save their money and soon become the owners of a splendid Piano, worth at least $300.—

Members choose their own instruments from several of the first makers. Pianos are awarded on the first Thursday of each month by auction. Payments $3 per month. Subscribers limited to 100. Two instruments have already been selected by the members from the manufactories of Messrs. Dubois & Warriner, and J. B. Dunham. The success thus far proves that hundreds of Pianos will soon be distributed upon the principle of this Society, and that the benefits of the Building Associations may be extended to this branch of public interest, and that much good will consequently arise to the Musical community, and the Manufacturing interest.

A MELODEON COMPANY of 75 members is now forming, upon the above plan. The books are now open.

Persons who feel interested in this popular movement are respectfully invited to call and subscribe. Office hours, A. M. from 9 to 12; P. M. from 3 to 6,

CHERRY PECTORAL:
For the Cure of
COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

In offering to the community this justly celebrated remedy for diseases of the throat and lungs, it is not our wish to trifle with the lives or health of the afflicted, but frankly to lay before them the opinions of distinguished men and some of the evidences of its success, from which they can judge for themselves — We sincerely pledge ourselves to make no wild assertions or false statements of its efficacy, nor will we hold out any hope to suffering humany which facts will not warrant.

Many proofs are here given, and we solicit an inquiry from the public into all we publish, feeling assured they will find them perfectly reliable, and the medicine worthy their best confidence and patronage'

From the distinguished Professor of Chemistry and Materia Medica, Bowdoin College.

Dear Sir: I delayed answering the receipt of your preparation, until I had an opportunity of witnessing its effects in my own family, or in the families of my friends.

This I have now done with a high degree of satisfaction, in cases both of adults and children.

I have found it, as its ingredients show, a powerful remedy for colds, and pulmonary diseases.

PARKER CLEAVELAND, M. D.

BRUNSWICK, ME., Feb. 5 1847

From an Overseer in the Hamilton Mills, in this City.

LOWELL, Aug. 10. 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer: I have been cured of the worst cough I ever had in my life, by your "CHERRY PECTORAL," and never fail when I have opportunity, of recommending it to others.

Yours, respectfully, S. D. EMERSON.

☞ Read the following, and see if this medicine is worth a trial This patient had become very feeble, and the effect of the medicine was unmistakably distinct:—

UNITED STATES HOTEL, SARATOGA SPRINGS, July 5. 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer,—Sir: I have been afflicted with a painful affection of the lungs, and all the symptoms of settled consumption, for more than a year. I could find no medicine that would reach my case, until I commenced the use of your "CHERRY PECTORAL," which gave me gradual relief, and I have been steadily gaining my strength till my health is well nigh restored.

While using your medicine, I had the gratification of curing with it my reverend friend, Mr. Truman, of Sumpter District, who had been suspended from his parochial duties by a severe attack of bronchitis.

I have pleasure in certifying these facts to you,

And am sir, yours respectfully,

J, F- CALHOUN, of South Carolina.

☞ The following was one of the worst of cases, which the physicians and friends thought to be incurable consumption:—

CHESTER, PA., Aug. 22, 1846.

J. C. Ayer,—Sir: I was taken with a terrible cough brought on by a cold; in the beginning of last February, and was confined to my bed more than two months. Coughing incessantly night and day, I became ghastly and pale, my eyes were sunken and glassy, and my breath very short. Indeed, I was rapidly failing, and in such distress for breath, that but little hope of my recovery could be entertained.—While in this situation, a friend of mine, (the Rev. John Keller, of the Methodist church) brought me a bottle of your Cherry Pectoral, which I tried more to gratify him, than from any expectation of obtaining relief. Its good effect induced me to continue its use, and I soon found my health much improved. Now in three months, I am well and strong and can attribute my cure only to your great medicine. With the deepest gratitude, yours, &c.

Sacred Scenes and Characters—By Rev. J T Headley.—This work may very properly be considered a companion to the Sacred Mountains by the same author. Its object is to illustrate and render more life-like the Sacred Writings. It is not the author's design to supersede the Bible; but his wish is to excite a solicitude to obtain, and to become intimately acquainted and perfectly familiar with its history, doctrines, and laws; to know its truth to imbibe its spirit, feel its power, and partake of its salvation; in a word, to prize in some measure, as it deserves, this treasure which is indeed beyond price. We predict for it a circulation far beyond any of the author's former works.—The News. Jan. 7th,

Sacred Scenes and Characters—By Headley, author of the Sacred Mountains, &c.—This work will add greatly to the reputation of the author. In literary merit, it more than equals his Sacred Mountains. Mr. Headley excels in his glowing style and vivid descriptions. His works are a rich treasury of all the sublimity of thought, moving tenderness of passion, and vigorous strength of expressions which are to be found in all the languages by which mortals declare their minds.—Daily Globe, Jan 5th.

Rambles and Sketches.—By Headley.—We have not for a long time sat down to a book with more pleasing anticipations, of found those anticipations more fully realized than in the perusal of the work before us—and we know it will be hailed with gratification by the many readers of the talented author His Napolean and his Marshalls was, perhaps as popular, and found at least as many readers as any book that can be mentioned. We think the Rambles and Sketches are destined to be as popular at least as any of his previous works. There is not a dull chapter in the work, filled as it is with an infinite variety. The author has ample room and verge enough for the employment of his fine talents to great advantage—and most successfully has he accomplished the task. The biographical sketch of the author is interesting and well considered, and adds much to the value of the book, which is got up in a very neat and attractive style by the publisher. —Portland Transcript, Dec. 15th.

Mr. Headley is one of the most promising writers of this country, and we have here one of his best books—one on which he can rest his fame. It possesses the unfatiguing charms of perfect simplicity and truth. There is a graceful frankness pervading the composition, which engages the interest of the reader in the author as well as in the subject. His rambles about Rome, Paris, and London, exhibit a thousand lively traits of an ingenuous nature, upon which a man of taste will delight to linger. We predict for this a sale equal to that of any of the authors works.—New York News.

The collection is one of which no author need be ashamed. It consists, indeed, of some of Mr. Headley's most brilliant and highly finished compositions —of those specimens of his abilities by which he may be judged with the greatest safety to his fame as a world-painter and thinker.—Tribune, Dec. 17. 49.

N. B. the above Books will be forwarded to order, at the prices mentioned, free of postage, to any part of the United States, on the receipt of orders. with the money. Money may be sent by mail at my risk.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS,

or Medicated Compound.

Not a family in the land should be without a supply of this inestimable preparation which is no less valuable as an immediate and unfailing remedy for diseases of the skin, the muscles and the glands, and all external injuries, than as a means of eradicating scurf and dandruff, renewing the hair and preventing its loss, and imparting to the fibrous mass a rich luxuriance and a brilliant lustre

Throughout the length and breadth of the United States the Tricopherous has received the sanction and approval of the Faculty, and Professor BARRY now holds, and is prepared to exhibit to all who desire to see them, original testimonials from eminent medical men of the most conclusive character. The instantaneous effect of this great counter-irritant in reducing external inflammation, however fiery and by whatever cause produced, is striking and extraordinary. The superficial absorbents which acting like so many syphons, take up whatever is applied to the surface, whether it be balm or poison, convey this gentle, stimulating, yet anti-inflammatory fluid into the external circulation supplying thereto a healthful tone, and enabling the vessels of the skin to throw off by evaporation through the pores the materies morbi or elements of fever. By this process the irritating principle which occasions pimples rashes, blotches, crysipelas, hettle rash, prickly heat, scald head and which is equally active in cuts, bruises, burns scalds and the bites and stings of insects, is rapidly expelled, the pain and itching are alleviated; the redness fades; and a complete cure is invariably accomplished. The same stimulating property which restores health, vigor and vegetative power to the scalp, and through the scalp to the hair, enables the skin upon any part of the body to relieve itself from disease. The whole action of the Tricopherous is in harmony with the well understood principle that nothing but healthful external stimulus will determine the fluids to the surface and enable the exhausted and torpid vessels which have been conquered by inflammation, to conquer in their turn, and put the fiery intruder to flight.

The cheapness of the Tricopherous places it within reach of the poorest—its varied uses and acknowledged efficacy render it indispensable to all.

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York; and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States Canada, Mexico, West Indies Great Britain, France, &c.,

NEW AND CHEAP FURNITURE AND CHAIR

ESTABLISHMENT,

311 Broad-St., Newark N. J.

(Nearly opposite Washington Hall.)

THE proprietor begs leave to announce to the Public, that he has taken the large and commodious store 311 Broad-st. Newark, N. J., where he is prepared to supply any article in the furniture and chair line as low as can be purchased in New York. The following are some of the leading articles

Sofas of every description, Marble and Mahogany-top Dressing Bureaus, Book Cases, Work Stands, marble and mahogany top Wash Stands, Hat Stands, Tete a Tetes, Divans and Ottomans, Bedsteads, including French, Grecian, Cottage and Plain; mahogany Rocking Chairs, mahogany sitting Chairs of every style and quality; also, Cane Seat, Grecian, Fancy and cottage Chairs; Centre, Side and Sofa Tables; a large assortment of Looking Glasses; Refrigerators of all sizes, both chest and upright; and every other article in the furniture line, from the most elegant and fashionable drawing room Sofa, to the plainest article of kitchen furniture.

All of the above articles warranted as good as can be purchased elsewhere. He will also guarantee to sell them cheaper than any other establishment in this city.

We think any person about furnishing either on a large or small scale, can do as well at our place as at any other establishment in the country. The styles are as new, and we think, in as good taste as can be found in the city of New Yerk or elsewhere, and we believe that good furniture can be purchased here and shifted to any part of the country at such a rate as to yield to the purchaser more value for his money, than if brought in any of our larger cities.

Please call and judge for yourselves. Don't forget the name and number.

DRY GOODS AND GROCERIES,

which we are willing to sell at a very small advance.

177] LAING & WEBSTER.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequemt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels: such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

WHEN IT OCCURS.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any moment.

The bowel having protruded as a rupture, or burst and known by the external LUMP OR TUMOR, should be cartfully and thoroughly returned into the abdomen and retained there by means of a suitable instrument, as a TRUSS BANDAGE, or SUPPORTER. The application of such mechanical aid in the relief and final cure of hernia, is a matter requiring much special study, skill and experience not only in the mechanism of the body, but also in that of instruments as relating to their application; for apart from the different methods of producing pressures, the disease calls for exact adaptation in the TRUSS PAD or pledget used for the purpose of retaining a hernia.

SUCH IS TRUTH.

The above truths are now being appreciated by the public having been brought particularly to their notice through the recent improvements made by Frederick M. Butler in Supporter and Hernial pads and introduced by the Hull's Truss Office, in their treatment for the relief and radical cure of Hernia. Over two year experience has now been had in the application of BUTLER'S recently patented Truss Pads—proving through numerous cases, that from their peculiar form and bearing they lie over and upon the inguinal canal, dislodge the bowels thoroughly, contract the rings or natural openings, thicken the muscular walls, and thereby effect a cure.

The office is provided with experienced male and female attendants, who apply instruments direct to the person of patients, and the public may rely upon that care being made in the application which will most likely tend to the relief and cure of the several complaints coming under their treatment, whether it be Hernia, Prolapsus Uteri, Prolapsus Ani, Piles, or other similar weakness, requiring the mechanical support of a Truss, Supporter, Belt, Braces or Bandage.

BABY JUMPER

AND

WALKER COMBINED.

The subscriber having invented and made application for a patent for the above article would hereby call the attention of the public to its superiority over all others.

It forms a neat article of furniture, somewhat resembling an ottoman; it being upon castors, the little occupant can move it in all directions around the room with the utmost ease. The top opens by a spring and then closes around under the child's arms and locks. The child sits in an upright position upon a saddle or seat, stuffed perfectly soft, bearing no weight on his arms, with its feet resting upon the floor. The child can easily raise the article, and as there is a spring in each leg it can use it as a jumper for its amusement, or push itself around the room, thus learning to walk without other asistance. As the springs buoys the child up, thereby preventing too much weight upon its feet, it gradually learns to use its legs and soon learns to walk. The child can in no manner receive injury; a trial or inspection will satisfy the most skeptical of its superior utility.

Prices from $5 to $10 each, according to style of trimmings &c. Orders punctually attended to by

E. RICE, Cor. Broad and Mechanic-sts, near the Depot, ELIZABETHTOWN. N. J.

☞ Also for sale at 240 Broadway, New-York.

DOCTOR YOURSELF!

FOR 25 CENTS!!!

BY MEANS OF THE POCKET ESCULAPIUS, or, Every one his own Physician! Thirtieth edition, with upwards of a hundred engravings, showing private diseases in every shape and form, and malformations of the generative system,

BY WM. YOUNG, M, D.

The time has now arrived, that persons suffering from secret diseases, need no more become the victim of quackery as by the prescriptions contained in this book any one may cure himself, without hindrance to business, or the knowledge of the most intimate friend, and with one tenth the usual expense. In addition to the general routine of private disease, it fully explains the cause of manhood's early decline, with observations on marriage—besides many other derangements which it would not be proper to enumerate in the public prints.

☞ Any person sending TWENTY-FIFE CENTS enclosed in a letter, will receive one copy of this book, by mail, or five copies will be sent for one dollar. Address, "DR. W. YOUNG, No. 152 SPRUCE Street, PHILADELPHIA." Post-paid.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impetency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cerd al cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but l ttle in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without off-spring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

It also possesses the unrivalled qualities of curing incipient Consumption, and I have administered it with great success to patients who have sought our delightful climate for the restoration of their health and the result is that a medicine has been added to the catalogue for the cure of insipient consumption.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co., of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper.

WONDERFUL CURES!

AND

CANCHALAGUA;

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to

CONSUMPTION.

NOTHING LIKE IT.

CURE FOLLOWS CURE!

READ THE EVIDENCE!!

The above invaluable Medicine has now been before the public sufficiently long to have its virtues thoroughly tested. It has been used by all classes of the community, under every possible variety of circumstances, and has everywhere proved itself a most powerful and efficient Cough Medicine. Lung Diseases of all kinds, yield to its influence, as mists pass away upon the rising of the Sun. This is no fiction. We give you below, letters from persons who are now living in the state of New York, and who declare, over their own signatures, all that we could possibly desire to say in its favor. Those who can read their statements and yet remain incredulous, must be beyond the reach of human testimony.

A LOVELY YOUNG LADY

CURED OF CONSUMPTION!

☞ The following is from the pen of WM. H. LEVISON, Esq., the distinguished Editor of the U. S. Military and Naval Argus under date New York, Jan. 26, 1850 What could be more conclusive?

"It is seldom we permit ourselves to occupy a space in these columns to speak in praise of any article in the patent medicine way; but when we see the life of a fellow-creature saved by the use of any medicine whatever, we consider it as our right, if not a duty, to give a simple statement of facts, that others may, in like manner be benefitted. The case which has induced us to pen this article, was that of a young lady of our acquaintance, who, by frequent exposure to the night air, contracted a cold, which settled on the Lungs before its ravages could be stayed. (This occurred two years ago this winter.) Various remedies were used, but with very little effect or benefit. The cough grew worse, with copious expectoration, and the sunken eye, and pale, hollow cheek, told plainly that PULMONARY DISEASE was doing its worst on her delicate frame. The family physician was consulted and although he would not admit to the young lady that she really had the CONSUMPTION, yet he would give no encouragement as to a cure. At this crisis, her mother was persuaded to make use of a bottle of Dr. Rogers' Compound Syrup of LIVEWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA and we are happy to state, she was perfectly cured in less than three months by this medicine alone, after even hope was destroyed. It is useless to comment on such a case as this, for the truth will reach where polished fiction never can. If any doubt the authenticity of this statement, let them call at this office.—U. S. Military and Naval Argus Office, No 79 Chatam N. Y.

COUGH AND DISEASE

OF 14 MONTHS STANDING. CURED.

AFTER BEING GIVEN UP TWICE

BY EMINENT PHYSICIANS!

Albany, June 9th, 1849.

Messrs. A. L. Scovill & Co.—I herewith forward to you a Certificate of a Cure effected by your Compound Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua The Cough and expectoration was of fourteen months standing, and had baffled the skill of several of our eminent physicians in New York, Albany, and Cooperstown. I am the person in whom the cure was effected, and as I had previously no faith in patent medicines, I have since tried it on others, and have become satisfied of its value. Mine was as GREAT A CURE as ever was performed, as I had, during my sickness, been given up twice by my physicians. I have now commenced my business, after taking, I think about eight bottles

Yours, repectfully, THOS. C. FAULDER.

BLEEDING AT THE LUNGS CURED.

☞ SEE HOW PROMPTLY IT ACTS!

Statement of Mr. A. Lang, Baker, No 338 Pearl street, N. Y. A few days before last Christmas, I was taken unwell, and soon commenced bleeding freely at the Lungs. I called in a Homœopathic Physician, but his medicine did not seem to help me. I read your advertisement, and thought I would try Dr. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA. Before I had takea up the third bottle, by bleeding had stopped, my Cough was gone, and I felt well as usual. My health is now good. I consider it a most excellent medicine, and cordially reccommend it to my friends. [This statement was made to the Proprietors, March 12th 1850.]

☞ This whole paper might be filled with letters, similar to the above, from those who have been cured.

FOR SALE, wholesale and retail, by A. L. SCOVILL & Co., Proprietors, at their Principal Depot, GOTHIC HALL, no 316. Broadway, New York, to whom all orders for the Medicine, and letters relating to agencies, should be addressed, post-paid.

PARTING WORDS TO A FRIEND.

—o—

BY JOSEPH H. BUTLER

—o—

And must I now, my trusty friend,
Bid thee a long farewell?
Thus all Earth's pleasures have an end,
How soon—no lip can tell.

We meet—we love—we promise oft
Unending happiness;
But time unseen, soon steals away
The joys we did possess?

Love—Friendship—ye are holy ties;
And though so frail on earth,
Ye shall be born again, and rise
Unto a heavenly birth.

Where angel lyres breathe songs of love,
Which time nor death can end;
O, that we yet may meet above,
Each lost and valued friend.

Whate'er my future lot may be,
And wander where I may,
My spirit still shall turn to thee,
Though far—too far away.

The bygone joys of other hours
Shall oft remembered be;
And I will send my spirit forth,
Far o'er the swelling sea.

The soils are spread—my trusty friend.
Receive my warm farewell!
Thus all earth's pleasures have an end,
How soon—what lip can tell!

THE CHANCE SHOT,

OR

DON CARLOS' FIRST CRUISE—A NAUTICAL SKETCH.

BY G. S. RAYMOND.

For fifteen days, we had been cruising along the South-eastern coast of Spain, between Cape de Gata and the River Ebro; keeping a bright look out for a couple of brigs, one English and the other an American; which for more than a month past, had been expected at Tortosa, with arms and munitions of war for the Carlists, who at that time held nearly all the mountain passes along the terrace of Valencia, and Catalonia.

We had been instructed by the Carlist Commander-in-chief, to cruise along the coast, until the arrival of the brigs, to whom we were to afford protection from the numerous guarda costas, and two or three heavier armed Spanish cruisers, which were constantly on the alert to cut off and capture, any vessels bound into either of the ports between Carthagena and Barcelona, which were nominally under a blockade.

Our craft was a beautiful Baltimore built brigantine, of about one hundred and seventy tons register, not quite so "black, strait, and low in the water," as Ingraham's "suspicious looking schooners and brigatines," always are; but nevertheless, she was a most magnificent craft; and, with her armament of eight twelve pound barkers, and a beautiful plaything amidship, in the shape of a long, brass thirty-two, mounted on a pivot; together with a picked crew of sixty brave fellows; the coquettish little "Modesta," had in the very short space of fifteen days, acquired a reputation which invariably sent the Spanish guarda costas away before her under every inch of canvass, cracking on everything for the nearest port, whenever we hove in sight.

The commander of the brigantine, Captain Westley Benner, was an American, every inch a sailor, very good looking, just twenty-four years old, and as brave, generous a soul, as ever walked a quarter-deck, or looked a "nor'-wester" in the face.

Captain Benner, or "West," as he chose to be called by us, who were quite familiar with him, had served for nearly two years as a lieutenant in the Spanish navy: and some eighteen months previous to the time where my story commences, he had made the acquaintance of a beautiful girl, the daughter of a rich old Don at Valencia; and rumor said that they were engaged to each other. Be that as it may, it is very certain, that one day about three months previously, "West'," had demanded leave of absence for a few days for the purpose of visiting Valencia.

The Admiral of the Spanish fleet at Cadiz thought proper to refuse the request, whereupon the young Leutenant immediately threw up his commission; and two weeks afterwards, he was in command of Don Carlos' armed brigantine in the harbor of Gibraltar. It was about an hour before sunrise of the sixteenth day' that we tacked ship close in under the bold rocky headland of Cape Nao, with the intention of beating up the coast as far as Alicant, or perhaps Carthagena, when it was the purpose of our commander to square away for some of the Balearic Islands, and lay in a fresh supply of wood, water, &c. The wind at the time was blowing very heavy in squalls, and we were banging away at it, under short canvass' carrying only double reefed topsails, with three reefs in our huge mainsail, one in the forecourse and a storm jib.

I had the deck, during the morning watch, from four to eight; and, as I stood there on the weather-quarter, just after we had gone in stays, I heard some one hail the brigatine from a direction very nearly astern, and apparently close aboard of us. I leaned over the low taffrail, and peered out into the darkness with my night-glass, but I could discover nothing, and I had just turned to walk forward, when the hail rang out again loud and clear, right astern.

"Modesta, ahoy!"

'Ay, ay;' I replied, through my speaking trumpet what do you want?"

"Heave to, for God's sake! we have a message for Captain Benner, and wish to come alongside."

This communication was made in Spanish; and, fearing that it might be some trick of the enemy to surprise us; I concluded not to heave to until I had informed the Captain of what was going on. But I was spared that trouble, for just as I turned to go below, that individual made his appearance on deck; and the moment he caught the sound of the stranger's voice—who still continued to sing out like a marine overboard—shouted to the watch forward, without stopping to communicate his orders to me—

"Forecassl there! Let go the weather-main-braces. Haul in, haul in to leeward! Round in the lee-braces with a will; be handy men. Well, the main-yard belay! Rise the head-sheet one of you. Put your helm down my man, and let her come to. So! there you are—s-t-e-a-d-y! Get a line ready in the lee-force-rigging there for the boat."

In less than three minutes, the Modesta was hove to; with her main yard aback, and in a short time a little lateen craft, of some five or six tans, shot out of the gloom astern and ranged along upon our lee-quarter, As the boat drew up alongside, a slender looking youth clambered up by the lanyards of the main rigging, and leaped lightly upon our deck. In a moment the Captain grasped both of the young stranger's hands; and the boy immediately commenced some hurried communication, of which, I could only now and then catch a word; as "vapor Imperiale;" "Rio Hugar;" Donna Theresa;" "Leadrone," &c.; from which I inferred that some one one of the Government steamers was at the River Hugar, near Valencia, and that some one connected with her, had been acting the pirate; by killing murdering, or carrying off some body who bore the name of Donna Theresa. But my guessing was cut short by the Captain; who, again shouted to the crew with a roar equal to a dozen full grown speak-speaking trumpets—

"Hard up your helm there! Square the main-yard and lay aft here to the weather-head-braces! Let go there to leeward; round in to windward, In with 'em my hearties; So belay!" And the brigantine was off before the wind, heading N. E. by E. with square yards.

There was a few moments of silence, during which Captain Benner led the young stranger up to where I was standing, and introduced him:

"Mr. Raymond, Don Jose Mancilla, brother to Donna Theresa, of whom you have heard me speak; Don Jose, Mr. Raymond, first lieutenant of the Modesta."

As soon as the usual courtesies were exchanged between the young Spaniard and myself; the Capt. said to me very quietly, although I could see that he was a good deal excited,

"We'll turn out all reefs, and set top-gallant sails sir!"

I was astonished, and ventured a remonstrance,

"Thunder" said I "Capt. Benner, you'll pitch both masts slap over the bows, if you put all that sail on to her in this gale."

"Can't help it, sir; let 'em go. Pack the dimity on her and make her travel."

"Ay, ay sir," and in less than ten minutes, the top-sail yards were mast-headed, top-gallant-sails set; the reefs turned out of the mainsail and fore-course; and the little beauty did travel some. By this time it was daylight, and as the Captain turned to pass below with his young guest, he addressed me again as follows:

"You will pipe to quarters; sir, and clear ship for action. See both batteries shotted, but hold on with the long gun till I come on deck; I wish to shot her myself."

In about an half hour, every preparation was made to engage the enemy—provided there had been one to engage—and just as every thing was got ready, the Captain re-appeared on deck, and his first words were to me.

"How is she going, sir?"

"Eleven and a half, large, sir" the same time looking aloft, at the top-gallant masts, which were showing a disposition to scrape acquaintance with the flying jib-boom.

"Eleven and a half!" said Captain Benner, "that won't do; she must hurry along faster than that,

We'll set the royals, and weather fore-top-mast, and top-gallant stun' sails, sir."

I did'nt say any thing; but I thought that Capt. West' Benner was crazy or very near it. However I put the additional canvass on to her and then proceeded to heave the log.

"How is she going now?"

"Thirteen large, sir."

"Well, that's better;" said the young commander, pacing fore and aft the quarter-deck, almost at a run, and rubbing his hands as if he was delighted at the way in which we were driving the little Modesta through the water.

Ever since day-light, a heavy bank of vapor had hung upon the surface of the water down ahead of us, completely shutting in the horizon in that direction, so that had there been fifty line of battle ships within five miles of us, we could not have seen them.

But just as the sun came up, the fog bank lifted up from the water, and directly, the look-out on the fore top gallant yard sang out; "S-a-i-l ho!"

"Where away?" shouted the Captain.

"Square down ahead, sir replied the look-out, "a Spanish steamer, close to, sir,"

Before the look-out had finished this latter part of his information, the Captain and myself stood together on the forecastle with our glasses leveled on the stranger. There she was—about four miles off directly in our course; a respectable sized man of war steamer, laying hove to waiting for us to run down; and just as we had got the range of her, the gorgeous battle ensign of her most Christian majesty Isabella I., blew out at her peak; and a moment after, one of her weather guns was discharged telling us very plainly, that she was prepared for us.

"That's her!" said Capt. Benner, as he leaped down from the heel of the bowsprit, "the very customer that I am after.

My affianced wife, Mr. Raymond, Donna Theresa the sister of yonder boy, is on board of that steamer—stolen from her home, by the wretch who commands yon vessel, Don Fustin Rufino. The villian thinks to convey her to Barcelona, where helpless and without friends as she would be, he would drag her to the altar, and force her to a detested marriage with himself. But you will stand by me and I will rescue her. Take in sail, sir, as soon as possible, while I with a half dozen of the crew, clear away the long gun.

By the time that we had got the brigantine under short working sail, we had neared the steamer so much that we were in point blank range of a gun like the one we carried midships, and our clipper hove to dead to wind'ard and just out of reach of her eighteens.

"Come here, Raymond" said the Capt. "I wish you would sight this gun I have heard you were a capital shot, and I want you to wing that fellow.

Now, if you can knock one of that fellow's wheels off we shall have him completely at our mercy, and he'll soon have to pull down that red and yellow bunting, You sight the gun and I'll stand by to fire the moment you give the word."

I flung off my jacket, and sighted the gun, but it was like shooting a swallow with a rifle—she would not stand still long enough to get a sight. At last I got a chance, and our thirty-two spoke her good morning in thunder tones, and the recoil sent me a travelling over against the weather rail, and I held on to see what I had done.

Directly the steamer became visible, and we soon discovered that I had'nt hit her wheel; but I had hit something else. My shot had hit her funnel, and carried it away, about four feet from the deck.

"Thunder and lightning, what a shot! I don't believe you could hit a ten acre wood lot set on edge.

I could hit one of the trees though, if it was as big as that fellows smoke-pipe. Shall I try him again?

Yes, bear a hand, and—but no—hold on—there comes down his colors! What does it mean? There goes his signal of distress! Be alive here, we must run down and see what the trouble is.

We soon ran alongside and found her on fire, and sinking rapidly. The gun unknown to me had been double shotted, one cutting off the funnel, and the other through her furnace, thence through the lee side out below the water line.

After rescuing crew, we hauled our wind for Tortosa.

About six months after the Captain was married to the beautiful Spanish girl, and abandoning the Carlist cause, he settled down on a magnificent estate, given him by his wife's father, near Valencia.

SMALL MYSTERIES.

IN the home circle nothing is more productive of mischief than small mysteries, the concealment of little things, and the furtive accomplishment of what might be better done openly. Dr Johnson in his forcible language once said, "Nothing ends more fatally than mysteriousness in trifles; indeed it commonly ends in guilt; for those who begin by concealment of innocent things; will soon have something to hide which they dare not bring to light."

The faculty for concealment—or as the phrenologists term it, "secretiviness," is a dangerous gift. Openness and candor are delightful in a household; giving all the members a pleasant participation in each other's happiness. When we discover that a friend has deceived, or only half trusted us, we regard him ever after with suspicion, and it requires a very long time for him to recover the ground he has lost in our confidence and esteem.—Especially is this true in the family; for when we perceive that those abroad know more of the motives of a member of the same house than we do, it seems as if a wrong was done which cannot be forgotten.

Husbands and wives ensure domestic discomfort by having out-door confidants. Coolness and even separations have had their rise in some trifling matter of this sort, when the parties might by a wiser course have remained affectionate and inseparable. Children who prefer other friends over their parents are almost sure to be led into error and unhappiness. While under the home roof, the heart should be kept there; the preliminaries to a future home causing the only exception. And even in such a case, he or she is usually best married whose parents were earliest apprised of the engagement.

BENEVOLENCE.

Hers' is a calm, sweet realm--her's are the pastures and the still waters—her's the ways of pleasantness and the paths of peace. The garden which she tills is the human heart, and the seeds which she scatters will bear their fruit in heaven. Her's are the pomp of science, the splendor of genius, the glitter of wealth, the might of armies. With her pale fingers she points to the annals of the past, and they all become but as chaff before the wind. Yet she stops not here. Speaks she now in tones as solemn as the midnight bell, of self's nothingness. Listen again! and ye hear her clarion voice proclaiming aloud, that human virtue never dies! Appears she now with the shadows of death upon one hand, and history of the world upon the other, to teach how pitiful is individual ambition, and how sensless the love of self! Look again; and ye shall behold her decending upon her angel pinions of "love and charity," to gather the entire human family beneath her ample folds. Comes she now in the shape of a hoary philosopher, worn and bent with the weight of years—lo she comes again in the shape of a ministering angel, with smiles of sympathy, and tears of pity, to the abode of want and the home of death.

The Pope AND CIGARS.—The Giornale di Roma of the 17 inst, publishes a sentence of the Supreme Tribunal of the Sacred Consulta, condeming Pietro Ercoli, aged thirty four, to the galleys for twenty years, for having, on the night of the 10th of may, attempted to prevent one Lugi Giannini, from lighting a cigar he wanted to smoke! Such is the "mild and beneficent" sway of the Pope!

A dandy, with cigar in his mouth, entered a menagerie, when the propreitor requested him to take the weed out of his mouth lest he should learn the other monkeys bad habits.

When Mrs. Hannah More asked Dr. Johnson why he drank no wine, he honestly and wisely said: 'Because if I drink at all, I shall drink to much. Abstinence is as easy as moderation is difficult.

OUTRAGES.—The ungallant editor of the 'Bulletin' thinks that some ladies would not be out of character if they appeared in the Tartar costume.

'I would not live always,' sung a chorister, one Sunday. A burly son of Neptune, who had dropped into the church, to see what was going on, bawled out—'You couldent do it. if you would!'

POLITENESS AT HOME.—Nothing sits so gracefully upon chrildren, rnd nothing makes them so lovely, as habitual respect and dutiful deportment towards their parents and superiors; it makes the plainest face beautiful, and gives to every common action a nameless but particular charm.

☞ We will be obliged to any of our friends in Warren Township if they will send us notices of political or other meetings which may be interesting to our subscribers in that township.

☞ CUBA presents to us at the present time the only interesting news to be found, the reports by the last advices being favorable to the patriot party, which reports however, may be contradicted by the next arrival, judging from previous accounts, which have been nothing more than a tissue of flying reports and contradictions.

The Government appears to be determined to put down all insurrectionary movements either by force of arms, or by publishing false reports in their own journals, seeming, as if afraid that roports of a rise in the rebellious districts would bring down upon them hordes of the hardy sons of the United States who are ever ready to assist the oppressed.

Companies are now forming and leaving different sections of the Union for New Orleans to embark thence for Cuba. Attempts have been made by our Government to arrest parties concerned in these proceedings, and in a measure have been successful, but, should the Cubans rise in numbers sufficiently strong to make a firm stand, or succeed in a single battle with the Spanish troops, our Government with all her vigilance conld not arrest the movements of those indomitable, danger-daring spirits of the south-west, who have been cradled amidst dangers, hardships and privations; those whose delight it is to be ever ready to raise the oppressed at the risk of an ignominious death, should they fail in their efforts.

Is it a matter of surprise then, that the Government of Cuba should resort to any means to suppress intelligence of a revolt, or feel uneasy at her proximity to the United States, and having before her eyes the attempts which have been made in this country to aid the insurrection. The patriots may not succeed even now, but they will not long submit to the enormous taxation and oppression which now bears them down.

ATTEMPT TO BREAK JAIL AT NEWARK.—Thomas, who has been considered, since his confinement with Shields, as quite peaceable was discovered two days ago, by a person having buisness in the prison, to be doing something at his door, On Friday night some of the prisoners gave the alarm that Thomas was endeavoring to get out Mr. Beach immediately made an examination, and found that he had possessed himself of a shoe-knife, out of which he had formed a saw, and had been at work sawing a bar off his door, filling up the space as he went along, with something that would hide it, and had succeeded in working his way a considerable distance into it. He was at once secured by a chain. He still declares his intention to escape.

From The St Paul Pioneer, THE TREATY WITH THE SIOUX.—The news of the treaty exhilarates our town; and it looks fresh and lively and blooming! It is the greatest event by far in the history of the Territory since it was organized. It is the pillar of fire that lights us into a broad Canaan of fertile lands. We behold now clearly, in no remote perspective, like an exhibition of dissolving views, the red savages, with their tepees, their horses, and their famished dogs, fading, vanishing, dissolving away; and in their places, a thousand farms, with their fences and white cottages, and waving wheat-fields, and vast jungles of rustling maize, and villages and cities crowned with spires, and railroads with trains of cars rumbling afar off—and now nearer and nearer, the train comes thundering across the bridge into St Paul, fifteen hours from St Louis, on the way to Lake Superior. Is this a dream! What but a dream, then, is the history of the North-west for the last 20 years?

Potato Blight.

Since last Wednesday, almost the entire potato crop in this region has been struck with the blight, to an unprecedented extent. The tops present the appearance of having been swept over by a withering fire. The potato commenced turning black almost simultaneously with the disease of the tops. The disease is far more general and destructive hereabouts than ever before. Fears are entertained that the entire crop will be lost. This is a great pity, for the yield is very large, and bid fair, four days ago, to be highly profitable to the farmer.

Le Roy Gazette.

We regret to learn that the potato rot has made its appearance again in several parts of this county, and is likely to damage the crop as severely as at any time since its first appearance. A gentleman from the town of Hamburg speaks of it as making serious ravages among the potato fields of that section of the county. Buffalo Express

The Chardon (Ohio) Democrat speaks of the fly, in Georgia County, as going in droves, and destroying ordinary-sized potato fields in a day. We notice the sowing of lime upon the stalks is recommended. Also the placing of straw at the edge of the field, and driving them into it and burning them. We receive accounts of the potato blight from all the surrounding country. The Warsaw papers speak of it as general in that section.—Roch Dem.

When our friends send us communications, if they would send their names it would save considerable misunderstanding. They will always be strictly confidential and none need fear to write on that account.

THE REVOLUTION IN CUBA.

REPORTED INCREASE AND SUCCESS OF THE LIBERATING ARMY.

Confirmation of Previous Accounts of the Surrender of PATRIOTS, &c.

BALTIMORE August 17, 1851.

The brig Charles Kershaw, previously reported at Charleston, from Havanna, which place she left on the 18th. announces the arrival of the U. S. steamer Vixen. with intelligence that many of the patriots from Cienfuegos, Trinadad, Villa Clara, and Principe had surrendered to the government troops; and many others had been taken prisoners.

The prevalent opinion at Havanna was, that the disturbance was very serious, but commercial matters, nevertheless, remained unaffected.

An arrival at Jacksonville, Florida, from Cardenas, (no date) confirms the previous accounts of the patriot successes. They were daily incrasing in numbers, and anxiously awaiting the arrival of Gen. Lopez. Herald.

STILL LATER.

ADVICES TO THE 8TH. INST.

NEWS FROM CARDENAS.

BALTIMORE, August 18, 1851

The Savannah News contains a letter from Jacksonville, Florida, (where a vessel had arrived from Cardenas) which says it was reported, in the latter place, that the Government troops had had several encounters with the patriots. One of some importance, in which the patriots completely routed the Spaniards, killing 100 men and capturing 14 peices of artillery. It also confirms the rising of Villa Clara, Trinadad, Santiago and Pinal del Rio So there only remains to the Spanish Government, Havanna and Matansas in the Western department. The patriots were increasing in numbers and held many strong places and were well supplied with arms and ammunition.

THREE DAYS

LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE BALTIC IN Nine Days, Eighteen and Three-Quarter Hours!

GREATEST PASSAGE ON RECORD!

The U. S. Mail Steamship BALTIC, Capt J. J. Comstock, reached the Battery at 20 minutes past 6 o'clock on Saturday, morning from Liverpool, which she left on Wednesday the 6th. inst. at 4 P.M making the passage in Nine Days Fourteen Hours 20 minutes apparent or Nine Days and 18 3-4 Hours actual time from port to port. If counted from the time she passed the Bar at Liverpool, (5 P. M.) her pasage is one hour shorter than we have made above it is at all events the shortest passage ever made.

The Baltic had good weather and fair winds for the greater part of the way, and made Cape Race several hours sooner than it was ever before made by a vessel from Europe. This side of that Cape, she experienced thick weather and adverse winds, and, having lost several floats from her wheels, her speed was considerably retarded. She left this port less than 28 days ago. She brings 145 passengers.

IRELAND.

A long spell of bad weather closed on Monday, the 4th instant. The Crops are very backward; the Harvest scarcely begun; the Grain crop is likely to be light. The Potato is very luxuriant and promises a bountiful harvest, though there are reports of disease in some localities.

The Midland Railroad from Dublin to Galway is in full operation, and high hopes are entertained of of a direct communication by steam with America. Dublin is moving on the subject.

Lord Arundel and Surry was elected to Parliment from Limerick without serious opposition on the 1st inst. Mr Russell declined-

FRANCE.

There is a report current that M. Carnot, Representative of Paris, will probably be the Republican candidate for President.

The Orleanists still think of running the Prince de Joinville.

The present officers of the Assembly have all been reelected, and the combined Royalist and Bonapartist Committee of Permanence was elected throughout on the 31st ult.

ROME.

A telegraphic dispatch received at Vienna dated Rome, 22d ult, says:

"General Gemeau, commander-in-chief of the French troops, has, without the permission of the Roman Government, seized all the gunpowder in the powder magazines, and has had it conveyed to the Castle of St Angleo, where he has Roman cannon pointed on the city. This act has increased the ill-feeling which already existed against the French."

RUSSIA.

A fearful occurrence is announced from Russia, which took place in Wladmir on the 1st of July. According to ancient custom, a procession is always held on that day, to carry the wonder-working image of the Virgin from a neighboring convent. into the town of Wladmir and back again. This time the concourse was unusually great, and just as the procession was crossing the bridge, the latter gave way, and 139 persons lost their lives; 48 have been recovered, more or less injured during the fearful event.

HORRIBLE AFFAIR, IF TRUE.—During the last few days a report has been in circulation in our vicinity to the following effect:—It is stated that on Friday last, as three children were returning to their home from school, near Liberty, in Amity county, they were overtaken by a pack of dogs, in pursuit of runaway negroes. The dogs fell in upon them, and before assistance could be rendered, killed and nearly devoured every one of them. The father of the children, hearing their screams and the barking of the dogs, ran out with his gun, and succeeded in killing two of them. At this time the owner of the dogs rode up, and threatened to shoot the father if he shot any more of his dogs. The distressed father reloaded his gun, and deliberately shot the owner of the dogs through the heart; after which he gave himself up was tried, and discharged. We have not heard the names of any of the parties. Wilkinson (Miss) Whig, Aug. 6.

Would not side walks save one-half the shoe leather which is now ground out by gravelly streets

VISIT OF THE FREEHOLDERS AND PRISON REFORM ASSOCIATION OF BURLINGTON AND MERCER.—Committees of the Freeholders and the Prison Reform Association of Burlington and Mercer counties, visited this city yesterday to inspect our county prison, in order to benefit by its recent improvements, in their respective counties. After proceeding to the jail and an elaborate examination of the structure and internal arrangement of the building, an investigation of the books, which were opened to them &c., they returned and partook of a dinner at E. Stewart & Son's, having been attended during the time by a portion of the Freeholders of Essex. After dinner an informal meeting was held, at which ——presided, and Wm. J. Allison was appointed Secretary. The following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, that upon a thorough and minute investigation of the Essex County Prison, we are deeply impressed with the excellence of the system and the benefits which must result therefrom in the reformation of convicts, the prevention of crime, and the pecuniary saving to the County.

— That we proffer our grateful acknowledgements to the Committee of Freeholders of Essex, and to the Sheriff, Jailor and Deputies for their kind attention and aid, and the candor with which they placed their books under our inspection, and afforded us every desirable item of information.

—That we commend the example of our friends of Essex to the attention of all other Counties in the State.

WM. J. ALLISON, Sec'y.

The steamer Dacota left Peoria, Ill. on Saturday, the 10th inst, bound for Minnesota, for the accomodation of settlers who were on board as passengers, when an explosion took place, by which a number of persons were killed and badly wounded. The following are the names of the killed:—Mr Haywood and two chrildren; William Baker, wife and child; Miss H. Foster. O. Vansyckle and three children of B. Woodworth; H. Barnes and Mr. Moffat.

The steamer Ocean Wave, while lying at the lower levee yesterday, took fire, and before it could be subdued her upper works were entirely destroyed.

There is an insurance on the boat for four thousand dollars.

A gutta percha tube has been placed in a colliery in Wales, having a shaft 400 feet deep, whereby a whisper either from bottom or top is instantly heard; a whistle calls attention, and then follows the message. A great source of mischeif will be thus abolished by this safe and expeditous mode of communication.

GIVE YOUR CHILD A NEWSPAPER.—A child beginning to read becomes delighted with a newspaper, because he reads the names of things which are familiar, and will make progress accordingly. A newspaper in one year is worth a quarter's schooling to a child, and every father must consider that substantial information is connected with advancement. The mother of a family being one of its heads, and having a more immediate charge of children, should herself be instructed. A mind instructed becomes fortified against the ills of life, and is braced for any emergency. Children amused by reading or study, are of course considerate and more easily governed. How many thoughtless young men have spent their earnings in a tavern or grog shop, who ought to have been reading? How many parents who have spent twenty dollars for books for their families, would have given thousands to reclaim a son or daughter who had ignorantly fallen into temtation.

On Thursday August 14. at Rahway Mr. Elias Stanbury.

DEATH IS THE TERMINATION,

But too often, of what, in its inception, was lightly treated, and fatally neglected as a common cold. The snow-ball does not increase faster by rolling, than does danger from an unchecked Cough or Cold. When inflamation once seizes upon the delicate tissue of the Lungs, tne progress of fire is scarcely swifter or more fatal than that of Pulmonary Disease, through its various stages, to its terminus, death! Yet it may be arrested in all cases by a prompt resort to Dr. Rogers' Sprup of Liverwort, Tar, and Canchalagua. To this vital truth many among the first men in the land, have appended their attesting signatures. Read their testimony in the pamphlet in the hands of Agents. You are also referred to the advertisement in another column. [142

AMERICAN

PIANO-FORTE ASSOCIATION.

A SOCIETY for the purpose of supplying Pianos to those who need them, upon the payment of a small monthly sum. The object is that all persons, even in moderate circumstances, may own a valuable Piano, and that many who now hire instruments may save their money and soon become the owners of a splendid Piano, worth at least $300.—

Members choose their own instruments from several of the first makers. Pianos are awarded on the first Thursday of each month by auction. Payments $3 per month. Subscribers limited to 100. Two instruments have already been selected by the members from the manufactories of Messrs. Dubois & Warriner, and J. B. Dunham. The success thus far proves that hundreds of Pianos will soon be distributed upon the principle of this Society, and that the benefits of the Building Associations may be extended to this branch of public interest, and that much good will consequently arise to the Musical community, and the Manufacturing interest.

A MELODEON COMPANY of 75 members is now forming, upon the above plan. The books are now open.

Persons who feel interested in this popular movement are respectfully invited to call and subscribe. Office hours, A. M. from 9 to 12; P. M. from 3 to 6,

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

THE AMERICAN CHANCERY DIGEST,

Being an Analytical Digested Index of all the Reported Decisions in Equity of the United States Courts and of the Courts of the several States to the present time, with Notes and a copious Index; also an Introductory Essay comprising an historical sketch of the Court of Chancery; an account of the nature, powers and functions of the Court and the organization and equity jurisdiction of the Court of the United States and of each of the States of the Union. By Thomas W. Waterman, of the New York Bar. 3 Vols. 1851. $15.

From the United States Law Magazine.

The mechanical execution of this great work, reflects credit on the house by which it is published. It is printed with new type, on fine white paper; and the press-work speaks well for Messrs. Bell & Gould, printers. Indeed, in appearance, the volumes both within and without and superior to any law publication which has lately appeared. When we inform our readers that this work is all it purports to be, we have said enough to suggest the fact that it must be an indispensable adjunct to the library of every practising lawyer in the Union. Of the accuracy of the Digest, the ability and professional standing of Mr. Waterman are a sufficient garanty.

In his prefatory remarks, Mr. Waterman says: "The great accumulation of reports, creating a necessity for some brief and methodical arrangement of decisions which shall be easy of reference, and at the same time scientific arrangement of each subject.

The value of this Digest is enhanced by the fact of its being a national work—confined to no one State or section, but comprehending each and every State, and the entire country at a whole. Containing all the reported decisions in equity of the United States Courts, and of the courts of the several States of the Union, from the earliest period to the present time, it embodies almost every known principle of American law, and hence becomes a complete encyclopædia of American legal science.

It was originally placed in the hands of the late John A. Dunlay, Esq., well known to the profession for his learning and accuracy as a law writer. He had, however, scarcely entered upon the task, when he was prostrated by the disease which, after a languishing sicknes of eighteen months, terminated fatally. Shortly before his decease, I was call in to prosecute the work so long unavoidably neglected. Though his sands of life were nearly spent, and the objects of sense fast fading from his sight, the vigor of a highly disciplined mind continued unimpaired to the last; and I have to acknoledge from him much valuable counsel, and may important hints and suggestions which cheered, directed and aided my subsequent labors.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS,

or Medicated Compound.

Not a family in the land should be without a supply of this inestimable preparation which is no less valuable as an immediate and unfailing remedy for diseases of the skin, the muscles and the glands, and all external injuries, than as a means of eradicating scurf and dandruff, renewing the hair and preventing its loss, and imparting to the fibrous mass a rich luxuriance and a brilliant lustre

Throughout the length and breadth of the United States the Tricopherous has received the sanction and approval of the Faculty, and Professor BARRY now holds, and is prepared to exhibit to all who desire to see them, original testimonials from eminent medical men of the most conclusive character. The instantaneous effect of this great counter-irritant in reducing external inflammation, however fiery and by whatever cause produced, is striking and extraordinary. The superficial absorbents which acting like so many syphons, take up whatever is applied to the surface, whether it be balm or poison, convey this gentle, stimulating, yet anti-inflammatory fluid into the external circulation supplying thereto a healthful tone, and enabling the vessels of the skin to throw off by evaporation through the pores the materies morbi or elements of fever. By this process the irritating principle which occasions pimples rashes, blotches, erysipelas, hettle rash, prickly heat, scald head and which is equally active in cuts, bruises, burns scalds and the bites and stings of insects, is rapidly expelled, the pain and itching are alleviated; the redness fades; and a complete cure is invariably accomplished. The same stimulating property which restores health, vigor and vegetative power to the scalp, and through the scalp to the hair, enables the skin upon any part of the body to relieve itself from disease. The whole action of the Tricopherous is in harmony with the well understood principle that nothing but healthful external stimulus will determine the fluids to the surface and enable the exhausted and torpid vessels which have been conquered by inflammation, to conquer in their turn, and put the fiery intruder to flight.

The cheapness of the Tricopherous places it within reach of the poorest—its varied uses and acknowledged efficacy render it indispensable to all.

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York; and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States Canada, Mexico, West Indies Great Britain, France, &c.,

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

In offering to the community this justly celebrated remedy for diseases of the throat and lungs, it is not our wish to trifle with the lives or health of the afflicted, but frankly to lay before them the opinions of distinguished men and some of the evidences of its success, from which they can judge for themselves — We sincerely pledge ourselves to make no wild assertions or false statements of its efficacy, nor will we hold out any hope to suffering humany which facts will not warrant.

Many proofs are here given, and we solicit an inquiry from the public into all we publish, feeling assured they will find them perfectly reliable, and the medicine worthy their best confidence and patronage'

From the distinguished Professor of Chemistry and Materia Medica, Bowdoin College.

Dear Sir: I delayed answering the receipt of your preparation, until I had an opportunity of witnessing its effects in my own family, or in the families of my friends.

This I have now done with a high degree of satisfaction, in cases both of adults and children.

I have found it, as its ingredients show, a powerful remedy for colds, and pulmonary diseases.

PARKER CLEAVELAND, M. D.

BRUNSWICK, ME., Feb. 5 1847

From an Overseer in the Hamilton Mills, in this City.

LOWELL, Aug. 10 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer: I have been cured of the worst cough I ever had in my life, by your "CHERRY PECTORAL," and never fail when I have opportunity, of recommending it to others.

Yours, respectfully, S. D. EMERSON.

☞ Read the following, and see if this medicine is worth a trial. This patient had become very feeble, and the effect of the medicine was unmistakably distinct:—

UNITED STATES HOTEL, SARATOGA SPRINGS, July 5. 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer,—Sir: I have been afflicted with a painful affection of the lungs, and all the symptoms of settled consumption, for more than a year. I could find no medicine that would reach my case, until I commenced the use of your "CHERRY PECTORAL," which gave me gradual relief, and I have been steadily gaining my strength till my health is well nigh restored.

While using your medicine, I had the gratification of curing with it my reverend friend, Mr. Truman, of Sumpter District, who had been suspended from his parochial duties by a severe attack of bronchitis

I have pleasure in certifying these facts to you,

And am sir, yours respectfully,

J. F. CALHOUN, of South Carolina.

☞ The following was one of the worst of cases, which the physicians and friends thought to be incurable consumption:—

CHESTER, PA., Aug. 22, 1846.

J. C. Ayer,—Sir: I was taken with a terrible cough brought on by a cold; in the beginning of last February, and was confined to my bed more than two months. Coughing incessantly night and day, I became ghastly and pale, my eyes were sunken and glassy, and my breath very short. Indeed, I was rapidly failing, and in such distress for breath, that but little hope of my recovery could be entertained — While in this situation, a friend of mine, (the Rev. John Keller, of the Methodist church) brought me a bottle of your Cherry Pectoral, which I tried more to gratify him, than from any expectation of obtaining relief. Its good effect induced me to continue its use, and I soon found my health much improved. Now in three months, I am well and strong and can attribute my cure only to your great medicine. With the deepest gratitude, yours, &c.

NEW AND CHEAP FURNITURE AND CHAIR ESTABLISHMENT,

311 Broad-St., Newark N. J.

(Nearly opposite Washington Hall.)

THE proprietor begs leave to announce to the Public, that he has taken the large and commodious store 311 Broad-st Newark, N. J., where he is prepared to supply any article in the furniture and chair line as low as can be purchased in New York. The following are some of the leading articles

Sofas of every description, Marble and Mahogany-top Dressing Bureaus, Book Cases, Work Stands, marble and mahogany-top Wash Stands, Hat Stands, Tete a Tetes, Divans and Ottomans, Bedsteads, including French, Grecian, Cottage and Plain; mahogany Rocking Chairs, mahogany sitting Chairs of every style and quality; also, Cane Seat, Grecian, Fancy and cottage Chairs; Centre, Side and Sofa Tables; a large assortment of Looking Glasses; Refrigerators of all sizes, both chest and upright; and every other article in the furniture line, from the most elegant and fashionable drawing room Sofa, to the plainest article of kitchen furniture

All of the above articles warranted as good as can be purchased elsewhere. He will also guarantee to sell them cheaper than any other establishment in this city.

We think any person about furnishing either on a large or small scale, can do as well at our place as at any other establishment in the country. The styles are as new, and we think, in as good taste as can be found in the city of New York or elsewhere, and we believe that good furniture can be purchased here and shifted to any part of the country at such a rate as to yield to the purchaser more value for his money, than if brought in any of our larger cities.

Please call and judge for yourselves. Don't forget the name and number.

DRY GOODS AND GROCERIES,

which we are willing to sell at a very small advance.

177] LAING & WEBSTER.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels: such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

WHEN IT OCCURS.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt.

The bowel having protruded as a rupture, or burst and known by the external LUMP OR TUMOR, should be eartfully and thoroughly returned into the abdomen and retained there by means of a suitable instrument, as a TRUSS BANDAGE, or SUPPORTER. The application of such mechanical aid in the relief and final cure of hernia, is a matter requiring much special study, skill and experience not only in the mechanism of the body, but also in that of instruments as relating to their application; for apart from the different methods of producing pressures, the disease calls for exact adaptation in the TRUSS PAD or pledget used for the purpose of retaining a hernia.

SUCH IS TRUTH.

The above truths are now being appreciated by the public having been brought particularly to their notice through the recent improvements made by Frederick M. Butler in Supporter and Hernial pads and introduced by the Hull's Truss Office, in their treatment for the relief and radical cure of Hernia. Over two year experience has now been had in the application of BUTLER'S recently patented Truss Pads—proving through numerous cases, that from their peculiar form and bearing they lie over and up on the inguinal canal, dislodge the bowels thoroughly, contract the rings or natural openings, thicken the muscular walls, and thereby effect a cure.

The office is provided with experienced male and female attendants, who apply instruments direct to the person of patients, and the public may rely upon that care being made in the application which will most likely tend to the relief and cure of the several complaints coming under their treatment, whether it be Hernia, Prolapsus Uteri, Prolapsus Ani, Piles, or other similar weakness, requiring the mechanical support of a Truss, Supporter, Belt, Braces or Bandage.

HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE,

4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St Paul's Church, New-York.

FREDERICK M. BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The male and female departments are separate and distinct. Children trussed when only two years old and invariably cured. [145is.

BABY JUMPER AND WALKER COMBINED.

The subscriber having invented and made application for a patent for the above article would hereby call the attention of the public to its superiority over all others.

It forms a neat article of furniture, somewhat resembling an ottoman; it being upon castors, the little occupant can move it in all directions around the room with the utmost ease. The top opens by a spring and then closes around under the child's arms and locks. The child sits in an upright position upon a saddle or seat, stuffed perfectly soft, bearing no weight on his arms, with its feet resting upon the floor. The child can easily raise the article, and as there is a spring in each leg it can use it as a jumper for its amusement, or push itself around the room, thus learning to walk without other assistance. As the springs buoys the child up, thereby preventing too much weight upon its feet, it gradually learns to use its legs and soon learns to walk The child can in no manner receive injury; a trial or inspection will satisfy the most skeptical of its superior utility.

Prices from $5 to $10 each, according to style of trimmings &c. Orders punctually attended to by

E. RICE, Cor. Broad and Mechanic-sts, near the Depot, ELIZABETHTOWN. N. J.

☞ Also for sale at 240 Broadway, New-York.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impetency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cerd al cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without off-spring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

It also possesses the unrivalled qualities of curing incipient Consumption, and I have administered it with great success to patients who have sought our delightful climate for the restoration of their health and the result is that a medicine has been added to the catalogue for the cure of insipient consumption.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co., of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper

WONDERFUL CURES!

AND

CANCHALAGUA;

FOR THE COMPLETE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Bronchitis, Spitting of Blood, and all other Lung Complaints tending to

CONSUMPTION.

NOTHING LIKE IT.

CURE FOLLOWS CURE!

READ THE EVIDENCE!!

The above invaluable Medicine has now been before the public sufficiently long to have its virtues thoroughly tested. It has been used by all classes of the community, under every possible variety of circumstances, and has everywhere proved itself a most powerful and efficient Cough Medicine. Lung Diseases of all kinds, yield to its influence, as mists pass away upon the rising of the Sun. This is no fiction. We give you below, letters from persons who are now living in the state of New York, and who declare, over their own signatures, all that we could possibly desire to say in its favor. Those who can read their statements and yet remain incredulous, must be beyond the reach of human testimony.

A LOVELY YOUNG LADY

CURED OF CONSUMPTION!

☞ The following is from the pen of WM. H. LEVISON, Esq., the distinguished Editor of the U. S. Military and Naval Argus under date New York, Jan. 26, 1850 What could be more conclusive?

"It is seldom we permit ourselves to occupy a space in these columns to speak in praise of any article in the patent medicine way; but when we see the life of a fellow-creature saved by the use of any medicine whatever, we consider it as our right, if not a duty, to give a simple statement of facts, that others may, in like manner be benefitted. The case which has induced us to pen this article, was that of a young lady of our acquaintance, who, by frequent exposure to the night air, contracted a cold, which settled on the Lungs before its ravages could be stayed. (This occurred two years ago this winter.) Various remedies were used, but with very little effect or benefit. The cough grew worse, with copious expectoration, and the sunken eye, and pale, hollow cheek, told plainly that PULMONARY DISEASE was doing its worst on her delicate frame. The family physician was consulted and although he would not admit to the young lady that she really had the CONSUMPTION, yet he would give no encouragement as to a cure. At this crisis, her mother was persuaded to make use of a bottle of Dr. Rogers' Compound Syrup of LIVEWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA and we are happy to state, she was perfectly cured in less than three months by this medicine alone, after even hope was destroyed. It is useless to comment on such a case as this, for the truth will reach where polished fiction never can. If any doubt the authenticity of this statement, let them call at this office.—U. S. Military and Naval Argus Office, No 79 Chatam N. Y.

Albany, June 9th, 1849.

Messrs. A. L. Scovill & Co.—I herewith forward to you a Certificate of a Cure effected by your Compound Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua. The Cough and expectoration was of fourteen months standing, and had baffled the skill of several of our eminent physicians in New York, Albany, and Cooperstown. I am the person in whom the cure was effected, and as I had previously no faith in patent medicines, I have since tried it on others, and have become satisfied of its value. Mine was as GREAT A CURE as ever was performed, as I had, during my sickness, been given up twice by my physicians. I have now commenced my business, after taking, I think about eight bottles.

Yours, repectfully, THOS. C. FAULDER.

BLEEDING AT THE LUNGS CURED.

☞ SEE HOW PROMPTLY IT ACTS!

Statement of Mr. A. Lang, Baker, No 388 Pearl street, N. Y. A few days before last Christmas, I was taken unwell, and soon commenced bleeding freely at the Lungs. I called in a Homœopathic Physician, but his medicine did not seem to help me. I read your advertisement, and thought I would try Dr. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA. Before I had takea up the third bottle, by bleeding had stopped, my Cough was gone, and I felt well as usual. My health is now good. I consider it a most excellent medicine, and cordially reccommend it to my friends. [This statement was made to the Proprietors, March 12th 1850.]

☞ This whole paper might be filled with letters, similar to the above, from those who have been cured.

FOR SALE, wholesale and retail, by A. L. SCOVILL & Co., Proprietors, at their Principal Depot, GOTHIC HALL, no 316. Broadway, New York, to whom all orders for the Medicine, and letters relating to agencies, should be addressed, post-paid.

PRICE—In large bottle, $1,00; or six bottles for $5,00.

OOLA-ITA.

AN INDIAN LEGEND.

I

Each western lake and western stream
With legend wild and tale doth teem,
For there, beneath the forest dome,
The Red Man builds his wildwood home.
And there, though wild their hunting-ground,
True and noble hearts are found,
And 'neath the western greenwood tree
Are done stern deeds of bravery.

II

Long years agone, ere white men came
To till the soil or hunt the game,
An Indian maid, the only child
Of a Quapaw chief, beauteous and mild
As is the bud of the forest rose;
And many were the springing bows
That bent for her, and happy he
The victor in the archery.

III.

As gaily as the swelling song
Of happy birds, a merry throng
Of Indian maids sang round her way
And gaily sang OOLA-ITA.
As beateous as the morning-star
Flashing in Eostern sky afar,
This maiden was, and doubly free
Till o'er her came love's witchery.

IV.

A noble youth of Sioux blood
Had wooed the blooming "forest bud";
The stream of love flowed sweetly on
Nor dreamed that it could roughly run.
But 'twixt the blissful cup and lip
Old adage says there's many a slip;
He told his faithful love, and she
Had vowed eternal constancy.

V.

Her sire, a proud, ambitious man,
Forbade their love, and thus began
The first unhappy hour she passed,
Which ere long was doomed to blast
The bright hopes of the Quapaw's pride,
White Eagle's pledged and almost bride—
A hoary chief, he said, must be Companion of Oola-Ita.

VI

Her wildest tears were shed in vain,
Joy ne'er could wreath her lips again;
An old man's bride, a chieftain's slave,
Entwined within a living grave.
She loved him not, yet must be his,
Must often feel his withered kiss,
Must oft return his cold caress
By mocking show of tenderness.

VII.

On Pepin's shore, a frowning cliff,
'Neath which the Red Man's birchen skiff
Was seldom moored, frowned fierce and grim,
And cast its shadowed outlines, dim
Upon the lake, till topmost pine
Shaded the distant water's line,
And dimmed the cheerful morning ray
That flashed upon the western spray.

VIII.

The hours flew on—at last that one
Which was to seal her doom had come;
The festive scene, the bridal train,
To others, joy, but fraught with pain
To her who would not break her vow;
But yet it seemed she must, for now
The swift-winged moment flitted by,
That moment big with agony.

IX.

Gay, painted youths and sedate sires
Were gathered round the bridal fires;
All but the beauteous bride were there.
They sought for her with lively care,
But sought in vain; the signal sped
That the intended bride had fled;
And warrior youths with speed of light
Followed fast the maiden's flight.

X.

To Pepin's shore they sped the chase,
But foremost in the eager race
Was he, the dreaded sire, his eye
First saw the maid upon the high
And beetling crag o'er Pepin's wave,
So soon to be her markless grave;
And from a doom so stern and wild
The father sprang to save his child.

XI.

He came too late. Far down the deep
Unfathomed lake, her frantic leap
Bore her frail form; and now, beneath
Lake Pepin's wave, a viny wreath
Entwines her bones, and mid a band
Of bright ones in the spirit-land,
Her free soul basks in endless bliss
With him she loves, forever his

GLEANINGS.

Let every farmer who has a son to educate believe and remember, that science lays the foundation of everything valuable in agriculture.

Friendship hath the skill and observation of the best physician, the diligence and vigilance of the best nurse, and the tenderness and patience of the best mother.

If we scrutinize the lives of men of genius, we shall find that activity and persistence are their leading peculiarities. Obstacles cannot intimidate, nor labor weary, nor drudgery disgust them.

Love not your children unequally; or if you do, show it not lest you make the one proud, the other envious' and both foolish. If nature has made a difference, it is the part of the tender parent to help the weakest.

Let no man be too proud to work. Let no man be ashamed of a hard fist or a sun-burnt countenance. Let him be ashamed only of ignorance and sloth. Let no man be ashamed of poverty. Let him only be ashamed of dishonesty and idleness!

A KISS TO FEE THE DOCTOR.

A young lady who lives in the Rue de Breda, (Paris) lately sent for a physician. She was very ill, and needed immediate advice—but the medical gentleman, though he had his time on his hands (having killed off his last patient a day or two before,) was obliged to be tardy in his visit, for appearance sake. The fever, meantime, had gained ground, and when the Doctor was announced, the patient was very ill. He entered—found a most lovely cheek burning with a hectic flush, well-chiselled lips drying with fever, and the head, to which these belonged, pillowed on lace, and arched over with curtains of silk. His heart was touched with remorse at his delay, and he resolved to give her as little medicine as possible. Of course she was well in a few days, and the Doctor called to pay his last visit, and receive the fee—due to Nature and his abstainings.

The lady received him in her boudoir, and, advanceng to meet him with the greatest cordiality, she said: "You have saved my life! For your trouble—kiss me on the forehead!"

He needed the fee in another coinage, but his gallantry was prompt. He retired with his pay in his memory, consoling himself with the thought that he had, at least, deserved honors from the Court of Cupid.

Not long after, a young gentleman, of genteel address, called upon the Doctor.

Sir," said he, "you attended Madame———, in the Rue de Breda. I call to pay your bill, and to express for her, the gratitude she feels for your care and skill." So saying, he made graceful bow, and deposited a hundred dollars upon the mantle-piece.

Decidedly, thought the Doctor. virtue is not merely "its own reward." It pays," besides.

The next morning, another gentleman with the cross of the legion of Honor in his button-hole, and expressing himself exceedingly grateful for the care the doctor had taken of the lady in the Rue de Breda, handed him fifteen gold pieces for his fee, and courteously retired.

On the point of informing this gentleman that he had been already paid. the Doctor had checked himself, remembering how possible it was that it might be indiscreet to enlighten the bald man that the young man felt also responsible for the lady's debts

Two days after, an Englishman called on the Doctor, and, expressing his gratitude for the cure of the lady in Breda street, handed fifteen guineas to the supposed, and bowed himself out.

This becomes embarassing! the Doctor said to himself, and, moreover, it grows less and less discreet, apparently, to proclaim to the last comer the payments of his predecessors. I must go and explain to the lady.

"Madame!" he said, as he was shown into the pretty boudior once more, "a physician should be as secret as a father-confessor—therefore I have allowed myself to be astonished by two of your friends, without reply. Of course I seek not to know who more than one of your admirers has called on the same errand—but here are two superflous payments, which to say the least, belong more to you than to me."

The lady looked embarassed, though evidently not displeased to know that her telling of the story of paying the Doctor with a kiss, had appealed, with equal force, to the generosity and justice of her three admirers. Recovering her self-possession, however, she insisted on the Doctor's retaining all the money that had been paid him.

"You doubtless have," she said, "among your numerous patients, some who can call ill-afford to pay you for your visits. Take the same care of them that you took of me, and, since a kiss of mine can so furnish you with the means, pray take another, and let me hear from you when your' resources are exhausted!"

Truly, charity finds indirect ways to arrive at its destination!

HOW TO GET A FARM.

About 8 years ago a Dutchman whose sole English was a good natured, yes,' to every possible question, got employment as stable man. His wages six dollars and board; that was thirty six dollars in 6 months, for not one cent did he spend. He washed his own shirts and stockings, mended and patched his own breeches' and laid by his wages. The next 6 months being now able to talk good English; he obtained 8 dollars per month; and at the end of 6 more had $48. The second year by varying his employment—sawing wood in the winter' working for the corporation in the summer' and making gardens in the spring—he laid by $100—and the next year $155; making, in' 3 years, $339. With this he bought 80 acres of land. It was wild as when the deer fled over it and the Indian pursued him—How should he get a living while clearing it? Thus he did it:

He hires a man to clear and fence 10 acres; he himself remains in town to earn the money to pay for clearing. Behold him already risen a degree—his employer. In 2 years time he has 20 acres well cleared, a log house and stable, and money enough to buy stock and tools. He now rises another step in the world, for he gets married, and with his ample broadfaced, good natured wife, he gives up town, and is now a regular farmer. In Germany he owned nothing nor never could own anything; his wages were nominal, his diet chiefly vegetable, and his prospect that he should be obliged to labor as a menial for life, barely earning a subsistance, and not leaving enough to bury him. In five years he has become the owner in fee simple of a good farm with comfortable fixtures, and a prospect of rural wealth, an independant life, rnd by the blessings of Heaven and his wife, of an endless posterity. Two words tell the story—industry and economy. These two words will make any man rich.—Ind. Farmer.

READY REPLY.—"Sire, one word," said a soldier one day to Frederick the Great, when presenting to him the request of a brevet of lieutenant. "If you say two," answered the Prince, "I will have you hanged." "Sign," replied the Soldier. The Monarch, surprised at his presence of mind, immediately granted his request.

To think that an eternity of bliss depends upon the purity of a few years of earthly existence, is an overwhelming thought. How great then is the inducement to study truth, and cultivate virtue.

IMITATING THE RICH.

The practice of making the amount other people's expenditure a standard for our own, is a very unsafe as well as ridiculous one; and it has been the ruin of many a family. For it never happens that those who adopt this rule look to the more discreet and economical than themselves, but only to the more vain and extravagant—or, perhaps, to such as possess means far more ample.

Mrs. ——, the wife of an humble mechanic, has taken for her pattern a lady, possessing, aside from her husband's large property, a fortune in her own right. The difference in their circumstances seems never to have been taken into consideration by Mrs.——; everything else is swallowed up by the ambition to equal in point of style her rich neighbor.

Never an article of dress or furniture can the latter procure, but the former is on thorns till supplied with it. Never can the one be known even to have in contemplation a pleasure excursion or visit abroad but the other is at once seized with the necessity of setting off for somewhere without delay—no matter, she has nothing in view, beyond following her chosen copy.

Such folly on the part of Mrs.——, as may well be supposed, invites the shafts of ridicule from every quarter where she is known. It chanced, recently that the rich lady, having lost her natural teeth, obtained an artificial sett, at an expense of a hundred dollars or more. People wondered whether her aspiring neighbor would carry her imitative propensity so far as to knock out her own sound ones, and cause them to be replaced with minerals. She did not do that, exactly—but managed it in this way. She insisted on being allowed to spend for her own individual benefit, a sum of money equal to the cost of her neighbors teeth.

Few, it is to be hoped, are so weak-minded as to go to such great extremes as this female; yet very many there are, who suffer themselves to be measurably influenced by those around them, regarding matters in which it is the part of wisdom to act with perfect independence. What is there in the circumstance of Miss A—, having a new hat, or Mrs. B—, a new carpet, which calls for extra expense on the part of their neighbors?

In regulating your expenditures, look to the wellare of yourself and family—not to the eyes of people whose interest is in no wise at stake.

Utterly disregarding the example of others, let your style of living correspond with your condition, be it ever so humble; thus will you be certain to gain the respect of all who in turn deserve your respect; which is surely of far greater worth than the blandishments of such as only care to bask in the sunshine of munificence, and who, should adversity come to the object of their professed friendship, would fly from it, as summer birds from a northern climate at the approach of winter.

A UNIVERSAL MORAL PANACEA.—The Yankee Blade proposes the following remedy for the ills of the flesh and spirit, composed of leaves, plants and and roots, which, if taken without a wry face, will make any man respectable and happy:

Leave off drinking.
Leave off smoking.
Leave off chewing.
Leave off snuffing.
Leave off swearing.
Leave the g'hals alone:
Plant your pleasures in the home circle.
Plant your business in some honorable employment,
Plant your faith in truth.
Root your habits in industry.
Root your feelings in benevolence.
Root your affection in God.

For directions, see the Holy Scriptures, and beware of counterfeit creeds and quack theologians.

A SIGN AS IS A SIGN.—We think bad spellers will have little difficulty in understanding the following sign, which was taken from a store door in a commercial town in California:

PHOR SAIL HEAR

Boots & Shooz, Melassez, Winnegar, Pork & Beens candels, pipes, tin kittles, orsturs, clams, bare skins, sider, brady, wood, tobakker, hats, capps, nutmegs pertaters & other tin wear; besides a lot of other fixins which aint menshined hear.

PHEED

PHOR SAIL HEAR IN ENNY QWONTITY BY THE QWORT.

Come here my little man, said a gentleman to a youngster of four years old, while sitting in a parlor where a large company were assembled, "do you know me?"—"Yes I think I do." "Who am I then? You are the man what kissed sister Jane last night in the parlor. Jane faint-ted-ded, Oh—my!

To err is human, to forgive, divine

To give and keep there is need of wit,

Too much familiarity breeds contempt.

Prevention is better than cure.

There would not be great ones were there not little

Patience is a plaster for all bruises.

The handsomest flower is not the sweetest.

Conscience is a thousand swords.

Carefulness is never more admired than by the negligent.

Southey says, in one of his letters—"I have told yon of the Spaniard, who always put on his spectacles when he was about to eat cherries, that they might look bigger and more tempting. In like manner I make the most of my enjoyments; and though I do not cast my cares away' I pack them in as little compass as I can, and carry them as conveniently as I can for myself, and never let them annoy others."

Several men employed in digging a well in Kingston, on Wednesday. One of them having occasion to go down, fainted, as was supposed. Another went to his relief; but he also fainted, when a third, fourth and fifth met the same fate. The alarm was given, and the proper course was pursued to extricate the unfortunate men, when three were found to be past recovery and two were resuscitated after great difficulty. Near the same place, John Gorman was crushed by the upsetting of his wagon laden with stone.

☞ We publish this week the Constitution and By-laws of the RAHWAY BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION, which we hope will be carefully read and considered. The plan has succeeded admirably in other places, and we see no good reason why it should not in this. The laboring man as well as the capitalist is here enabled to invest his money and be reaping the interest in more than the usual per centum. For instanee—let a man take three shares, he is then entitled to three loans of two hundred dollars each—he builds his house a double one, (of ordinary style, of course) he rents one half and occupies the other, he is then free from rent and can rent the other part for enough to more than pay half of his regular instalments. We have not time or space to go deeper into this matter, but invite a candid perusal. Any person wishing a full copy of the Constitution and By-laws, can have them by calling at this office.

Building and Loan Associations.

It has been discovered by correct arithmeticans, that a workingman in very moderate circumstances or in fact any other person, by simply paying into a common fund the small sum of two or three dollars per month, may become immediately the owner of his own house. Associations of this kind have been organized in various Eastern towns, and so great has been their success, and so fully have they realized the hopes and expectations of their founders, that they are rapidly extending themselves all over the Union, conferring blessings wherever they exist, and securing to every man who joins them the ownership of the house he lives in. At Newark, New Brunswick, and Elizabethtown, large associations are organized and are giving the fullest satisfaction to all the shareholders; in fact, so highly are they approved that in some of them no share can be purchased even at an enormous advance on what they cost.

The Rahway Association consists of one thousand shares; each person who puts down his name for a share pays in one dollar per month, and if he takes more than one share, then he pays in the same proportion. When the stock is all taken, one thousand dollars is paid in every month, all of which loaned out among the members. Each share of stock is entitled to borrow from the association two hundred dollars, and this sum is called a loan—the term "a loan" meaning the precise sum of two hundred dollars. At the monthly meeting, this money is offered on loan; there may be ten or a dozen who want to borrow it; all have equal rights to it but the question is settled by that person taking it who bids the highest premium for the preference. Thus loaned, satisfactory real estate security is given for it, and a share of stock for every loan being transferred to the association as collateral

All care'ul and intelligent persons who look into and examine the objects . offers and operations of these Associations, will not fail to be convinced of the great advantages afforded to persons of every calling. Its moral influence on hapits is excellent, for it encourages economy and savings by giving a definite object, and, as it were, imposes the obligation to continue them until a substantial good is attained. What the capitalist does for himself this Association does for its members.

It affords one of the best investments for their funds, incomes and savings that they can find. It gives them an opportunity to botrow money whenever they want it, and the privilege of paying it up in monthly installments. It enables a person to become a landholder, to have a home for his family, without the capital usually necessary.

To one who has now no means, but depends upon the savings of many years to come to procure a home of his own, this Association offers peculiar advantages. While saving, he must have a house in which to live, and must pay considerable rent. But, by subscribing for a few shares, he may make his purchase and the Association will loan him the money to pay it, this money is never called for except by his monthly installments.

If a man could buy a house and lot for, say eight hundred dollars, and have the privilege of paying for it in eight years, in monthly installments, and living in it all that time rent free, he would think he had an excellent offer. But no such terms can be obtained. One third, or one half cash down, and the balance in two, three or five years, are the best terms, and a bond and mortgage which must be met in one sum at a particular day. If the bond and mortgage are not paid at the time appointed, because money is hard or cannot be borrowed in small sums, they may be foreclosed, and the house on which the hard earnings of many years have been paid, is sacrificed to be sold for cash, and nothing left the unfortunate owner.

Now, by applying to this Association one can purchase a property, and by his installments' and their accumulations pay for it at a price much less than in the case above proposed—say $500 or $600, instead of $800.

Besides all the comfort and pride of having his own house and paying for it so easily, if the property rises, as in this place it is almost sure to do, he has all that profit, for he is an owner. Should a member desire to sell his property, these advantages will enable him to do so to the best advantage.

Take another case—and there are hundreds of such: Suppose a man has already bought him a comfortable house; when he bought it he mortgaged it for three or five years; he has paid considerable upon it, but is not able to pay the rest at once, and the mortgage will run out this year, or ne- haps is already due; he cannot get the mo it. By subscribing for a few shares in this Association, he can have the money loaned to him, pay up the mortgage, and save his property. The Association will take the mortgage, and he has the privilege of repaying the loan by installments and accumulations. There is, then, no sudden demand for a large payment; no expensive foreclosure or sacrifice.

There are many industrious and economical persons who will become members for this purpose.

This Association is worthy the especial attention of all lumber dealers, carpenters, masons, and land owners, as it encourages purchases and building, by facilitating payments.

This Association incurs no external debts, no risk of business, or fluctuations—no doubtful operations—but it rests on the unequaled security of the easy payment of its numerous individual members, who have every thing to gain by punctuality, and on the best of security, growing better every month, and approved by a finance committee.

Capitalists will have here an excellent opportunity afforded them of aiding in the building up of the place, without the trouble of building themselves. Shares in these Associations are better than common stocks. Many small and large capitalists, n other places, avail themselves of similar institutions. Parents desiring to endow their children from monthly earnings, will find this one of the quickest ways to accumulate for them a small capital to commence life with, when they come of age.

These Associations, so fully proven, are ranked among the most popular means of increasing com, fort, industry, economy and property,—in short, as among the surest safest and most beneficial institutions of the age,

We the undersigned, being desirous of forming a Building and Loan Association, combining labor with capital on such a basis as to be mutually beneficial to all its members, by furnishing a place for the safe investment of large or small sums of money, by loaning the same on good securities, on such terms and conditions as shall be specified in our Constitution and By-laws, and more especially by enabling each member, who may wish it, to erect for himself a dwelling-house, and thus become proprietor of his own home, do hereby covenant and agree, each with the other, and with all, to adopt and faithfulty abide by the following articles, as our Consittution.

Any person, being twenty-one years og age, may become a member of this Association by subscribing this Constitution, and agreeing to take one or more shares of Stock, and by the payment to the Treasurer of one dollar on each share subscribed.

A share of stock in the Association shall consist or Two Hundred Dollars, payable in monthly installments of one dollar on each share. The first installment to be paid on or before the first Monday in August, 1851; and all subsequent installments shall be paid on or before the first Monday of each and every month.

Minors, and others, may hold stock in this Association by trustees, which trustees shall be entitled to vote in election of officers, but shall not themselves be eligible to office by virtue of such trusteeship.

When the intrinsic value of a share of Stock in this Associetion shall become two eundred bollars, then the holders thereof shall cease to be a member by virtue of said share, and shall be entitled to receive the full amount of the same, deducing all arearages, interest and dues, due the Association.

Any member wishing to withdraw from this Association may have the privilege of so doing by giving to the Treasurer a written notice of his or her intention to withdraw, to be presented at the next monthly meeting thereafter, he or she shall be entitled to receive from the treasury the amount of all installment actually paid by him or her, without interest, less the amount of all installments actually paid by him or her, without interest, less the amount of all fines and forfeitures due from such member at the time of withdrawal, provided, however, that all loans made by the Association to such withdrawing stockholder shall be fully paid, both principal and interest, into the treasury, before such withdrawal can be made; Provided, also, further, that should the nett value of a share at the time of such withdawl not be equal to the amount actually paid on the same, then shall a corresponding deduction be made from the amount to be refunded, as aforesaid

Upon the death of any stockholder in this association, the legal representatives of such deceased stockholder shall be entitled to the same privileges and shall be under the same obligations as the original stockholders. Or, if preferred by them, they shall, by giving one month's notice to the Treasurer, be entitled to receive from the treasury the nett value of the shares held by said deceased stockholder, less the amount due from the same for fines and arrearages.

The officers of the Association shall consist of a President, nine Directors, and Tresurer—filling the office of Secretary and Treasurer. All of whom shall be chosen by ballot, at the Annual Meeting of the Association. The President and Vice President shall ex-officio, constitute two of the nine Directors. In case a vacancy shall occur, the Directors shell have power to fill the same.

Each stockholder, for each and every share of stock that he or she may hold in the Association, shall be entitled to a loan of Two Hundred Dollars from the funds of the Association.

Whenever the funds in the treasury shall warrant, one or more loans shall be disposed of, by auction to the highest bidder' in such manner as the Directors shall determine. In the event of the Association lying unproductive for the space of one month, the Directors are empowered to loan them to others than stockholders, on undoubted security, for a time not exceeding three months.

Whenever a stockholder shall be declared to be entitled to a loan or loans, he or she shall either pay or allow to be deducted the premium offered for the same; and before receiving the loan shall secure the payment thereof to the Association, by a bond and mortgage, for the full amount of the sum loaned, and by the assignment of the policy of insurance, if required; and, for every loan of two hundred dollars made to a stockholder, at least one share of stock shall be assigned to the Association as collateral security.

Stockholders taking loans from the Association shall pay interest monthly to the Treasurer, at the rate of one half of one per cent per month; if the interest is suffered to remain unpaid more than six months the Directors may compel payment of principal and interest by ordinary procedings on the bond and mortgage according to law.

The Association shall have power to insure all buildings on which loans may be made, the expense to be paid by the borrower.

Any member of this Association desiring to pay his monthly instalments in advance, shall be entitled to receive interest on his money so paid in advance at the rate of five per cent. per annum, to commence ...thly meeting after such payment is ...

The salary of the treasuer shall be fixed by the Board of Directors. All expenses for books, printing, and other miscellaneous expenses, must be sanctioned by a majority of the Directors, present at any regular meeting of the Board.

The stock of this Association shall consist of One Thousand Shares. No person shall be the owner of more than twenty shares.

After the first Monday in January, 1852, should all the shares in this Association be taken, a new series of subscribers may be formed, but the new series shall not share in the profits of the previous series; their accounts shall be kept seperate and distinct, but subject to the same rules and regulations as the previous series.

TERRIBLE NEWS FROM CUBA.

The Successful Landing of General Lopez near Havana.

REPORRED RISING OF THE CREOLES.

Capture of a part of the Invading Force.

Frightful Execution of Fifty Americans at Havana.

HORRIBLE SCENES.

EXCITEMENT ABOUT GENERAL LOPEZ.

No Tidings from the Spanish Army Sent to Attack the Invaders.

The city was thrown into a state of great excite ment yestarday morning, by the arrival of the steamship Winfield Scott, Capt. Couillard, with intelligence from Key West, that General Lopez had succeeded in landing on the shores of Cuba. This excitement became intense, last night, on the arrival of the steamship Cherokee, with advices from Havana to the 17th inst., confirming the intelligence of the landing of Lopez, and bringing the additional news of the capture and immediate execution of fifty Americans who were a part of the invading force.

This news, so shocking in some of its details, will be read with the greatest avidity.

We will give the accounts, in the regular order, from the landing of Lopez to the hour of the departure of the Cherokee.

The messenger, an attache of the Custom House or Post Office Department, stated that the steamship Pampero, Capt. Lewis came into Key West and anchored in the harbor on the 10th instant. After remaining several hours she left at eleven P. M., for for the Cuba shore, with General Lopez, suite and four hundred and fifty men on board. On the 12th inst., she returned, and again anchored in the harbor but left in an hour to prevent seizure. She had landed Lopez and Four Hundred and Fifty men at Cubanos, near Bahia Honda, a place about forty miles west of Havana.

The Pampero hung around Key West until the night of the 15 inst., and took some twenty or twenty five recruits bound from that place, and then departed for Jacksonville for Gen. Gonxales and his company. Jacksonville is several hundrred miles north of Key West, and it would take four or five days for the Pampero to go there and thence to Cuba. She could not get back to the Cuba shore before the 19th or 20th.

On Thursday last, the Pampero returned remained a few minutes in the harbor, and left again for parts unknown; it is supposed, for another party of filibusteros. It is understood that she took a pilot out of a Spanish vessel off Havana, and landed her people at ten o,clock, P. M, on Tuesday last, about twelve miles eastward of Bahia Honda, where they were immediately joined by the people of the surrounding country. The Pampero left at seven o'clock on the next morning, and Lopez was to march at ten o,clock against the nearest military post.

The Pampero is commanded by Captian Lewis, who directed the Creole so successfully in the Cardenas expedition; and who was arrested in this city a short time ago, while in command of the Cleopatra, and held to bail in the sum of $5,000. The Pampero is quite fast, and will run ahead of any of the war steamers. In case of attack she carries grapling irons, to close in with her antagonist and board.

We learn from the officers of the Winfield Scott, that the greatest excitement prevailed in New Orleans. There were nightly meetings held organizations going forward, drilling, &c,; and a strong confidence was expressed in the success of the movement. Two or three steamers were spoken of as about to leave with troops to assist the insurgents

After landing of General Lopez and his party, near Bahia Honda, as detailed above, fighting with the Spanish troops commenced; and a frightful slaughter took place, as near as we can learn, especially of the Spanish troops. The main body of the patriots, or invaders, were driven to the mountains, and the remainder took to boats and put to sea. These men were captured off Bahia Honda, forty miles west of Havana, by the steamer Habanero. The patriots were in four boats, unarmed, and, report says, were steering for New Orleans. They were brought to Havana by the Habanero, on Saturday morning, the 16th inst., at 1 A M., and placed on board a Spanish frigate, lying in port, and executed at 11:5 A.M. of the same morning After they were shot they were dragged by the feet, by negroes, and then left to the mob, who commenced stripping them of their clothes and carrying them on sticks through the streets, yelling like so many wild demons.

POSTSCRIPT.

HIGHMY IMPORTANT FROM HAVANA.

GAPTURE OF Lopez and his forces by Spanish TROOPS.

By letters received at New Orleans from authentic sources, dated Havana the 18th. we learn that Gen. Lopez had fought but one battle with the Spanish troops. The latter met with a repulse, but shortly receiving large reinforcements, with cannon, &c., they returned to the charge, and succeeded in utterly routing the „Patriots," and capturing nearly every one of them, including Gen. Lopez.

The battle occured almost immedtately after the lanbing. The loss on the Spanish side upon their repulse was between four and five hundred. Everything is apparently quiet at present, and no farther difficulty is anticipated until more "Fillibusters" arrive.

☞ The later news by this morning's papers is more and more complicated, but does not alter the complexion of affairs. The President had arrived at Washington, and a meeting of the Cabinet was called, and an agent despatched to Havana, for what does not appear. It is highly probable that something definite may be learned before many days.

Some notorious females paraded the streets of Buffalo, Thursday, in the "Bloomers." They soon attracted the attention of the boys, and a crowd gathered around them and followed them wherever they went—making rather familiar, and putting them to no little inconvenience. One vagabondish fellow, who was rather to officious was laid sprawling upon the side walk by the fist of one of the "fair ones," and various "scenes" occured. The demonstration, after a while became quite formidable, and the "Bloomers" sought refuge in their alarm in a store, where they remained until they escaped in a carriage

DEATH IS THE TERMINATION,

But too often, of what, in its inception, was lightly treated, and fatally neglected as a common cold. The snow-ball does not increase faster by rolling, than does danger from an unchecked Cough or Cold. When inflamation once seizes upon the delicate tissue of the Lungs, tne progress of fire is scarcely swifter or more fatal than that of Pulmonary Disease, through its various stages, to its terminus, death! Yet it may be arrested in all cases by a prompt resort to Dr. Rogers' Sprup of Liverwort, Tar, and Canchalagua. To this vital truth many among the first men in the land, have appended their attesting signatures. Read their testimony in the pamphlet in the hands of Agents. You are also referred to the advertisement in another column. [142

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:
THE AMERICAN CHANCERY DIGEST,

Being an Analytical Digested Index of all the Reported Decisions in Equity of the United States Courts and of the Courts of the several States to the present time, wsth Notes and a copious Index; also an Introductory Essay comprising an historical sketch of the Court of Chancery; an account of the nature, powers and functions of the Court and the organization and equity jurisdiction of the Court of the United States and of each of the States of the Union. By Thomas W. Waterman, of the New York Bar. 3 Vols. 1851. $15.

From the United States Law Magazine.

The mechanical execution of this great work, reflects credit on the house by which it is published. It is printed with new type, on fine white paper; and the press-work speaks well for Messrs. Bell & Gould, printers. Indeed, in appearance, the volumes both within and without and superior to any law publication which has lately appeared. When we inform our readers that this work is all it purports to be, we have said enough to suggest the fact that it must be an indispensable adjunct to the library of every practising lawyer in the Union. Of the accuracy of the Digest, the ability and professional standing of Mr. Waterman are a sufficient garanty.

In his prefatory remarks, Mr. Waterman says: "The great accumulation of reports, creating a necessity for some brief and method cal arrangement of decisions which shall be easy of reference, and at the same time scientific arrangement of each subject.

The value of this Digest is enhanced by the fact of its being a national work—confined to no one State or section, but comprehending each and every State, and the entire country at a whole. Containing all the reported decisions in equity of the United States Courts, and of the courts of the several States of the Union, from the earliest period to the present time, it embodies almost every known principle of American law, and hence becomes a complete encyclopædia of American legal science.

It was originally placed in the hands of the late John A. Dunlay, Esv., well known to the profession for his learning and accuracy as a law writer. He had, however, scarcely entered upon the task, when he was prostrated by the disease which, after a languishing sicknes of eighteen months, terminated fatally. Shortly before his decease, I was call in to prosecute the work so long unavoidably neglected. Though his sands of life were nearly spent, and the objects of sense fast fading from his sight, the vigor of a highly disciplined mind continued unimpaired to the last; and I have to acknoledge from him much valuable counsel, and may important hints and suggestions which cheered, directed and aided my subsequent labors.

Though ostensibly the third edition of the American Chancery Digest, this is substantialy a new work,—not only the plan and arrangement being new, but a large proportion of the materials, also, In the arrangement, I have avoided, as much as possible, the multiplication of divisions and sub-divisions, which only tend to confuse n, of embarrass, and have aimed at an order and classification at once simple and natural. I have amined, with few exceptions, all the reports of the different States. To ensure entire correctness I have not ventured always to rely upon the regard to brevity and clearness of statement, of well as to accuracy, With almost every decision I have also given the authorities that support it, so that the references to standard works are numerous and valuable. Explanatory notes are another feature of the work. At the end of each volume is a very copious index, which it is hoped will prove a valuable acquisition It has prepared with care, and with a view to utility. This introduction compriseses, first, an hisiorical sketch of the Court of chancery; secondly, the nature, powers and functions of the Court; and thirdly, the organization and jurisdiction of the equity courts of the equity courts of the United States and of each of the several States of the Union As these subjeats are distinct, it seemed proper to assign them to as many different chapters."

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS,

or Medicated Compound.

Not a family in the land should be without a supply of this inestimable preparation which is no less valuable as an immediate and unfailing remedy for diseases of the skin, the muscles and the glands, and all external injuries, than as a means of eradicating scurf and dandruff, renewing the hair and preventing its loss, and imparting to the fibrous mass a rich luxuriance and a brilliant lustre

Throughout the length and breadth of the United States the Tricopherous has received the sanction and approval of the Faculty, and Professor BARRY now holds, and is prepared to exhibit to all who desire to see them, original testimonials from eminent medical men of the most conclusive character. The instantaneous effect of this great counter-irritant in reducing external inflammation, however fiery and by whatever cause produced, is striking and extraordinary. The superficial absorbents which acting like so many syphons, take up whatever is applied to the surface, whether it be balm or poison, convey this gentle, stimulating, yet anti-inflammatory fluid into the external circulation supplying thereto a healthful tone, and enabling the vessels of the skin to throw off by evaporation through the pores the materies morbi or elements of fever. By this process the irritating principle which occasions pimples rashes, blotches, erysipelas, hettle rash, prickly heat, scald head and which is equally active in cuts, bruises, burns scalds and the bites and stings of insects, is rapidly expelled, the pain and itching are alleviated; the redness fades; and a complete cure is invariably accomplished. The same stimulating property which restores health, vigor and vegetative power to the scalp, and through the scalp to the hair, enables the skin upon any part of the body to relieve itself from disease. The whole action of the Tricopherous is in harmony with the well understood principle that nothing but healthful external stimulus will determine the fluids to the surface and enable the exhausted and torpid vessels which have been conquered by inflammation, to conquer in their turn, and put the fiery intruder to flight.

The cheapness of the Tricopherous places it within reach of the poorest—its varied uses and acknowledged efficacy render it indispensable to all.

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York; and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States Canada, Mexico, West Indies Great Britain, France. &c.,

THREE DOLLARS REWARD.

STRAYED away from the farm of WM. RANDOLL, Scotch Plains a small BULL. He is shedding his coat; the new hair is dark brown. Any one returning the same to said farm shall receive the above reward.

AMERICAN

PIANO-FORTE ASSOCIATION.

A SOCIETY for the purpose of supplying Pianos to those who need them, upon the payment of a small monthly sum. The object is that all persons, even in moderate circumstances, may own a valuable Piano, and that many who now hire instruments may save their money and soon become the owners of a splendid Piano, worth at least $300.—

Members choose their own instruments from several of the first makers. Pianos are awarded on the first Thursday of each month by auction. Payments $3 per month. Subscribers limited to 100. Two instruments have already been selected by the members from the manufactories of Messrs. Dubois & Warriner, and J. B. Dunham. The success thus far proves that hundreds of Pianos will soon be distributed upon the principle of this Society, and that the benefits of the Building Associations may be extended to this branch of public interest, and that much good will consequently arise to the Musical community, and the Manufacturing interest.

A MELODEON COMPANY of 75 members is now forming, upon the above plan. The books are now open.

Persons who feel interested in this popular movement are respectfully invited to call and subscribe. Office hours, A. M. from 9 to 12; P. M. from 3 to 6,

NEW AND CHEAP FURNITURE AND CHAIR ESTABLISHMENT,

311 Broad-St., Newark N. J.

(Nearly opposite Washington Hall.)

THE proprietor begs leave to announce to the Public, that he has taken the large and commodious store 311 Broad-st. Newark, N. J., where he is prepared to supply any article in the furniture and chair line as low as can be purchased in New York. The following are some of the leading articles

Sofas of every description, Marble and Mahogany-top Dressing Bureaus, Book Cases, Work Stands, marble and mahogany-top Wash Stands, Hat Stands, Tete a Tetes, Divans and Ottomans, Bedsteads, including French, Grecian, Cottage and Plain; mahogany Rocking Chairs, mahogany sitting Chairs of every style and quality; also, Cane Seat, Grecian, Fancy and cottage Chairs; Centre, Side and Sofa Tables; a large assortment of Looking Glasses; Refrigerators of all sizes, both chest and upright; and every other article in the furniture line, from the most elegant and fashionable drawing room Sofa, to the plainest article of kitchen furniture.

All of the above articles warranted as good as can be purchased elsewhere. He will also guarantee to sell them cheaper than any other establishment in this city.

We think any person about furnishing either on a large or small scale, can do as well at our place as at any other establishment in the country. The styles are as new, and we think, in as good taste as can be found in the city of New Yerk or elsewhere, and we believe that good furniture can be purchased here and shifted to any part of the country at such a rate as to yield to the purchaser more value for his money, than if brought in any of our larger cities.

Please call and judge for yourselves. Don't forget the name and number.

J. C. PRICE, 311 Broad st. Newark.

TO OUR FRIENDS,

AND THE

PUBLIC GENERALLY.

WE would say that we have bought and fitted up the Store stand formerly occupied by E. B. & R. M. TITTSWORTH, between I. Pruden's and D. Bullman's, where we are prepared to exhibit an entire new stock of which we are willing to sell at a very small advance.

DRY GOODS AND GROCERIES,

177] LAING & WEBSTER.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels: such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

WHEN IT OCCURS.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt.

The bowel having protruded as a rupture, or burst and known by the external LUMP OR TUMOR, should be cartfully and thoroughly returned into the abdomen and retained there by means of a suitable instrument, as a TRUSS BANDAGE, or SUPPORTRR. The application of such mechanical aid in the relief and final cure of hernia, is a matter requiring much special study, skill and experience not only in the mechanism of the body, but also in that of instruments as relating to their application; for apart from the different methods of producing pressures, the disease calls for exact adaptation in the TRUSS PAD or pledget used for the purpose of retaining a hernia.

SUCH IS TRUTH.

The above truths are now being appreciated by the public having been brought particularly to their notice through the recent improvements made by Frederick M. Butler in Supporter and Hernial pads and introduced by the Hull's Truss Office, in their treatment for the relief and radical cure of Hernia. Over two year experience has now been had in the application of BUTLER'S recently patented Truss Pads—proving through numerous cases, that from their peculiar form and bearing they lie over and up on the inguinal canal, dislodge the bowels thoroughly, contract the rings or natural openings, thicken the muscular walls, and thereby effect a cure.

The office is provided with experienced male and female attendants, who apply instruments direct to the person of patients, and the public may rely upon that care being made in the application which will most likely tend to the relief and cure of the several complaints coming under their treatment, whether it be Hernia, Prolapsus Uteri, Prolapsus Ani, Piles, or other similar weakness, requiring the mechanical support of a Truss, Supporter, Belt, Braces or Bandage. HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE,

4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St Paul's Church, New-York.

FREDERICK M. BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The male and female departments are separate and distinct. Children trussed when only two years old and invariably cured. [145is.

BABY JUMPER

AND

WALKER COMBINED.

The subscriber having invented and made application for a patent for the above article would hereby call the attention of the public to its superiority over all others.

It forms a neat article of furniture, somewhat resembling an ottoman; it being upon castors, the little occupant can move it in all directions around the room with the utmost ease. The top opens by a spring and then closes around under the child's arms and locks. The child sits in an upright position upon a saddle or seat, stuffed perfectly soft, bearing no weight on his arms, with its feet resting upon the floor. The child can easily raise the article, and as there is a spring in each leg it can use it as a jumper for its amusement, or push itself around the room, thus learning to walk without other asistance. As the springs buoys the child up, thereby preventing too much weight upon its feet, it gradually learns to use its legs and soon learns to walk The child can in no manner receive injury; a trial or inspection will satisfy the most skeptical of its superior utility.

Prices from $5 to $10 each, according to style of trimmings &c. Orders punctually attended to by

E. RICE, Cor. Broad and Mechanic-sts, near the Depot, ELIZABETHTOWN. N. J.

☞ Also for sale at 240 Broadway, New-York.

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

In offering to the community this justly celebrated remedy for diseases of the throat and lungs, it is not our wish to trifle with the lives or health of the afflicted, but frankly to lay before them the opinions of distinguished men and some of the evidences of its success, from which they can judge for themselves.—We sincerely pledge ourselves to make no wild assertions or false statements of its efficacy, nor will we hold out any hope to suffering humany which facts will not warrant.

Many proofs are here given, and we solicit an inquiry from the public into all we publish, feeling assured they will find them perfectly reliable, and the medicine worthy their best confidence and patronage'

From the distinguished Professor of Chemistry and Materia Medica, Bowdoin College.

Dear Sir: I delayed answering the receipt of your preparation, until I had an opportunity of witnessing its effects in my own family, or in the families of my friends.

This I have now done with a high degree of satisfaction, in cases both of adults and children.

I have found it, as its ingredients show, a powerful remedy for colds, and pulmonary diseases.

PARKER CLEAVELAND, M. D.

BRUNSWICK, ME., Feb. 5. 1847

From an Overseer in the Hamilton Mills, in this City.

LOWELL, Aug. 10. 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer: I have been cured of the worst cough I ever had in my life, by your "CHERRY PECTORAL," and never fail when I have opportunity, of recommending it to others.

Yours, respectfully, S. D. EMERSON.

☞ Read the following, and see if this medicine is worth a trial. This patient had become very feeble, and the effect of the medicine was unmistakably distinct:—

UNITED STATES HOTEL, SARATOGA SPRINGS, July 5. 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer,—Sir: I have been afflicted with a painful affection of the lungs, and all the symptoms of settled consumption, for more than a year. I could find no medicine that would reach my case, until I commenced the use of your "CHERRY PECTORAL," which gave me gradual relief, and I have been steadily gaining my strength till my health is well nigh restored.

While using your medicine, I had the gratification of curing with it my reverend friend, Mr. Truman, of Sumpter District, who had been suspended from his parochial duties by a severe attack of bronchitis.

I have pleasure in certifying these facts to you,

And am sir, yours respectfully,

J. F. CALHOUN, of South Carolina.

☞ The following was one of the worst of cases, which the physicians and friends thought to be incurable consumption:—

CHESTER, PA., Aug. 22. 1846.

J. C. Ayer,—Sir: I was taken with a terrible cough brought on by a cold; in the beginning of last February, and was confined to my bed more than two months. Coughing incessantly night and day, I became ghastly and pale, my eyes were sunken and glassy, and my breath very short. Indeed, I was rapidly failing, and in such distress for breath, that but little hope of my recovery could be entertained:—While in this situation, a friend of mine, (the Rev. John Keller, of the Methodist church) brought me a bottle of your Cherry Pectoral, which I tried more to gratify him, than from any expectation of obtaining relief. Its good effect induced me to continue its use, and I soon found my health much improved. Now in three months, I am well and strong and can attribute my cure only to your great medicine. With the deepest gratitude, yours, &c.

DENTISTRY.

Dr. CHARLES S. ROWELL,

NO. 11 CHAMEBS-ST., NEW-YORK.

Confines his attention to the practice of DENTISTRY, in all its various branches, and from his long experience in his profession, he feels assured of rendering the most PERFECT SATISFACTION.

He would invite the attention of the public to his

Premium Incorruptible Teeth.

which he will insert, either on Gold Plates, by Atmosperic Pressure, or otherwise, and which cannot be surpassed in this or any other country.

The improvements which he has introduced have rendered these TEETH perfect for Speech, Mastication, and Natural Appearance.

The instruments which he uses in his profession are of the very latest Improved Invention, and are unsurpassed in variety and quality.

Dr. R. would also invite the attention of the public to his

Premium Incorruptible Gum Teeth.

These Teeth have won the admiration of all who have seen them, and the warm approval and recommendation of all who have used or worn them.

They imitate the natural appearance of the gum and teeth so closely as to defy the strictest scrutiny.

He confidently asserts that they are a better and cheaper article than was ever before offered to the public.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impotency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cerdial cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without offspring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

It also possesses the unrivalled qualities of curing incipient Consumption, and I have administered it with great success to patients who have sought our delightful climate for the restoration of their health and the result is that a medicine has been added to the catalogue for the cure of insipient consumption.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co., of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S Tricopherous or MEDICATED COMPOUND. Not a family in the land should be without a supply of this inestimable preparation which is no less valuable as an immediate and unfailing remedy for diseases of the skin, the muscles and the glands, and all external injuries, than as a means of eradicating scurf and dandruff, renewing the hair and preventing its loss, and imparting to the fibrous mass a rich luxuriance and a brilliant lustre

Throughout the length and breadth of the United States the Tricopherous has received the sanction and approval of the Faculty, and Professor BARRY now holds, and is prepared to exhibit to all who desire to see them, original testimonials from eminent medical men of the most conclusive character. The instantaneous effect of this great counter-irritant in reducing external inflammation, however fiery and by whatever cause produced, is striking and extraordinary. The superficial absorbents which acting like so many syphons, take up whatever is applied to the surface, whether it be balm or poison, convey this gentle, stimulating, yet anti-inflammatory fluid into the external circulation supplying thereto a healthful tone, and enabling the vessels of the skin to throw off by evaporation through the pores the materies morbi or elements of fever. By this process the irritating principle which occasions pimples rashes, blotches, crysipelas, hettle rash, prickly heat, scald head and which is equally active in cuts, bruises, burns scalds and the bites and stings of insects, is rapidly expelled, the pain and itching are alleviated; the redness fades; and a complete cure is invariably accomplished. The same stimulating property which restores health, vigor and vegetative power to the scalp, and through the scalp to the hair, enables the skin upon any part of the body to relieve itself from disease. The whole action of the Tricopherous is in harmony with the well understood principle that nothing but healthful external stimulus will determine the fluids to the surface and enable the exhausted and torpid vessels which have been conquered by inflammation, to conquer in their turn, and put the fiery intruder to flight.

The cheapness of the Tricopherous places it within reach of the poorest—its varied uses and acknowledged efficacy render it indispensable to all.

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York; and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States Canada, Mexico, West Indies Great Britain, France, &c.,

Poetry.

LIFE'S BLESSING.

BY J. T. S. T.

LIFE has its sunshine! but the ray
Which dashes on its stormy wave,
Is but the beacon of decay,
A meteor glimmering o'er the grave;
And though its dawning hour is bright
With fancy's gayest coloring,
Yet o'er this cloud-encumbered night,
Dark ruin flaps her raven wing.

Life has its flowers—and what are they?
The buds of early love and truth
Which spring and wither in a day—
The gems of warm, confiding youth;
Alas! those buds decay and die,
Ere ripened and matured in bloom;
E'en in an hour behold them lie
Upon the still and lonely tomb.

Life hath its pang of deepest thrill,
Thy sting, relentless memory!
Which wakes not, pierces not, until
The hour of joy hath ceased to be;
Then, when the heart is in its pall,
And cold afflictions gather o'er,
Thy mournful anthem doth recall
Bllis which hath died to bloom no more.

Life hath its blessing! but the storm
Sweeps like the desert wind in wrath,
To scar and blight the loveliest form
Which sports on earth's deceitful path.
Oh! soon the heart-broken wail,
So changed from youth's delightful tone,
Floats mournfully upon the gale
Where all is desolate and lone.

Life hath its hope—a matin dream,
A cankered flower, a setting sun,
Which casts a transitory gleam
Upon the evening's clouds of dun,
Pass up an hour, that dream hath fled.
The flowers on earth forsaken lie;

Select Tale.

From Arthur's Home Gazette.

THINK TWICE.

"Did Horner pay the bill" enquired Mr. Gilbert of his clerk who had just come in.

The young man shook his head.

"Didn't pay it?"

"No sir."

"What answer did he give?"

"He was angry, and said that he wished you wouldn't send after the bill any more; that when he was ready, he would bring you the money, and not before."

"He said that, did he?" Mr. Gilbert spoke with considerable excitement of manner.

"Yes sir, I have never called on him that he didn't get out of patience and say something unpleasant."

"Very well," replied Mr. Gilbert, in a menacing tone; "give me the bill, I'll collect it."

And taking up his hat, he left the store. Within two or three blocks was the office of an alderman; and thither his steps were turned.

"Thank fortune! there's a short way to deal with men in these cases." Thus Mr. Gilbert talked to himself as he moved rapidly along. "Not send my bill, indeed! Why dosen't he come and pay it if he is so nice in these matters? He doesn't mean to pay; that is the true reason. But he is dealing with the wrong man, and he will find this out before he is twenty-four hours older. He can bluff off a clerk, but he will find a city baliff a very different sort of customer."

Such was the state of Mr. Gilbert's mind, as he hurried on his way to the alderman's office.

Horner, the offender in this case, was a poor tailor, who had become indebted to Gilbert for groceries. The amount of his bill was sixty-six dollars, a very large sum for him, and exceeded what he supposed it would be. Sickness, and the loss of a child had, some months previously, lessened his income, and also burdened him with unusual expenses. But for this, he would not be indebted. Honest and sensitive, the debt worried him. Instead, however, of going to Mr. Gilbert and asking him to let the obligation stand for a short time, until he could pay it off gradually, he kept away from him, and fretted himself, thinking over the unpleasant relation he bore to the grocer. As was to have been expected, the bill came in. The clerk by whose hands it was sent made his demand in a style that Horner thought rude if not insulting. This was more in imagination than in reality.

"I can't pay this now," was the tailors brief answer. He spoke with troubled voice and countenance. The clerk interpreted his manner by the word "anger."

"When will you settle it?" he enquired, with something peremptory in his voice.

"I can't tell," said Horner, in a short quick tone of voice.

The clerk bowed and went away. His report did not please the grocer, and in a few days he sent again for the money. The second demand came upon Horner while he was thinking of the bill, and hopelessly casting about in his mind for some means of paying it Not possessing a great deal of self-control, he unwisely uttered an expression of impatience the moment he saw the clerk of Gilbert.

"Well, sir, what about that bill?" said the clerk.

"Its no use to keep calling on me," replied Horner. "As soon as I have the money, I will see Mr. Gilbert."

A third time the clerk called. Poor Horner was in an unhappy state of mind. He had been thinking of little else besides the grocer's bill all the morning; while, in his mind was a nervous presentiment that he should have a visit from the collector. He was not in error. Even as the thought troubled, open swung the door, and the messenger of Gilbert entered.

"See here young man!" exclaimed Horner, before the other had time to speak; "just tell Gilbert not to send that bill here again; it won't bring the money an hour sooner. When I am ready I will pay it and not before."

The clerk turned off and left the shop without a word of reply.

"That wasn't right, John," said the tailor's wife, in a tone of gentle reproof, after a lapse of five minutes. She wisely forbore to speak, until time onough had elapsed for her irritable husband to regain a degree of self-composure.

"I know it wasn't," said Horner, pausing in his work, and giving vent to his feelings in a heavy sigh. "I know it wasn't, but this constant dunning it is hard to bear. He knows as well as I do, that he will get his money as soon as I can possibly earn it."

"No John, not as well as you do," said the wife mildly. "He cannot see your thoughts

There was a brief silence.

"Have you ever seen Mr. Gilbert, John?" enquired Mrs. Horner.

"No; but—"

The tailor hesitated. He saw what was in the mind of his wife, and felt its force.

"Don't you think it would be better to see him, and just explain how it is with you! I don't believe he would give you any trouble if you were to do so. There is no telling what kind of messages his clerk takes to him. If he gives your simple words to-day, Mr. Gilbert will be angry; and there is no knowing what he might be tempted to do."

"I don't want to see him," replied Horner. "I can't bear to look into a man's face if I owe him money."

The wife sighed; but did not answer. Both remained silent for some time. Horner's own mind soon suggested all that his wife wished but hesitated to say. It was but right for him to see the grocer, explain to him fully his position, and after assuring him of his intention to pay every dollar of the debt, ask of him a liberal extension of time.

"I'll see him," said he at length, pausing suddenly in his work, getting down from his shop-board. In a little while he was ready to go out, and he started forth to see his creditor.

In the meantime, Gilbert had kept on his way toward the Alderman's, fully resolved to hand his debtor over to the tender mercies of the law. He was within a few doors of his office when he met a friend.

"What's the matter?" inqnired the individual, "you look as if you were going to sue somebody."

"Just what I'm about doing," replied the grocer.

"Ah, indeed! who is the hard case that requires such stringent measures?"

"Horner, the tailor. You know him, I believe?"

"Yes, very well. But you are not going to sue him?"

"Indeed, I am."

"How much does he owe you?"

"Sixty odd dollars."

"I'd think twice before I troubled poor Horner," replied the other, shaking his head.

"He sends me only insulting answers," replied Gilbert. "I've dunned him until I'm tired."

"Perhaps you have dunned him two hard. He is sensitive and irritable."

"No; I've only sent three or four times. This morning he returned for answer that he would pay when he was ready; and not before."

"And in the spur of the moment, you have determined to put the account into an Alderman's hands."

"I have."

"Too hasty, friend Gilbert. In all matters of this kind it is better to think twice. Remember that Horner has had sickness and death in his family These I know have thrown him back. Here lies the cause of his slowness in paying. But surely these things entitle him to consideration. He is honest. I am certain of this."

"I didn't think about the sickness and the loss of his child," said Gilbert, in a modified tone. "But this is no justification for the rude, unsatisfactory answers be sent to my application for money."

"Of course not. But every man, cannot at all times control his feelings An honest mind often feels a quick sense of indignation when a demand is made for a debt where present, inability exists. This is no doubt the case with Horner. Honest in his intentions, he felt your repeated applications as questioning that honesty; and he could not bear the imputation with becoming patience,"

How to deal with Sorrow.

Our sorrows as well as our joys come from Him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will. God has some wise and beneficent purpose to accomplish in all his dealings with the people. They should strive to co-operate wih him—should be laborers together with God. They should seek to learn how to deal rightly with his providences, that the wished-for results may follow. The following pithy remarks on this subject from a writer of the seventeenth century, may be profitable to the reader:

"When sorrow, when the cross comes upon thee, seek not with the world to distract. Drive it not away with fresh sources of sorow, but bid it welcome. Cherish it is a heavenly visitant, as a messenger sent from God with healing to thy soul; and thou shalt find that thou 'entertainest angels unawares.' Thou shalt find the bow in the cloud: His light arising out of darkness; His form upon the troubled waters; and if He hush them not, He shall say to thy soul, 'Fear not, for I am with thee.' He shall make it gladlier to thee to be down in trouble and anguish, while he is with thee than ever any of the joys of this world were. while He was less present with thee, or wherein thou forgettest Him.

"The blessed lot is not to live joyously in the world, undisturbed by sorrow or suffering, having our good things in this life, and let to our own ways It is to lie low, (well is it for us it be of our own accord, yet any how to lie), under His cross. Tho' for a time it lay heavy upon us, it is not so heavy as sin. Tho' it wound us, the wounds are 'the wounds of a friend.' Though its nails pierce us, they are but to let forth the disease which would consume us. Though it bow us to the earth, it places us not so deep as we deserve to be; it casts us down only that, when we have learned to lie there in silence and humiliation, He may raise us up."

The phrase "some pumpkins," is now rendered "a considerable number of the spherical vegetable used in the manufacture of Yankee pies."

Miscellaneous.

Evil Company.

The following beautiful allegory is from the German:

Soporonius, a wise teacher would not suffer even his growing up sons and daughters to associate with those whose conduct was not pure and upright.

„Dearest Father," said the gentle Eudalia to him one day, when he forbade her, in company with her older brother to visit the volatile Lucinda, "dearest father, you must think us very chiidish if you imagine that we should be exposed to danger by it."

The father took in silence a dead coal from off the hearth, and reached it to his daughter.

"It will not burn you, my child; take it."

Eudalia did so and her delicate white hand was soiled and blackened. and as it happened, her white dress also.

"We cannot be too careful in handling coals," said Eudalia, in vexation.

"Yes, truly," said her father; "you see my child, that coals, even if they do not burn, blacken."

So it is with the company of the vicious.

An Irishman lost his hat in a well and was let down in a bucket to recover it; the well being extremely deep his corage failed him before he reached the water. In vain did he call to those above him; they lent a deaf ear to all he said till at last quite in despair, he bellowed out. "By St. Pathrick, if you dont draw me up, sure, I'll cut the rope."

The best part of beauty is that which a picture cannot express,

How often do we sigh for opportunities of doiug good, whilst we neglect the openings of Providence in little things which would frequently lead to the cacomplishment of most important usefulness.

CHARACTER.—A mis-step may destroy life. One sin may ruin your character. Did you ever reflect on the consequence of a single indulgence in vice? The best men have fallen, through the suggestion of another. How careful you should be while in the freshness of your days, lest a blight fall on your character and ruin you for ever. If invited to places of resort, where it is difficult to decide, take the safe course, stay away and save your reputation. This is a jewel of inestimable value—too precious to be put in jeopardy. No man ever regrets that he kept himself aloof from temptation, and the close of life he expresses his joy that he was saved from a path of shame by giving a decided negative. when the voice of pleasure beconed him on Be decided and you are safe. Yield and you may be lost. Watch with diligence, and guard every avenue through which sin may reach you. In no other way will you be sure to overcome the evil of the world.

IT'S ALL THE SAME.—"I want a ticket for William Rica," bawled out an honest son of Erin, as he presented himself at the ticket office of the Lowell railroad depot.

"Well, William Rica," responded the ticket vender, "where do you wish a ticket for?"

"Oh," replied Pat' "that's not my name, sure. It,s to William Rica I want to go."

He was told that there was no such place on the road. Pat gazed with a look of surprise for a moment, and then drew his greasy bundle still closer under his arm. At this critical moment one of his countryman, who had listened to this dialogue at a distance, pushed his way up to his confused brother, and whispered in his ear that the place was Billerica.

"Och," says Pat, discovering his blunder, and again addressing the ticket master, "it's all the same, its Bill Rica I'm for bad luck to your nick names."

CANT PHRASES—Are not wholly to be despised Worthless as they may appear, they have their uses they are the straws in the air—the chips in the stream, which serve to show the current of opinion. They are the crannies and chinks in the professions put forward by party, through which we may look and discover the hidden principles by which it is swayed. They express little, but they often indicate much. Like the stratum which lies immediatety over a seam of coal, they may be regarded as mere rubbish; but then it is rubbish we are delighted to find, inasmuch as it is in certain contact with a mine of wealth. What a vein of truth, for instance, lies in the cry of "No Popery" in whatever region of history it is found to have prevailed! The philosopher, when he meets with it, may close his books, and, without their aid, lay down with unerring accuracy, a general outline of events to be met with in its immediate neighborhood.—Walls Sketch.

HORRID DEPRAVITY.—A base wretch in the form of a man, was, a few weeks since, introduced to a lovely and confiding girl of sixteen. He pressed her hand and said in a thrilling tone, that he thought the "recent fine weather had rendered the ladies more lovely than ever." She blushed and said "very." Her parents considered the matter as settled, but he basely deserted the youug lady, after addressing this pointed language to her, and has never called at her house since. We are glad to learn that her friends have taken the affair in hand, and caused the monster to be arrested in a suit for breach of promise—damages laid at $6,000. The scamp will be cautious in future how he trifles with their loving hearts—the toughest muscle, by the way, in the whole body.

GOOD RETORT.—A humorous young man was driving a horse, which was in the habit of stopping at every house on the road-side; passing a country tavern where were collected together some dozen countrymen, the beast as usual, ran opposite the door and then stopped in spite of the young man, who applied the whip with all his might, to drive the horse on; the men on the porch commenced a hearty laugh, and some inquired if he would sell that horse? "Yes," says the young man, "but I cannot recommend him, as he once belonged to a butcher, and stops whenever he hears any calves bleat." The crowd retired to the bar in silence.

☞ If you wish to get rich, get married; when was ever honey made with one bee in the hive?

☞ Quite an unexpected occurrence took place during a steamboat excursion from Baltimore a few days since. A young woman named Jones, having danced until quite excited, was so imprudent as to drink ice water. The consequence was a violent spasmodic cholic. Her agonizing cries excited the sympathy of all present, and brandy and the doctor were put in requisition. But the excitement was soon allayed by the announcement that an additional passenger who had paid no fare, was on board the boat.

"STEALING MY THUNDER."—The origin of the singular phrase is thus explained in D'Israeli's Miscellanies. John Dennis wrote a tragedy which the actors refused to perform to empty houses, but they retained some excellent thunder which Dennis had invented, and it rolled one night when Dennis was in the pit, and it was loudly applauded. He suddenly started up, and in a fit of passion cried to the audience at the top of his voice, „They won't act my tragedy, put they steal my thunder.

A NATIVE of "Down East" describing with characteristic exageration the remarkable properties of Guano, as a promoter of vegetation, said that a few hours after planting cucumber seed the dirt began to move, the vines came up on the jump, and although he started at the top of his speed, the vines overtook him and covered him—and taking out his knife to cut the plaguy things, he found a large cucumber gone to seed in one of his pockets.

A LETTER came to the post office: Doylestown, last week, directed "To My Mammy, living in the city of Philadelphia." A day or two ago, a little fierce looking old woman stuck her head in at the post office window and calling to the young man in the office, said, " Mister, is you got arra letter here from my son Johnny?" "Yes." said the young man handing her the letter, which was from her son Johnny.

Cato' the censor, in distributing rich presents amongst his soldiers, observed that it was much better for many of the Romans to return home with silver than few with gold. So every enlightened philanthropist, looking upon all mankined as his brethren, will not, by an undue preference of a partial few, cut himself off from the power of doing good to many.

PAY ATTENTION TO CHARACTER.—Character will always operate. There may be little culture, slender abilities, no property, no position in society—still, if there be a character of sterling excellence, it will command influence— it will secure respect, and produce impresion; besides, who knows in what it may result? Therefore, let all pay the utmost attention to character; nothing is more important

RARE EPIGRAM.—The history of a certain William Smith, who lived at Penrhyn, is thus pithily summed up on a tombstone in the churchyard of that place:

Here lies William Smith; and what is Somewhat rarish,
He was born, bred, and hanged in
This here parish.

☞ In the briefest correspondence known, only two figures were used; the first contained a note of interrogation (?), implying "is there any news?" The answer was a cypher (0), "None." This was clever; but neighbor Shuttleworth, beats it. He has on his chimney two large T's one painted green and the other black, in imitation of green and black teas.

A SLOW RAILROAD.—A wag in Detroit has been taking liberties with the reputation of the Pontiac railroad. He was asked "whether he ever knew an accident on that road"—and replied.

"Never; but once a middle-aged couple left for Pontiac for Detroit, and died of old age at Birmingham—half way!"

☞ The danger of bad company is compared to a nail driven in a post; which, after the first and second stroke may be drawn out with little difficulty; but being once driven to the head, the pincers can take no hold to draw it out, which can be done only by the destruction of the wood.

☞ At Buffalo, a gentleman mounted a barrel of lard, to hear and see, on the arrival of the Mayflower, with President and suite. As he was listening to the speeches, the barrel-head gave way, and he slid easily and noislessly up to his "third-button" in the "great staple of Ohio," exclaiming, "Lard have mercy on us."

☞ "I see you are in' black; are you in mourning for a friend?" was propounded by one friend to another, the other day.

"No—I'm in mourning for my sins."

"Ah! I never heard that you had lost any," was the keen reply.

A DESCRIPTIVE NAME.—A philologist informs us that Manhatten, the name of the island on which the city of New York stands, is taken from the name given by the Indians to the original Dutch settlement, and means the place where they all get drunk.

PUT TO SHIFT FOR AN ANSWER.—"Pray, Miss Sophia, what are you making? said Dr, B, to a young lady who was at work upon a garment of a certain description.—"A Sophy covering, Doctor" was the reply.

The man who cheats the printer, left town on Saturday in company with the man who flogs his wife—they were joined on the outskirts by the man who stole the sick childs soup. Three worthy comrades.—Exchagne.

☞ A prince having asked his physician how much food was sufficient to nourish and support the body, the physician replied: "One pound of food will support man—should he take more, the man must support the food."

A Yankee, according to the poet Saxe, is a driving young man:

"He sees aquedrcts in bubbling springs;
Buildings in stone, and cash in everything."

To Correspondents.

All communications must be post-paid.

All communications are strictly confidential, and none will be inserted without the real, as well as the fictitious name is attached—This is absolutely necessary to prevent difficulties arising in future.

Notices of rejected, or delayed communications, may be found under this head.

The Gazette will be delivered in future early on Thursday mornings instead of Wednesday in order to give the latest news of Wednesday's papers.

The Central Railroad.

☞ We hope the Central Railroad Company will endeavor to correct the gross carelessness which is but too evident in the management of the Freight Trains now running upon the road. It is very annoying to have freight delayed upon the road by the wilful neglect of those whose duty and whose only business it is to deliver freight punctually. An instance occurred recently which may serve to show in some measure the neglect of those referred to.

On the 15th of August, we had a half barrel sent us from New York, and registered upon the freight bill of said date, but it did not reach us until the 25th, (which delay rendered the contents almost entirely unfit for use), and would not then probably, had we not presented to the Freight Agent here, a bill for the amount of the goods, when the very next day the article was forwarded without delay. The reason given for the delay was a most singular one; the Agent did not "know that any such person lived in the place," as if no freight could be delivered here unless the owner was known to said agent. If he keeps himself informed of all the new comers in the place, he must keep better posted up than most people.

Drawing our conclusions from this, we suppose to have freight delivered here, punctually, one must make himself known (wonder if they keep a record of new comers !) to those employed on the road. Perhaps the Company have made new arrangements and this is one of them; if it is, we hope they will not forget to insert it in their schedule of Fall arrangements, so that all may understand them and be prepared to wait patiently, should they be strangers.

We do not wish to find fault when there is but little if any occasion for it, but when men resort to such paltry excuses for their own negligence, and to screen themselves from censure, then they must expect exposure. We shall be glad to record anything in respect to the road or its attachees that will add to its praise or its benefit, but we shall also be ready to correct any fault which may appear either in the Company or those in their employ.

☞ We would respectfully inquire of the Post Master at Elizabethtown, if it is impossible for him to change the maile down the road which arrive there at 7 o'clock, A. M., in time to return at 3 o'clock, P. M., and also, how many days is required to send a package to Rahway? a distance of five miles. Our reasons for asking are these: papers which are mailed at Somerville on Tuesday, and leave on Wednesday morning, do not arrive here until Thursday night, being two days upon the road. Packages which leave here on Thursday morning arrive there at 1-4 past 7 A. M., in time to leave for Rahway at 10 o'clock, A. M., seldom get there before Monday, and often times not at all. This is an injury to us, and should be remedied by those whose duty it is to attend to these matters. The fault does not lie in our Post-office we know, as all papers are delivered punctually, and are sent the day they are mailed.

SINGULAR FREAK OF ELECTRICITY.—A violent clap of thunder occurred, the Burlington, Gazette says, early on Sunday morinng last, which much alarmed many of the citizens of that place, all supposing their premises were struck somewhere. In the morning it was found that a pole at the house of Dr. John Griscom had been struck, on which was a weather-cock of sheet iron, at a height of about 50 feet, and connected with it was a copper wire wound round the pole and decending some distance into the ground. The charge passed upward, not only melting, but actually burning up the copper wire, and singing off the tail of the effigy at the top which was the figure of a horse.

DEPREDATIONS BY GRASSHOPPERS.—The clover fields in various parts of Hunterdon county, the Lambertiville Diarist states, present a curious appearance, in consequence of recent depredations committed upon them by the grasshoppers. The leaves are eaten off, leaving the stock bare; and in many fields, it is thought the seed is entirely destroyed. Buckwheat has also been attacked by them and the leaves and blossoms eaten off. Other singular freaks have been performed by this insect, in various parts of the country. Among the rest, a great swarm, entirely filling the atmosphere, passed over the city of Reading, Pa., last week.

MELANCHOLY CASE OF DROWNING AT ELIZABETHTOWN—A very promising son of Judge Naar, of Elizabethtown, aged about 21, went with some friends bathing on Saturday afternoon, in Horse's Creek, and having gone in beyond his depth, he called for assistance, which was rendered as soon as possible—but he sunk not to rise again. It is supposed he was taken with the cramp.

Arrival of the Atlantic.

The Steamship Atlantic arrived at New York on Monday morning last, with four days later intelligence. She brings no special news. Cotton has advanced one-eighth of a cent per pound, and was firm. The Potato rot in Ireland is on the increase. The Atlantic made the passage in eleven days and fourteen hours.

Singular Occurrence.

A person of our place, one day last week, having either begged or borrowed the "Gazette" and read it all through, laid it aside, and said "it was not worth much, and there was nothing in it but advertisements or something else." Queer, wasn't it.

☞ We would call the attention of our readers to interesting Cuban news in another column.

Better by far not start an object, if its pursuit is to be abandoned at the first difficulty.

Serious Riot on the New Jersey Central Railroad.

ONE MAN KILLED AND TWO WOUNDED!

☞ We learn through Mr. SHATTUCK, the gentlemanly Conductor of the Passenger Train, that a serious riot took place on Monday, Sept. 1st, between two parties of Irish laborers working on different sections of the Road.

Those upon the Upper Section, numbering 300 men armed with picks, bars, &c., came down to attack those of the Lower Section, who it seems were prepared for them, and were armed with muskets which they had been secretly transporting up the Railroad in small quantities for several days previous Upon the attack of the upper party, the lower fired and three men fell, one dead, and two severely wounded, when they fled to the woods where they continued the fight.

A party were arrested at Elizabethtown on Tuesday afternoon, having in their charge a quantity of muskets with which to continue the fight. The riot was not quelled when the down train left yesterday morning, and it was thought that unless effectual means were taken, that a still more serious disturbance would grow out of it. The cause as far as we could learn, was an old county dispute in reference to Ireland, between Corkonians and Ferdowns.

Interesting from Cuba.

The Spanish Counsel has taken down his flag, closed his office, and transfered all his official functions to the British and French Counsels, "placing," he says, "the persons and property of the Spanish subjects under the protection of the American government."

Sixty liberators arrived this morning from Montgomery, Alabama.

It appears, from letters published in the New Orleans Pic. of the the 23d instant, that Col. Crittenden and one hundred and fourteen men were left at Bahia Honda, by Gen. Lopez, in charge of the baggage, while Lopez himself advanced to Los Pasas.

On the next day seven hundred Spaniards landed from the war steamer Pizarro, and, cut off Crittenden from his companions.

Crittenden made one attempt to rejoin his comrades, but was repulsed.

The Spaniards afterwards made a charge, and completely routed Col. Crittenden's little party, who spent two days and nights in the chapparels, without any sustenance.

Fifty of them afterwards made their way to the seashore, where they found some boats, in which they embarked.

They spent one night on the ocean, and the next day were taken prisoners by the Habanero, as detailed in previous reports.

There are still sixty-four of this party missing Forty of them are known to have been shot in a small farm house, and a Spanish lieutenant reports that on the 14th he came upon twenty of them, guarding an equal number of their wounded comrades, all of whom were massacred.

It was reported, also on Spanish authority, that the remaining twenty-four were afterwards slaughtered.

The New Orleans papers also published letters from Brand, James, and Kerr. They are very brief, being merely a list of adieus to friends.

The papers further state that the late outrages in New Orleans were committed by the lowest class of the population, and that none of the fillibusteros were engaged in them.

Volcanic Eruption at Martinique.

The St. Lucia Palladium says: We have just received Martinique letters of the 6th inst. They bring the startling accounts of a frightful eruption of the long dormant volcano of the Pelee Mountain at that island, which took place during the night of Tuesday last, the 5th inst. Like the great and memorable eruption of the St. Vincent Soufriere, in 1812, the phenomonon at Martinique is described as having been accompanied with "a noise similar to the approach of thunder, still nearer and nearer, with a vibration that affected the feelings and hearing." It appears, however, that, beyond a layer of grey sand, gritty particles of calcined earth, and favilla, found in the morning upon the streets, houses and shipping, as having been thrown forth by the volcano in the night, the people of St. Pierre were, up to our last accounts, uninformed of the effects of the phenomenon.

The following extract of a private letter may, in the absence of more collected particulars, give some idea of the eruption:

ST. PIERRE, August 6, 1851.

A strong rumbling noise was heard last night, which continued from about midnight to four o'clock this morning. At daylight this morning, we observed three streaming chimneys of smoke on the Pelee mountain. One of these was of black smoke resembling the smoke from a steamship, though ten times more voluminous than the chimney of our steam frigate. The other two were formed of a whitish smoke. I assure you I never before saw anything so grand. The town is all covered over with grey ashes. A great many persons have gone to the mount, but cannot reach it before night. There has been no shock of earthquake felt; but persons living in the neighborhood declare that they were driven from their homes by the strong smell of sulphur, and the fear of danger from their vicinity to the eruption.

THE MENDOTA TREATY.—In the treaty made at Mendota, with the Sioux, there was a preamble and provision inserted to this effect: that whereas the half-breeds at Lake Pepin had neglected to appropriate and possess the half-breed tract bestowed upon them by the Sioux Indians, it was then mutually understood and agreed by and between the Sioux and the half-breeds' that the half breed tract might become the property in fee of the United States, upon the payment to the half breeds, of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars; but that said article of provision, for the sale of the half-breed tract, should be considered a distinct, seperate, substantive proposition' to be rejected or acceded to by the Senate, without in any manner affecting the ratification of the treaty for the other lands. $150,000 is $50,000 less than was stipulated to be paid by the terms of the half-breed treaty made last year; which treaty was not ratified by the Senate, because it appeared that half-breeds, (who are citizens, not aliens) were incompetent persons to a treaty. The provision in the Mendota treaty, not only will save $50,000 in the price of the half-breed tract, but' if the Senate agrees to it, will put the title of that land in the Government, instead of its remaining jointly in a multitude of persons, who could never all join in a deed so as to make a good conveyance—a difficulty which is giving infinite trouble now to residents on the half-breed tract in Iowa.

EXECUTION OF GEORGE PHAROH.—GEO. Pharaoh was executed at West Chester, Pa., yesterday, for the murder of Rachel Sharpless, committed on the 28th of September last.

Communications.

PLAINFIELD, August 1, 1851.

MR. EDITOR:—On perusing the columns of your first issue, or rather the first number of the Gazette under your control, I find you wish to make your paper interesting, by means of Local Intelligence or Communications.

I will give you a short and rather hasty sketch of a tour through the State of New York, which although not exactly local in its character, may nevertheless, be of some interest to your readers.

I started on a bright morning by the Erie Railroad, per Rampo and Jersey City, taking the Express train at 6 A. M., and was soon whirling over the meadows and hills toward the lower line of the State of New York. After riding a distance of 32 miles, I reached Sufferns—the connecting point of that greatest of all Railroads, the N. Y. & Erie—here I must give you a short and very inadequate detail of this truly great road—the largest in the world under one management. The road owns and employs upon it 130 Locomotives, all of which have four and six feet drivers, and are of the largest and fastest class built; the track is six feet wide; the Cars being about nine feet wide inside; the seats are large enough to seat three persons comfortably, although but two are permitted to occupy them unless from choice of the occupants.

After leaving Sufferns we where whirled with the rapidity of an Express train to Turner's, 47 miles from New York, where we breakfasted upon "the fat of the land." From thence through Chester, Goshen and Middletown, those far-famed counties for milk and butter. So large is the quantity of milk sent from this region, that the Company run several trains per day laden with milk alone, to the city of New York; from thence to Delaware or Port Jervis, (as it was formerly called), a lively village situated upon a hill. The principal part of the town is hidden from the Depot, but can be seen before you reach the town from the cars, as the road here makes a long curve some three or four miles in extent, which gives a beautiful view of the village. Just below this place the point of boundary of the three States, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania is markod by a large stone—by standing on which a person turning round can describe a circle with his foot over all three of the States. Port Jervis contains a large Hotel opposite the Depot, called the "DELAWARE HOUSE," and a Seminary for young ladies. The view from the mountain north of the village, presents to the eye a noble panorama. The Delaware and Hudson Canal here runs along the right of the Railroad, and continues for a number of miles. Delaware is the termination of the Eastern Division of the road.

Pond Eddy is the next place which I wish to note, the road and scenery are both noble and of the most grand and lofty description, with a landscape of a wild character, the road running along the river on one side at a height of 30 feet, and on the other the mountain reaches far above to the distance of 115 feet. About two miles further on the road runs along the face of the mountain at a distance of 100 feet in perpendicular height, and presents a picture of engineering talent and skill seldom witnessed; the daring sublimity and success of the work are at once an everlasting monument to the person whose mind conceived it We would advise the timid to take the other side of the cars as the sight—although one that should not be missed—is calculated to make cold chills creep over one. The next object worth observation is the Bridge over the Delaware at Narrowsburg, of a single span, 184 feet in length. It is built of wood. Deposit is the next place of note; here we dine, and here let me observe that you are not hurried in any way by the conductor, as ample time is given to eat sufficient to satisfy any but the glutton.

Cascade Bridge is the grandest and most stupendous piece of work upon the whole length of the road. This bridge is built of wood and consists of a single arch 250 feet in length, thrown over a ravine 184 feet in depth. The bridge cannot be seen to advantage from the cars, but a person can judge of the depth by a glance at the tops of the trees as he is whirled along.

But I must stop, as I have drawn out this sketch longer than I had intended, but this part of the road presents more to interest than the Western Division. I have not given as accurate a sketch of the Cascade Bridge as I had intended to; in my next, if you can spare room in your columns, I will continue them through two more letters, which I hope will be interesting to your readers.

Allow me to add that the exactness, care and precision with which every thing is conducted, cannot fail to assure the traveller that all that can will be done to insure safety and despatch. While going up or west, we were detained at Delaware; it was immediately telegraphed west to inform the train coming east, so that no detention other than this occurred.

Yours, &c.,
TRAVELLER.

For the Plainfield Gazette.

MR. EDITOR.—On perusing your neat and highly interesting paper of the 28th ult., I noticed and read the Constitution and By-laws of the "Rahway Loan and Building Association," and was at once convinced of the benefit to be derived from such an Association, as one of the highest character and the result most lasting.

We are a thriving people, and why cannot we have an association of this character? We have many enterprising and energetic men in our community, we doubt not that would embark in this enterprise, and if established on a permanent basis, could not but be attended with the greatest success. In such a society the laboring man and mechanic can, for a small amount of money, (which is paid by installments) secure a comfortable home for himself and family, which, probably under no other circumstances he could obtain. Then, why should this matter be prolonged? let us have a meeting and see if something cannot be done in regard to it.

Plainfield, Sept. 1, 1851. CLARENCE

LADY TRAVELLERS BEWARE.—This morning on the arrival of the steamer "Boston" from Bangor, we learn that a young lady passenger had been robbed on the boat. She was about 15 years of age, and her brother in Bangor had given $30 to enable her to visit Boston. It appears that while asleep in her cabin berth last night, some rascally pickpocket had moved aside the blind which covered the cabin window, and most expertly raised the skirt of her dress, slit open the pocket with a knife, and extracted her purse and the $30. On learning the circumstances, the gallant Captain of the Boston nobly presented the young lady $20 as a remuneration for her loss, and several generous gentlemen passengers contributed and presented to her $10.50 more—she thereby making 50 cents by the opperation.—Boston Journal.

Ambition like a wild horse, which dances uneasily until has thrown off its rider.

Editor's Table.

—"GRAHAM'S MAGAZINE" for September is rich, in the variety of its selections, and the elegance of its engravings. Its contributors are among the first on the list of writers at the present day.

—The "INTERNATIONAL" for September, is very much improved in appearance, and variety of reading matter. "Rural Life in Virginia," being one of its most amusing and attractive features.

—"GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK" is, as it has always been, one of the first and best monthlies published, and we hope the Proprietors will meet with a continuance of the liberal support which it now enjoys.

—The DRAWING ROOM JOURNAL" by Cooke & Dalmas, promises to be a most Elegant and Choice Family Paper, may its success be unprecedented.

—The "LADIES KEEPSAKE" contains as usual a beautiful engraving and interesting articles.

PLAY ENDING IN MURDER.—The True American states that a man was lying with his canal boat yesterday above Bristol, when another coming along and wishing to pass threw a piece of watermelon rind at him, at which the other threw back a piece of coal. Angry words ensued, when the second named boatman threw a boat-pike at the other, striking him in the neck and cutting the carotid artery, from which wound he soon died.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL.

We call the attention to the advertisement of this article and at this season when colds and coughs are so prevalent. The eminent names, lent to recommend it are conclusive proof of its value. In addition to these we have been favored with the perusal of letters from many distinguished individuals as well as humble sufferers who acknowledge their indebtedness to this valuable medicine for the recovery of their health from painful and dangerous diseases. It is at once safe and pleasant to take, and it is very powerful to cure. Those afflicted with coughs, cold, asthma, bronchitis, hoarseness, or indeed any of the various affections of the lungs, wiil do well to try the Cherry Pectoral, and will have no cause to regret the experiment.

DEATH IS THE TERMINATION,

But too often, of what, in its inception, was lightly treated, and fatally neglected as a common cold. The snow-ball does not increase faster by rolling, than does danger from an unchecked Cough or Cold. When inflamation once seizes upon the delicate tissue of the Lungs, the progress of fire is scarcely swifter or more fatal than that of Pulmonary Disease, through its various stages, to its terminus, death! Yet it may be arrested in all cases by a prompt resort to Dr. Rogers' Sprup of Liverwort, Tar, and Canchalagua. To this vital truth many among the first men in the land, have appended their attesting signatures. Read their testimony in the pamphlet in the hands of Agents. You are also referred to the advertisement in another column. [142

The American Piano-Forte Association. A SOCIETY for the purpose of supplying Pianos to those who need them, upon the payment of a small monthly sum. The object is that all persons, even in moderate circumstances, may own a valuable Piano, and that many who now hire instruments may save their money and soon become the owners of a splendid Piano, worth at least $300.—Members choose their own instruments from several of the first makers. Pianos are awarded on the first Thursday of each month by auction. Payments $3 per month. Subscribers limited to 100. Two instruments have already been selected by the members from the manufactories of Messrs. Dubois & Warriner, and J. B. Dunham. The success thus far proves that hundreds of Pianos will soon be distributed upon the principle of this Society, and that the benefits of the Building Associations may be extended to this branch of public interest, and that much good will consequently arise to the Musical community, and the Manufacturing interest.

A MELODEON COMPANY of 75 members is now forming, upon the above plan. The books are now open.

Persons who feel interested in this popular movement are respectfully invited to call and subscribe. Office hours, A. M. from 9 to 12; P. M. from 3 to 6,

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

THE AMERICAN CHANCERY DIGEST,

Being an Analytical Digested Index of all the Reported Decisions in Equity of the United States Courts and of the Courts of the several States to the present time, wsth Notes and a copious Index; also an Introductory Essay comprising an historical sketch of the Court of Chancery; an account of the nature, powers and functions of the Court and the organization and equity jurisdiction of the Court of the United States and of each of the States of the Union. By Thomas W. Waterman, of the New York Bar. 3 Vols. 1851. $15.

From the United States Law Magazine.

The mechanical execution of this great work, reflects credit on the house by which it is published. It is printed with new type, on fine white paper; and the press-work speaks well for Messrs. Bell & Gould, printers. Indeed, in appearance, the volumes both within and without and superior to any law publication which has lately appeared. When we inform our readers that this work is all it purports to be, we have said enough to suggest the fact that it must be an indispensable adjunct to the library of every practising lawyer in the Union. Of the accuracy ot the Digest, the ability and professional standing of Mr. Waterman are a sufficient garanty.

In his prefatory remarks, Mr. Waterman says: "The great accumulation of reports, creating a necessity for some brief and method'cal arrangement of decisions which shall be easy of reference, and at the same time scientific arrangement of each subject.

The value of this Digest is enhanced by the fact of its being a national work—confined to no one State or section, but comprehending each and every State, and the entire country at a whole. Containing all the reported decisions in equlty of the United States Courts, and of the courts of the several States of the Union, from the earliest period to the present time, it embodies almost every known principle of American law, and hence becomes a complete encyclopœdia of American legal science.

It was originally placed in the hands of the late John A. Dunlay, Esv., well known to the profession for his learning and accuracy as a law writer. He had, however, scarcely entered upon the task, when he was prostrated by the disease which, after a languishing sicknes of eighteen months, terminated fatally. Shortly before his decease, I was call in to prosecute the work so long unavoidably neglected. Though his sands of life were nearly spent, and the objects of sense fast fading from his sight, the vigor of a highly disciplined mind continued unimpaired to the last; and I have to acknoledge from him much valuable counsel, and may important hints and suggestions which cheered, directed and aided my subsequent labors.

Though ostensibly the third edition of the American Chancery Digest, this is substantialy a new work,—not only the plan and arrangement being new, but a large proportion of the materials, also, In the arrangement, I have avoided, as much as possible, the multiplication of divisions and sub-divisions, which only tend to confuse n, of embarrass, and have aimed at an order and classification at once simple and natural. I have amined, with few exceptions, all the reports of the different States. To ensure entire correctness I have not ventured always to rely upon the regard to brevity and clearness of statement, of well as to accuracy, With almost every decision I have also given the authorities that support it, so that the references to standard works are numerous and valuable. Explanatory notes are another feature of the work. At the end of each volume is a very copious index, which it is hoped will prove a valuable acquisition. It has prepared with care, and with a view to utility. The introduction compriseses, first, an historical sketch of the Court of chancery; secondly, the nature, powers and functions of the Court; and thirdly, the organization and jurisdiction of the equity courts of the equity courts of the United States and of each of the several States of the Union As these subjects are distinct, it seemed proper to assign them to as many different chapters."

NEW AND CHEAP

FURNITURE AND CHAIR

ESTABLISHMENT,

311 Broad-St., Newark N. J.

(Nearly opposite Washington Hall.)

THE proprietor begs leave to announce to the Public, that he has taken the large and commodious store 311 Broad-st. Newark, N. J., where he is prepared to supply any article in the furniture and chair line as low as can be purchased in New York. The following are some of the leading articles

Sofas of every description, Marble and Mahogany-top Dressing Bureaus, Book Cases, Work Stands, marble and mahogany-top Wash Stands, Hat Stands, Tete a Tetes, Divans and Ottomans, Bedsteads, including French, Grecian, Cottage and Plain; mahogany Rocking Chairs, mahogany sitting Chairs of every style and quality; also, Cane Seat, Grecian, Fancy and cottage Chairs; Centre, Side and Sofa Tables; a large assortment of Looking Glasses; Refrigerators of all sizes, both chest and upright; and every other article in the furniture line, from the most elegant and fashionable drawing room Sofa, to the plainest article of kitchen furniture.

All of the above articles warranted as good as can be purchased elsewhere. He will also guarantee to sell them cheaper than any other establishment in this city.

We think any person about furnishing either on a large or small scale, can do as well at our place as at any other establishment in the country. The styles are as new, and we think, in as good taste as can be found in the city of New Yerk or elsewhere. and we believe that good furniture can be purchased here and shifted to any part of the country at such a rate as to yield to the purchaser more value for his money, than if brought in any of our larger cities.

Please call and judge for yourselves. Don't forget the name and number.

J. C. PRICE, 311 Broad st. Newark.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, in lucing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels; such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

WHEN IT OCCURS.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be indueed through strangulation at any momennt.

The bowel having protruded as a rupture, or burst and known by the external LUMP OR TUMOR, should be cartfully and thoroughly returned into the abdomen and retained there by means of a suitable instrument, as a TRUSS BANDAGE, or SUPPORTER. The application of such mechanical aid in the relief and final cure of hernia, is a matter requiring much special study, skill and experience not only in the mechanism of the body, but also in that of instruments as relating to their application; for apart from the different methods of producing pressures, the disease calls for exact adaptation in the TRUSS PAD or pledget used for the purpose of retaining a hernia.

SUCH IS TRUTH.

The above truths are now being appreciated by the public having been brought particularly to their notice through the recent improvements made by Frederick M. Butler in Supporter and Hernial pads and introduced by the Hull's Truss Office, in their treatment for the relief and radical cure of Hernia. Over two year experience has now been had in the application of BUTLER'S recently patented Truss Pads—proving through numerous cases, that from their peculiar form and bearing they lie over and upon the inguinal canal, dislodge the bowels thoroughly, contract the rings or natural openings, thicken the muscular walls, and thereby effect a cure.

The office is provided with experienced male and female attendants, who apply instruments direct to the person of patients and the public may rely upon that care being made in the application which will most likely tend to the relief and cure of the several complaints coming under their treatment, whether it be Hernia, Prolapsus Uteri, Prolapsus Ani, Piles, or other similar weakness, requiring the mechanical support of a Truss, Supporter, Belt, Braces or Bandage. HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE,

4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St Paul's Church, New-York.

FREDERICK M. BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The male and female departments are separate and distinct. Children trussed when only two years old and invariably cured. [145is.

BABY JUMPER

AND

WALKER COMBINED.

The subscriber having invented and made application for a patent for the above article would hereby call the attention of the public to its superiority over all others.

It forms a neat article of furniture, somewhat resembling an ottoman; it being upon castors, the little occupant can move it in all directions around the room with the utmost ease. The top opens by a spring and then closes around under the child's arms and locks. The child sits in an upright position upon a saddle or seat, stuffed perfectly soft, bearing no weight on his arms, with its feet resting upon the floor. The child can easily raise the article, and as there is a spring in each leg it can use it as a jumper for its amusement, or push itself around the room, thus learning to walk without other asistance. As the springs buoys the child up, thereby preventing too much weight upon its feet, it gradually learns to use its legs and soon learns to walk The child can in no manner receive injury; a trial or inspection will satisfy the most skeptical of its superior utility.

Prices from $5 to $10 each, according to style of trimmings &c. Orders punctually attended to by

E. RICE, Cor. Broad and Mechanic-sts, near the Depot, ELIZABETHTOWN. N. J.

☞ Also for sale at 240 Broadway, New-York.

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

In offering to the community this justly celebrated remedy for diseases of the throat and lungs, it is not our wish to trifle with the lives or health of the afflicted, but frankly to lay before them the opinions of distinguished men and some of the evidences of its success, from which they can judge for themselves.—We sincerely pledge ourselves to make no wild assertions or false statements of its efficacy, nor will we hold out any hope to suffering humany which facts will not warrant.

Many proofs are here given, and we solicit an inquiry from the public into all we publish, feeling assured they will find them perfectly reliable, and the medicine worthy their best confidence and patronagy'

From the distinguished Professor of Chemistry and Materia Medica, Bowdoin College.

Dear Sir: I delayed answering the receipt of your preparation, until I had an opportunity of witnessing its effects in my own family, or in the families of my friends.

This I have now done with a high degree of satisfaction, in cases both of adults and children.

I have found it, as its ingredients show, a powerful remedy for colds, and pulmonary diseases.

PARKER CLEAVELAND, M. D.

BRUNSWICK, ME., Feb. 5. 1847

From an Overseer in the Hamilton Mills, in this City.

LOWELL, Aug. 10. 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer: I have been cured of the worst cough I ever had in my life, by your "CHERRY PECTORAL," and never fail when I have opportunity, of recommending it to others.

Yours, respectfully, S. D. EMERSON.

☞ Read the following, and see if this medicine is worth a trial. This patient had become very feeble, and the effect of the medicine was unmistakably distinct:—

UNITED STATES HOTEL, SARATOGA SPRINGS, July 5. 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer,—Sir: I have been afflicted with a painful affection of the lungs, and all the symptoms of settled consumption, for more than a year. I could find no medicine that would reach my case, until I commenced the use of your "CHERRY PECTORAL," which gave me gradual relief, and I have been steadily gaining my strength till my health is well nigh restored.

While using your medicine, I had the gratification of curing with it my reverend friend, Mr. Truman, of Sumpter District, who had been suspended from his parochial duties by a severe attack of bronchitis.

I have pleasure in certifying these facts to you,

And am sir, yours respectfully,

J. F. CALHOUN, of South Carolina.

☞ The following was one of the worst of cases, which the physicians and friends thought to be incurable consumption:—

CHESTER, PA., Aug. 22, 1846.

J. C. Ayer.—Sir: I was taken with a terrible cough brought on by a cold; in the beginning of last February, and was confined to my bed more than two months. Coughing incessantly night and day, I became ghastly and pale, my eyes were sunken and glassy, and my breath very short. Indeed, I was rapidly failing, and in such distress for breath, that but little hope of my recovery could be entertained.—While in this situation, a friend of mine, (the Rev. John Keller, of the Methodist church) brought me a bottle of your Cherry Pectoral, which I tried more to gratify him, than from any expectation of obtaining relief. Its good effect induced me to continue its use, and I soon found my health much improved. Now in three months, I am well and strong and can attribute my cure only to your great medicine. With the deepest gratitude, yours, &c.

CURE FOLLOWS CURE!

READ THE EVIDENCE!!

The above invaluable Medicine has now been before the public sufficiently long to have its virtues thoroughly tested. It has been used by all classes of the community, under every possible variety of circumstances, and has everywhere proved itself a most powerful and efficient Cough Medicine. Lung Diseases of all kinds, yield to its influence, as mists pass away upon the rising of the Sun. This is no fiction. We give you below, letters from persons who are now living in the state of New York, and who declare, over their own signatures, all that we could possibly desire to say in its favor. Those who can read their statements and yet remain incredulous, must be beyond the reach of human testimony.

A LOVELY YOUNG LADY

CURED OF CONSUMPTION!

☞ The following is from the pen of WM. H. LEVISON, Esq., the distinguished Editor of the U. S. Military and Naval Argus under date New York, Jan. 26, 1850 What could be more conclusive!

"It is seldom we permit ourselves to occupy a space in these columns to speak in praise of any article in the patent medicine way; but when we see the life of a fellow-creature saved by the use of any medicine whatever, we consider it as our right, if not a duty, to give a simple statement of facts, that others may, in like manner be benefitted. The case which has induced us to pen this article, was that of a young lady of our acquaintance, who, by frequent exposure to the night air, contracted a cold, which settled on the Lungs before its ravages could be stayed. (This occurred two years ago this winter.) Various remedies were used, but with very little effect or benefit. The cough grew worse, with copious expectoration, and the sunken eye, and pale, hollow cheek, told plainly that PULMONARY DISEASE was doing its worst on her delicate frame. The family physician was consulted and although he would not admit to the young lady that she really had the CONSUMPTION, yet he would give no encouragement as to a cure. At this crisis, her mother was persuaded to make use of a bottle of Dr. Rogers' Compound Syrup of LIVEWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA and we are happy to state, she was perfectly cured in less than three months by this medicine alone, after even hope was destroyed. It is useless to comment on such a case as this, for the truth will reach where polished fiction never can. If any doubt the authenticity of this statement, let them call at this office.—U. S. Military and Naval Argus Office. No 79 Chatam N. Y.

COUGH AND DISEASE

OF 14 MONTHS STANDING.

CURED.

AFTER BEING GIVEN UP TWICE

BY EMINENT PHYSICIANS!

Albany, June 9th, 1849.

Messrs. A. L. Scovill & Co.—I herewith forward to you a Certificate of a Cure. effected by your Compound Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua The Cough and expectoration was of fourteen months standing, and had baffled the skill of several of our eminent physicians in New York, Albany, and Cooperstown. I am the person in whom the cure was effected, and as I had previously no faith in patent medicines, I have since tried it on others, and have become satisfied of its value. Mine was as GREAT A CURE as ever was performed, as I had, during my sickness, been given up twice by my physicians. I have now commenced my business, after taking, I think about eight bottles.

Yours, repectfully. THOS. C. FAULDER.

BLEEDING AT THE LUNGS CURED.

☞ SEE HOW PROMPTLY IT ACTS!

Statement of Mr. A. Lang, Baker, No 388 Pearl street, N. Y. A few days before last Christmas, I was taken unwell, and soon commenced bleeding freely at the Lungs. I called in a Homœopathic Physician, but his medicine did not seem to help me. I read your advertisement, and thought I would try Dr. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA. Before I had takea up the third bottle, by bleeding had stopped, my Cough was gone, and I felt well as usual. My health is now good. I consider it a most excellent medicine, and cordially recommend it to my friends. [This statement was made to the Proprietors, March 12th 1850.]

☞ This whole paper might be filled with letters, similar to the above, from those who have been cured.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordial, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impetency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cordial cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoca or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without offspring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

It also possesses the unrivalled qualities of curing incipient Consumption, and I have administered it with great success to patients who have sought our delightful climate for the restoration of their health and the result is that a medicine has been added to the catalogue for the cure of insipient consumption.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co., of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper.

PROFESSOR A. C. BARRY'S Tricopherous or MEDICATED COMPOUND. Not a family in the land should be without a supply of this inestimable preparation which is no less valuable as an immediate and unfailing remedy for diseases of the skin, the muscles and the glands, and all external injuries, than as a means of eradicating scurf and dandruff, renewing the hair and preventing its loss, and imparting to the fibrous mass a rich luxuriance and a brilliant lustre

Throughout the length and breadth of the United States the Tricopherous has received the sanction and approval of the Faculty, and Professor BARRY now holds, and is prepared to exhibit to all who desire to see them, original testimonials from eminent medical men of the most conclusive character. The instantaneous effect of this great counter-irritant in reducing external inflammation, however fiery and by whatever cause produced, is striking and extraordinary. The superficial absorbents which acting like so many syphons, take up whatever is applied to the surface, whether it be balm or poison, convey this gentle, stimulating, yet anti-inflammatory fluid into the external circulation supplying thereto a healthful tone, and enabling the vessels of the skin to throw off by evaporation through the pores the materies morbi or elements of fever. By this process the irritating principle which occasions pimples rashes, blotches, erysipelas, hettle rash, prickly heat, scald head and which is equally active in cuts, bruises, burns scalds and the bites and stings of insects, is rapidly expelled, the pain and itching are alleviated; the redness fades; and a complete cure is invariably accomplished. The same stimulating property which restores health, vigor and vegetative power to the scalp, and through the scalp to the hair, enables the skin upon any part of the body to relieve itself from disease. The whole action of the Tricopherous is in harmony with the well understood principle that nothing but healthful external stimulus will determine the fluids to the surface and enable the exhausted and torpid vessels which have been conquered by inflammation, to conquer in their turn, and put the fiery intruder to flight.

The cheapness of the Tricopherous places it within reach of the poorest—its varied use and acknowledged efficacy render it indispensable to all.

Sold, in large bottles, price 25 cents, at the principle office, 137 Broadway, New York; and by the principal Merchants and Druggists throughout the United States Canada, Mexico, West Indies Great Britain, France, &c.

Poetry.

From the Waverly Magazine.

IMPROMPTU,

On seeing the grief of a young lady who had lost a letter, taken from the post-office by some other person.

"I HAVE lost a letter," a fair maiden cried,
"O, what shall I do," she sighed, she sighed;
"I'll go to the office and wait there," she said,
"Till I get some relief for this poor, troubled head."

"I'll talk to the clerks with tears in my eyes,
And bid them at once go search for my prize;
And if they don't find it, what then shall I do?"
Then for her loss she cried out "Boo, hoo, hoo."

Next for the office she quickly made track,
And hurriedly asked, "has my letter come back?"
"It has not," was the short and ready reply;
Then fainted the maiden—'twas tho't she would die

But maddened with rage, ere long she came to,
And asserted her rights as women oft do,
"Find me my letter," she urged, "or beware this Fist, that may knock you the dickens knows where.

Not used to such threats from a lady so fair.
Mute stood the clerk with a face of despair;
While the lady, not daunted by aught she had done,
Cried, "You snipe of a man, you ought to be hung."

The clerk kept as cool as cool could one be,
While the dear little angel gave him Jessee;
And as always the case with whole-hearted man,
Refused to reply in the strain she began.

"My dear little creature, most plainly I see
'Tis a terrible fix for you and for me,
But if you will tell me some penance to do,
Right gladly I'll do it with peas in my shoe."

"Quick, go quickly," was the instant reply,
"Search each nook and crook, with piercing eye;
Eat not, sleep not, till the treasure you find,
Which alone is the balm for my poor troubled mind"

"Off on my mission I'll instantly start,
But, sweet lady, one question before we may part,
"Are not you now giving me far too much trouble,
The letter, when found, may be worth not a bubble."

The lady now burning with terrible rage,
Answered. "No doubt there's a gem in each page;"
And the clerk as he left her, heard her tongue jingle,
"May be for this, I shall have to live single."

Select Tale.

CATCHING A TARTAR.

A worse set than a half-dozen disciples of Coke and Blackstone, for a victim to fall into, cannot be found in this sublunary sphere; and I defy any one to deny this statement, and produce evidence to the contrary. But sometimes, although not often the case, it will happen that, even lawyers, instead of catching a "victim," lay hands on a "tartar," and ere aware of the startling fact find themselves "sucked in."

Court was sitting in the town of P——, in the Pine tree State, some few years since, and a host of "limbs of the law," from the surrounding neighborhood here did congregate.

One bitter cold night, some half a dozen of them having obtained full and complete possession of the bar-room of the village tavern, determined on having a time as is a time. Gin-slings, hot-toddies, etc., etc,. were in abundance, and right merrily these worthies did partake. Without it was a blustering cold—within, a blazing fire, and spirits to keep the inards warm were plenty.

Why, then, could they not be cheerful, and in spirits; for recollect, reader, this was before the great temperance movement came up.

The night was rolling on apace, and still with all their cheerfulness there seemed to be a certain something wanting. Cards were voted bores, and dice and chequers were placed in the same catogory.

"Oh! that we had some victim with whom to make merry!" exclaimed Clark, as he threw a pack of cards into the fire, and stretched out his legs, giving as he did so, a prolongation to the oh!"

Scarcely had he given vent to the expression, ere the sound of a horses feet and the rattling of a wagon were heard upon the frozen ground, rapidly approaching. As the team neared the house a prolonged "w-h-o-a!" in broad dialect was heard, and the rattling ceased. A moment after, a stout built, good-natured looking person—one of that class known as "Yankee Pedlars"—entered and desired his beast might be taken care of. He followed the hostler to the stable to see the job performed.

"In luck," exclaimed Clark as the Yankee left, "Just the thing I was wishing for. We'll have rare sport now, or I'll never make another plea."

"A regular green one he looks like, don't he, Brown?" exclaimed Smith; and Jones, White and Bolt declared themselves ready for sport.

"But how how shall we work him?" asked Clark.

"Leave that (hic) to me," replied Smith. "I'll drink him drunk (hic). I'mthe most sober of any one in the room; and then we'll fix him, and leave him in the morning to gather his scattered senses."

"Smith, you're a trump!" all exclaimed. "Go ahead, and we're with you."

"Mr. Pedlar," said the hostler to the Yankee, as they had concluded their business, and were about entering the bar-room, "them 'ere lawyer chaps have been looking all the evening for somebody to have some sport with, so you'd better keep your eyes open."

"Keep dark, then, my good fellow, and let them work," said the Yankee as they entered.

Probably a more innocent, and I may add, green looking personage than the Yankee pedlar, when he entered the room and reached out his hands to the fire, could not be found.

"'Tis dreadful cold out,' said Smith. "and you had better take something to warm you up," and he handing an overflowing glass of hot toddy to the Yankee.

"Jist as much obliged to you as tho' I took it," said the Yankee. 'But you see jist afore I left hum parson Smith got me to put my name to a piece of paper, sayin' I abstain from all intoxicatin' drinks, and wine, and besides all that, I never drink anything very often."

"So much the better," all whispered, "we can get him drunk the easier."

It required not a great deal of persuasion to get one glass into the Yankee; for Smith assured him that he was a namesake of the parson's; and the pledge only meant for him while at home.

One glass went and another followed, the lawyers partaking the while. The second glass made the Yankee chatty, the next two foolish, and the two following did the business, and all declared him as drunk as a fool. By dint of hard labor with the assistance of the hostler, they managed to get him up stairs and to bed. His clothes were taken and placed so as to be easily accessible to, and then the lawyers themselves extinguished the light and retired.

All this time the Yankee had been lying with his eyes half open, watching the manœuvres of the card. He had, of course, feigned the drunkenness, for he was one of those who did love a glass occasionally, and his equal at drinking was not to be found every day.

As the lawyers retired, he leaped from the bed and amid their moanings and hiccups which prevented the possibility of their hearing the least noise, he secured his own clothing even down to boots, and selecting a single article from the clothing of each of the rest distributed them around where his own had been. This done, he again retired and by his snorings soon satisfied the lawyers that he was fast in the arms of that sleepy God, Morpheus.

A short time elapsed, and the sprigs of the law called the name of Yankee. He answered not; and they felt assured he was too drunk and sleepy to know anything; and their work commenced.

Brown slipped first from the bed. Groping round he found where Yankee's boots had stood, and taking the lamp poured the contents, a good pint of best winter strained into them. Then returned to his bed.

A moment after and Smith came forth. He would not be so hard on Yankee, so he only severed one leg from his pants, and opening the window threw it out.

Next in rotation from another bed came Clark, and then followed Jones, White and Bolt, each performing his part, and then returning to their respective beds.

The sun had been up several hours—we won't dispute about the number, reader—when our worthies opened their eyes. They looked about a moment, and recollecting that court opened at ten, they made preparations for partaking of breakfast.

Springing from their beds, each siezed his clothing and commenced getting into it.

Smith seized his pants and hauled them on. To his horror, he found them minus one leg. He looked about like one endeavoring to solve some difficult problem. He sat down on his bed, the very picture of despair, while the rest laughed heartily.

"Smith," said one, "you was too drunk last night to joke, and cut off your own trouser's leg.—You're a disgrace to the profession."

Meanwhile the others had been busy about their clothes. Bolt found his vest severed at the back, and one-half was gone. Thus he had served the Yankee—so he thought!

"And you, too, was drunk, Bolt," said White. "We'll turn you out."

But White could not find his vest. He recollected of having noticed that Yankee had one too, it being cold, and that one of them he had thrown out of the window. He looked out and there was the identical vest, his own lying across the chimney of the porch beneath, now burned to a crisp.

"To what has the profession arrived?" said Brown. "Alas for it:"

Jones had by this time pulled on his coat. Both arms were gone—and he looked, as he stood in astonishment, with arms protruding out from the edge of the coat, more like a fool than any thing else.

"What shall I do?" he exclaimed—"this is too bad. I am to defend an infringement case to-day, and a coat with no sleeves in it! Blast the Yankee!"

Brown and Clark stood convulsed with laughter, gazing at the sorry spectacle presented to their view. They gave what encouragement they could to their fellow sprigs. At that moment the court house bell and the village clocks announced the hour of ten.

Brown made all haste to pull on his boots; one on, and the other mostly so, when a strange sound was heard, and the oil came spurting up about hs legs. This was followed by a shout of laughter from the rest. Before he had laughed—now he took his turn to be laughed at.

"Alas! for my client. I wish that Yankee had been in h—l before he entered this house."

Gentlemen," said Smith, "it's my humble opinion that that Yankee pedlar wasn't any more drunk last night than we were. It was all a sham on his part, and he has taken us in well. He's gone; and now I think of it, I heard him get up last night after we turned in, and my opinion is, he made a change—took his own clothes and placed ours in their stead."

This appeared to be plausible enough, and all concurred in it.

The ceasing of the ringing of the court house bell announced to Clark that it was time for him to be moving, while the rest stood heaping imprecations on the head of the Yankee.

Reaching the bar-room, Clark seized his hat from a shelf, and instantly placed it upon his head; a full quart of oil came trickling down over his head and shoulders. "I thought I had escaped, but this is outrageous!" he gasped.

"Blast the Yankee!—he has spoiled my attending court to-day!" and he returned to his companions, while the oil was wending its way steadily down over his shoulders.

During his absence, the others had discovered a note addressed to them, which ran something after this style:

"MY DEAR FRIENDS:—When you attempt to make a victim of a pedler, obtain one not so bright as yourselves."

They attempted joking no more during the session of the court; and when the story leaked out, as of course it did, it was rather expensive, by way of "treats," by all hands.

Miscellaneous.

The Captain and a Dying Man.

A correspondent of the Blair County (Pa) Whig, furnishes that paper with the particulars of an interesting incident, of which he was an eye-witness. It occurred a few years ago on the line of the Great Internal improvements of that State. It is one of those scenes of genuine kind-heartedness which fills the mind with the involuntary consciousness that there is "something of the angel still" in our common nature.

At the point this side the mountain, where occurred the trans-shipment of passengers from the west, was moored a canal boat, waiting the arrival of the train ere starting on its way "through" to the East. The Captain of the boat, a tall, rough sun-embrowned man, stood by his draft, superintending the labors of his men, when the cars rolled up, and a few moments after a party of about a half a dozen gentlemen came out, and deliberately walked up to the capitan, addressed him something after this wise—

"Sir, we wish to go on East—but our further progress to day depends on you. In the cars we have just left is a sick man, whose presence is disagreeaple. We have been appointed a committee by the passengers, to ask that you will deny this man a passage in your boat. If he goes, we remain—what say you?"

"Gentlemen," replied the captain, "I have heard the passengers through their commitee. Has the sick man a representative here?"

To the unexpected interrogatory there was no answer, when, without a moment's pause, the captain crossed over to the car, and entering, beheld in one corner, a poor, emaciated, worn out creature, whose life was nearly eaten up by that canker worm—consumption, The man's head was bowed in his hands, and he was weeping. The captain advanced, and spoke to him kindly.

"Oh! sir," said the shivering invalid looking up, his face now lit with trembling expectation—"are you the captain—and will you take me? God help me! The passengers look upon me as a breathing pestilence; and are so unkind. You see, sir, I am dying—but, oh! if I am spared to reach my mother, I shall die happy. She lives in Burlington, sir, and my journey is more than half performed, I am a poor painter, and the only child of her in whose arms I wish to die!"

"You shall go!" replied the captain, "if I lose every passengers for the trip!"

By this time the whole crowd of passengers were grouped around the boat with their baggage piled up on the path, and they themselves awaiting the decision of the captain before engaging their passage.

A moment more and that decision was made known, as they beheld him coming from the cars, with the sick man cradled in his arms. Pushing directly through the crowd with his dying burden, he ordered a mattress to be spread, in the choicest spot of the boat' where he laid the invalid with all the care of a parent. That done, the captain directed the boat to be prepared for starting.

But a new feeling seemed to posess the astonished passengers—that of shame and contrition at their inhumanity. With one common impulse they walked aboard the boat, and, in few hours after. another committee was sent to the captain, entreating his presence among the passengers in the cabin. He went, and from their midst arose a whitehaired man who, with the tear-drops starting in his eyes, told that rough, sun-empowered man' that he had taught them all a lesson—than they felt humbled before him, and that they asked his forgivness. It was a touching scene; The fountain of true sympathy was broken up in the heart of nrture, and its waters welled up, choking the utterance and filling the eyes of all present.

The true hearted captain of that boat was General SAMUEL D. KARNS, and the above incident is worth remembering.

Serenading a young Lady.

In my young days, I was extravagantly fond of attending parties, and was somewhat celebrated for playing the flute; hence, it was generally expected, when an invitation was extended, that my flute would accompany me. I visited a splendid party one evening, and was called upon to favor the company with a tune on the flute. I, of course immediately complied with the request. The company appeared to be delighted, but more particularly so, was a young lady, who raised her hands and exclaimed that it was beautiful, delightful, &c. I, of course was highly flattered, and immediately formed a resolution to serenade the young lady on the following night. Previous to leaving the party, I made inquiry respecting her residence. I started the next night, in company with several young friends, and arrived, as I supposed, at the lady's residence, but made a most glorious mistake, by getting under the window of an old Quaker. "Now boys," said I, "behold the sentimentality of this young lady the moment I strike up the Last Rose of Summer." I struck up, but the window remained closed. The boys smiled. "Oh," said I, "it would not be in good taste to raise the window on the first air." I next struck up on Old Robin Gray. Still the window remained closed. The boys snickered and I felt somewhat flat.

"Once more, boys," said I; "and she must come." I struck up again—My Love is like the Red, red rose. Still there was no demonstration. "Boys," says I, "She's a humbug. Let us sing Home, Sweet Home, and if that don't bring her, we will give her up." We struck up, and as we finished the last line, the window was raised. "That's the ticket, boys," says I; "I knew we could fetch her." But instead of the beautiful young lady, it turned out to be the old Quaker in his night-cap and dressing-gown. "Friend," said he, "thee was singing of thy home—I think thee said thy sweet home—and if I recollect right, thee said there was no place like home; why don't thee go to thy home? Thee is not wanted here—thee, nor none of thy party. Farewell" We and our hats went home!

Chinese Tradition of a Deluge.

In an adress lately delivered in Dublin, by Dr. Gutzlaff, among other things, he made the following statement:

"Let them now look to the east of Asia, and there on its shores, washed by the Pacific, they would find China, an ancient nation which has retained its customs for over 2000 years, with a strictness and attachment that would do honor to better things. In fact, the Chinese had a continual history, even from the deluge up to the present time; they had writers in all times and all circumstances, and they had a language which, in its essential parts had undergone very little change for the past two thousand years.

Chinese history stated that there was at one time, a great deluge, when the waters rose to the heavens and that the empire was then converted into a swamp, which a king, called Shun, got drained, by means of canals. whose mouths opened into the seas and rivers. The date of this event only differed a few years from that generally assigned to the deluge. It was a comfirmation of the truth of Holy Scripture, that so distant a nation as the Chinese, who did not know from the Bible of the occurrence of the great water-fall, should yet record the same event as that spoken of in Holy Writ. There were coincidences also, such, for example, as the record of a great starvation which took place about the time when Joseph was prime minister of Egypt."

THE DEATH AT TRENTON FALLS.—A coroner's jury was held on the body of Jeremiah Blake, who was drowned at Trenton Falls, a few days since. It appears from the testimony of Mrs Blake, that her husband once or twice during the walk, said to her, "Suppose we jump in and die together," She several times cautioned him not to go so near the edge of the rocks. He had been drinking raiher too mudh, and when he did so he was very obstinate Other witnesses proved that they lived happily together, and except when he had been drinking, he was always cheerful. Mrs. B. knew of nothing that troubled him, and cannot believe that he threw himself into the water. They had been married about four years, but had no children. Blake was twenty nine years of age.

THE DEVIL SHOT.—A young man died at Pisa, rejecting the good offices of sundry monks' who threatened him with "the Devil;" and exacting a promise from a friend that he would not leave his body until it was buried. The friend, a Corsican, accordingly watched over the body in the burial. At the dead of night, "the devil" stood by his side, draped in black and red, having enormous horns and a long tail. He was asked what he wanted; but as he gave no intelligible reply, and made advances towards the body, the Corsican coolly drew a pistol and shot "the Devil" dead. He proved to be the convent "bellman." The young man was tried and acquitted, as there was no law against shooting the Devil; and the young man persisted that he really believed he was firing at Satan.

☞ "Hello, Sharp" said Pop, meeting him the other day in the street, "you hobble, my boy, what is the matter with you?"

"O, I had my feet crushed through the carelessness of a conductor the other day, between the railroad cars—that's all."

"And don't you intend to sue them for damages?"

"Damages! no, no—I have had enough of them already—hadn't I better sue them for repairs!

☞ A gentleman at a hotel called for a bottle of Hock, but the waiter not hearing distinctly asked him to repeat the order.

"A bottle of Hock," was the reply, "hic haec, hoc."

After waiting for some time, no wine appearing he again summoned the waiter:

"Did I not order some Hock, you rascal; why is it not brought?"

"Because," said the garcon, (who had been taught the Latin grammer,) "you afterwards declined it!"

☞ A gentleman ordered his servant—a regular Pat—to awake him at six o'clock, that he might get ready to start at seven by an early coach, in which he had taken his place, for the country. The gentleman awoke and called his man.

"What o'clock is it?"

"Just seven your honor."

"Seven! Did I not tell you to wake me at six."

"Yes, sir."

"And why did you not?"

"Because your honor was asleep."

A SHARP YOUTH.—"Sally," said a green youth in a venerable white hat and grey pants, through which his legs projected half a foot, perhaps more—"Sally, before we go into this 'ere Museum to see the enchanted horse, I want to ax you somethin."

"Well, Ichabod what is it?"

"Why, you see this 'ere business is gwoin' to cost a whole quarter a piece, and I can't afford to spend so much for nothin'. Now, ef you'll have me, darn'd ef I don't pay the hull o'nt myself, I will, pos-si-tiv-vi-ly." Sally made a non-committal reply, which Ichabod interpreted to suit himself, and he strode up two steps at a time, and paid the whole on't.

PRESERVING THE ONION.—Scraggs says a young man not very well versed in orthography, when reading that "the Union must and shall be preserved,' read aloud to his mother thus;

"The Onion, must and shall be preserved"

"That's true John, but we havent got vinegar enough for the hull of 'em.

EXECUTION OF GEORGE PHARAOH.—GEO. PHARAOH was executed at West Chester, Pa., yesterday for the murder of Rachael Sharpless, committed on the 28th. of September last. The outrage was perpetrated by Pharoah shooting her dead with a gun, while she was unlocking the school-house door at West Goshen, Chester, Co., she being a teacher there. Pharaoh was suspected of the crime, from having been seen in the vicinity with his gun, and this suspicion was rendered a certainty by finding that the wadding used on the occasion matched a torn copy of the The Saturday Eveving Post, which was found in his possession when arrested.

☞ Lopez and his brave companions have met with a fate undeserved, and one to which they were led by treachery of the blackest and basest character. Led to abandon his original plan of going to Puerto Principe, by a letter which he received at Key West, from a person with whom he had previous correspondence, he was induced to land at Bahia Honda, where it is well known that a number of Spanish troops were stationed to receive him. From the moment he landed, his career was one of defence. Thus deceived, who can wonder at his early and signal defeat. None of the Cubans who previously wished or pretended to wish to be free, joined him. When the hour had arrived for them to arise and throw off the yoke of tyranny, and when it could have been achieved easily by the Cubans, with the aid which Lopez and others who would have soon followed him would have given, they were found to prove themselves cowards—base treacherous cowards, who are much better calculated to make love to their mistresses and ever live in slavery of the most contemptible character, than to rise and vigorously shake off the galling fetters which binds them to the tyrranny of Spain; preferring to eke out their very life blood and existence in supineness, than to become a nation respected and honored by others; feeling the proud throbbing of hearts conscious of having done their duty to themselves and future generations, who would in after ages have lonked upon and revered their names as almost sacred.

But the fate of Lopez is sealed, and with him died the freedom of Cuba. It will be long ere any can be induced to assist and aid a people, may they need assistance ever so much, who have proved false and treacherous; defeat and misfortune ever finds assistance in the hour of need and danger, but treachery —never!

The Central Railroad—again.

It appears that a wrong impression has been created by our article last week, under this head. The fault seems to lie upon Mr. Van Fleet, the Freight Agent here, but our readers will recollect that it is his duty to receive and not to deliver freight. The porson who informed us that they "did not know that any such person lived in the place," was the Conductor of the Freight Train, (but who was not the regular one,) and the facts since elicted only serve to show and prove that the personss employed by the Company (whose duty it is to deliver freight) are notoriously negligent and careless.

The facts are these. On the 15th of August, the said freight was entered upon the Way-bill of the Central R. R. Co., as being received on board the Red Jacket at New York, and forwarded by their own train, but was not received here. On the 25th, ten days afterwards, it made its appearance from Elizabethtown and registered upon the Way-bill as if received from the New Jersey Road of that day. Now, let any one read this carefully, and let him come to a conclusion, and it will invariably be that there is existing upon the road, carelessness and negligence of the most gross character, which should be corrected immediately, if the Company wish the road to be patronized.

We presume from the facts above stated, that said freight was brought up as far as E. Town and carelessly taken off and left, but when found, entered upon the bill as being received from the N. J. Road, supposing of course, (after having been there long enough to forget all particulars in reference to it) that they had received it from them. Such negligence is highly censurable, and as long as the Company keep persons in their employ who do not perform their duty better, we shall consider it our duty to expose them in every instance. So stand from under, gentlemen!

Wyman—the Magician.

Wyman the Magician, will visit this place on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, of next week, and we advise all who may wish to be actually astonished, to go and see him.

We know Mr. Wyman to be a gentleman, in every respect, and his performances posess that high tone and character, which has drawn such large and fashionable houses. The most fastidious may visit him without hesitation. Here let us add, that not the slightest disturbance of any kind will be permitted by Mr. Wyman, who possesses the faculty of disposing of such, to the entire satisfaction of the audience. This is no paid for puff, but a slight tribute to sterling worth and merit.

☞ We have received an answer to our inquiry of last week, of the Post Master of Elizabethtown, in which he informs us the difficulty does not exist there. We are glad to hear this, as we intend to ferret it out and report where the fault lies.

☞ Catharine Hays, the Swan of Erin, is a passenger on the Pacific, and will be here in the course of the week. She is advertised to sing in Tripler Hall, New York, on the 23d inst.

LATER FROM CUBA.

EXECUTION OF LOPEZ CONFIRMED.

HIS MANFUL DEATH.

Desertion of the Creoles.

New Orleans, Wednesday, Sept. 4, 1851.

The steamship Cherokee, direct from Havana, has arrived at her wharf. From passengers, we learn of the complete failure of the Lopez expedition in Cuba.

The failure of the expedition is attributed to the separation of Col. Crittenden's command from the main body under Lopez.

The Patriots are stated to have deserted Lopez, and fled to the mountains,,

Previous to the death of Lopez, he declared that he had been greatly deceived in regard to promised aid in Cuba.

A meeting of the passengers was held on board the Cherokee, at which Gen. Lane, of Oregon, presided, and the following resolution was unanimously passed:

Resolved, That Mr. Owen, the American Consul at Havana, has forfeited every right and title to the name of an American citizen, that he has outraged every sentiment of humanity, and deserves the execration of every friend of humanity.

Great rejoicings, illuminations and processions were held, flags hoisted and guns fired at Havana to express the feelings of the people

Lopez and six of his companions were compelled to subsist upon leaves, for several days, the last meat they ate was the horse of Gen. Lopez.

Latest from Washington.

It is understood that measures have been taken by the government for the reclamation of the American prisoners at Havana. This shows that the President does not consider these men subject to the outlawry of his proclamation.

At New Orleans, no further disturbances have taken place among the distressed liberators, but all the bar-rooms in the Second Municipality have been closed 200 men have returned to Alabama, but many yet remain there for want of means to return home.

The bark Ranger, which arrived from Cuba, reports that the brig Potosia, Capt. Sawyer, of Portland had been seized at Havana for an attempt made by her officers to smuggle a quantity of powder on shore. Captain Sawyer and Ransom Reynolds the second mate, were examined, and it is thought they will be sent to Spain to serve a number of years in the chain gang.

☞ The next exhibition of the Essex County Institute, which is announced to open at the Court House on the 15th, deserves to be one of the most attractive ever held; and there is no reason why it should not be made one of the most interesting events of the year. There is perhaps no place in the world of similar size and condition, in which the mechanical arts are pursued in greater variety, extent, and perfection than here, and the agriculturists of the county are beginning to develop an intelligence and enterprise in their products hardly surpassed anywhere else. Added to this, a season of almost unexampled prosperity has given an impulse to every pursuit, which must have resulted in the production of many new objects which would be both interesting and instructive to all, if samples of them could be collected for exhibition, and it is not unlikely that they would surprise many even of our own residents. Such expositions do much in every way to advance the intelligence and interest of a people, and it is to be earnestly hoped that our skillful artizans may respond to the efforts of the excellent managers of the institution in such a manner as may be worthy of themselves. If they do not, it will be a greater injury than benefit to all.

A White Mark for the Lawyers.—The lawyers at Concord, N. H. agreed not to sue any of the sufferers by the late fire in that town. The Patriot says: "This agreement has been abided by, and not one of them has been sued, although Boston creditors were here with their demands before the fire was fairly quenched. None of the sufferers by the fire are so much affected by it as to give their creditors any cause for alarm, and no one who has the soul of a man will add to a debtor's embarrassment in such a case by suing him."

Where's Barnum.—A Horned Toad, the Burlington Gazette states, was dug up in a potato field near that place a few days ago. It was about four inches long, including the tail, with a body of considerable fatness, which is covered with innumerable horns. Two, immediately behind the head, are three-quarters of an inch long, and apparently as hard as the spurs of a game cock. The eyes, head and tail resemble those of the lizard.

A Serious Accident—Occurred to Mr. Shove of the firm of Sturges, Shove & Wilcox, of Newark, while engaged in preparing a kettle of varnish for japanning on Saturday last. It is supposed that the heat becoming too great, caused the vessel to burst, and Mr. S., standing near with his sleeves rolled up, the boiling contents were thrown over him, scalding him dreadfully.

Death of an Editor.—James M. Newell, Esq., late editor of the Bridgeton Chronicle, died on Tuesday last, having suffered from a protracted illness of several months. Mr. Newell had been for several years one of the leaders of the Democratic party of this State.

Pin Making.—The Danbury Times says, the American Pin Company, at Waterbury, manufacture about 4, 000, 000 pins per day, or 1, 200, 000, 000 per year. The patent to which the company owe their success is kept a secret, and not known even to the stockholders. The right to use it was sold in England for $30, 000.

Accident.—A light wagon drawn by Mr. Barnum's pony, and containing Miss Barnum, her cousin and a young lady from New York, was upset on turning the corner of Main and Gilbert streets.

The ladies were thrown out and considerably injured, the lady from New York having her collar bone broken. Bridgeport Standard.

Wife, Sister, and Child Shot.—Yesterday, at Newark, says the Tribune of Monday last, twelve miles South of Wilmington, Del., a mau named Edward Ginn shot his wife, her sister, and his own child. They all died instantly. Cause not known. Ginn escaped, but the officers are on his track.

☞ The Middlesex County Bible Society are to hold an anniversary meeting in the Presbyterian Church at Metuchin on the 9th inst., on which occasion Rev. Dr. Sears will preach a sermon.

☞ The riot on the Central Railroad has been entirely quelled. Two men only were killed.

For the Gazette.

Plainfield, August 8, 1851.

Mr. Editor:—At the close of my last I had arrived at Cascade Bridge. Let me repeat the dimensions:—it is built of wood, and consists of a single arch 250 feet in length, thrown across a ravine 184 in depth. In looking down from the top of the Bridge, you are tempted to measure it by the tops of the Pine trees, which "descend row by row, to the rocky, thread-like stream at the bottom." One day is as little time as should be taken to judge of this stupendous piece of architecture. By climbing down the rocks on the east side to the bottom, one can see "this wonderful structure suspended as it were, mid-way between Heaven and earth."

The train looks like a "toy-cart," as it passes over it. Its arch consists of eight ribs of white-oak, two feet square in the center, and two feet by four at the abutments, braced by wood and iron, and show how well strength is combined with lightness in its structure.

Instead of being constructed on piers the solid rock is cut out for the abutments in the shape of deep shelves, and while these stand so will the bridge. It is said that Gen. Scott exclaimed as he saw a heavy train cross it without its trembling, "The man who could throw a cow-path over that gulf deserves a crown!" The cost of this Bridge was $70,000, built by John Fowler in one and a half years. The next object worthy of peculiar attention is the Starrucca Viaduct, the greatest work of art on the whole road, and is among the first in this country of its kind. It is 1200 feet long, 110 feet high, and has 18 arches with spans of 50 feet each. It is 30 feet wide at the top. It was built in one year, and cost $320,000. The best view to be had from the cars is in coming east at Lanesboro; you see it ahead on rounding a curve, and is a most magnificent sight to any one who loves to view architectural skill. It can also be seen to advantage by persons going west, but you have to turn and look back which is attended with danger from passing trains, &c. At Lanesboro there is a wooden bridge over the town and Canewacta Creek, 70 feet high, and 450 feet long, and you are enabled to look down the chimneys into the dinner-pots of the inhabitants but the rapidity of the train does not permit you to judge of the quantity or quality. Susquehanna is the next important station, and is the depot for repairs and examination of cars, engines, &c.

I have now left the romantic portion of the road, but it partakes of the beautiful and picturesque—built as it is upon the bank of the meandering Susquehanna. We next come to Binghampton, the largest and most beautiful village upon the road that we have seen. It contains 5000 inhabitants, and the streets are well shaded, and the place boasts some half dozen churches, county buildings, and several hotels, a number of handsome private residences, and are seen across the Chenango at the west end.

Owego is the next important station in size and business to Binghampton. This place was nearly destroyed by fire in the fall of 1849, about one-third of the place being consumed. The rapid growth of Owego is seen in the fact that the man who built the first log hut on the spot where stands the town, was at the opening of the road in 1849—a branch road here extends to Ithaca.

Elmira is the next largest and most important town upon the road, (excepting of course the terminus). It contains many large Stores with stocks of goods ranging from 20 to $50,000, hotels, &c., among the first of which is the well-known and far-famed Brainard House.

At Elmira the Jefferson branch of the road puts off to Jefferson, on Seneca Lake, which for the beauty of its scenery is seldom equalled. Passengers for Buffalo take this route to Geneva, crossing the lake in the magnificent steamer, Ben Loder, named after the President of the Erie Road. From Elmira we next reach Corning, 18 miles above on the Chemung River. This a thriving and beautiful place, and contains about 2000 inhabitants, and is situated at the foot of a noble hill. About quarter of the way up this hill stands the three churches of the town, the foundations of which are higher than the tops of the houses in Main Street, only three blocks off. This place was also destroyed by fire in 1850, but like Owego and Elmira, it has risen from its ashes more beautiful than ever in the business portion of the place, where stood mere shanties before, now stands blocks of brick buildings three and four stories high, boasting the names of Concert, Dyer, Blocks, &c. A large, new, spacious and very handsome Hotel was nearly finished when I was there, which I presume is now occupied. Corning contains two other hotels, a foundry and factories, and is the greatest lumber depot on the road, and it is estimated that 25,000,000 feet dressed lumber goes down the Chemung Canal and other routes every year.

At Corning the Buffalo and Cohocton Valley Rail Road terminates, and was to have been opened in August to Bath, and will be completed early in 1852.

It is also the termination of the Blossburg Rail Road which runs to the Blossburg Coal Mines in Pennsylvania, the only Coal Mines near the border of New York. This makes an important point of Corning, together with its lumber, &c. Here I stopped for the night, and kind reader, please excuse me, as I am somewhat fatigued, having travelled 291 miles since 6 o'clock, A. M., having been detained three hours at Port Jervis, and taking our traps to the Clinton House, we beg leave to bid you good night, hoping to rise refreshed, and give you a more extended account of Corning in my next, when I shall reach the terminus of the Road at Dunkirk. With your leave Mr. Editor, I will continue through two more letters as I wish to give you (if agreeable to your readers) a faint description of Nigara. Yours, &c.,

Traveller.

Editor's Table.

—"The Waverly Magazine," published by Moses A. Dow, at Boston, is the neatest, and as far as we have seen, possesses more original and sterling merit than any other paper of its kind. Price $2 per annum.

—"Harper's New Monthly" for Sept., is unusually interesting. Napoleon, by S. C. Abbott, is among the rare productions—the author possesses the happy faculty of interesting the reader from the very opening of the article, which is not generally the case. It also contains its share of other original and valuable reading matter.

—"North American Miscellany," published by Palmer & Co., No. 8 Barclay street, New York, is an elegant work for the price, ($1 per year) and contains a much larger quantity of rare selections than some others at higher prices.

—"The Ladies Wreath," for September, is published by Fletcher & Co., at $1 per year, and contains a number of rich selections worthy of attention.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL.

The eminent names lent ro reccommend this medicine are conclusive proofs of its value. In addition to these we have been favored with the perusal of letters from many distinguished individuals as well as humble sufferers who acknowledge their indebtedness to this valuable medicine for the recovery of their health from painful and dangerous diseases. It is at once safe and pleasant to take, and it is very powerful to cure. Those afflicted with coughs, cold, asthma, bronchitis, hoarseness, or indeed any of the various affections of the lungs, wiil do well to try the Cherry Pectoral, and will have no cause to regret the experiment.

DEATH IS THE TERMINATION,

But too often, of what, in its inception, was lightly treated, and fatally neglected as a common cold. The snow-ball does not increase faster by rolling, than does danger from an unchecked Cough or Cold. When inflamation once seizes upon the delicate tissue of the Lungs, tne progress of fire is scarcely swifter or more fatal than that of Pulmonary Disease, through its various stages, to its terminus, death! Yet it may be arrested in all cases by a prompt resort to Dr. Rogers' Sprup of Liverwort, Tar, and Canchalagua. To this vital truth many among the first men in the land, have appen-

NEW PROSPECTUS. To Mechanics, Inventors, and Manufacturers. Seventh Volume of the Scientific American. Messrs. Munn & Co., American and Foreign Patent Agents, and Publishers of the Scientific American, respectfully announces to the public that the first number of Volume Seven of this widely circulated and valuable journal will issue on the 20th of September. The new Volume will commence with an entire new dress, and will be printed upon paper of a heavier texture than that used in the preceding volumes. It is the intention of the Publishers to illustrate it more fully, by introducing representations of prominent events connected with the advancement of Science; besides furnishing the usual amount of engravings of new inventions.

It is published weekly in form for Binding, and affords at the end of the year, a splendid volume of over four hundred pages, with a copious Index, and from five to six hundred original engravings, together with a vast amount of practical information concerning the progress of invention and discovery throughout the world. There is no subject of importance to the Mechanic, Inventor, Manfacturer, and general reader, which is not treated in the most able manner—the Editors, Contributors, and Corrospondents being men of the highest attainments. It is in fact the leading Scientific Journal in the country. The Inventor will find in it a weekly Official List of American Patent Claims, reported from the Patent Office—an original feature, not found in any other weekly publication.

Terms.—$2 a year; $1 for six months.

☞ All letters must be post-paid and directed to

The American Piano-Forte Association. A SOCIETY for the purpose of supplying Pianos to those who need them, upon the payment of a small monthly sum. The object is that all persons, even in moderate circumstances, may own a valuable Piano, and that many who now hire instruments may save their money and soon become the owners of a splendid Piano, worth at least $300.—

Members choose their own instruments from several of the first makers. Pianos are awarded on the first Thursday of each month by auction. Payments $3 per month. Subscribers limited to 100. Two instruments have already been selected by the members from the manufactories of Messrs. Dubois & Warriner, and J. B. Dunham. The success thus far proves that hundreds of Pianos will soon be distributed upon the principle of this Society, and that the benefits of the Building Associations may be extended to this branch of public interest, and that much good will consequently arise to the Musical community, and the Manufacturing interest.

A MELODEON COMPANY of 75 members is now forming, upon the above plan. The books are now open.

Persons who feel interested in this popular movement are respectfully invited to call and subscribe. Office hours, A. M. from 9 to 12; P. M. from 3 to 6,

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

THE AMERICAN CHANCERY DIGEST,

Being an Analytical Digested Index of all the Reported Decisions in Equity of the United States Courts and of the Courts of the several States to the present time, with Notes and a copious Index; also an Introductory Essay comprising an historical sketch of the Court of Chancery; an account of the nature, powers and functions of the Court and the organization and equity jurisdiction of the Court of the United States and of each of the States of the Union. By Thomas W. Waterman, of the New York Bar. 3 Vols. 1851. $15.

From the United States Law Magazine.

The mechanical execution of this great work, reflects credit on the house by which it is published. It is printed with new type, on fine white paper; and the press-work speaks well for Messrs. Bell & Gould, printers. Indeed, in appearance, the volumes both within and without are superior to any law publication which has lately appeared. When we inform our readers that this work is all it purports to be, we have said enough to suggest the fact that it must be an indispensable adjunct to the library of every practising lawyer in the Union. Of the accuracy of the Digest, the ability and professional standing of Mr. Waterman are a sufficient garanty.

In his prefatory remarks, Mr. Waterman says:

"The great accumulation of reports, creating a necessity for some brief and methodical arrangement of decisions which shall be easy of reference, and at the same time scientific arrangement of each subject.

The value of this Digest is enhanced by the fact of its being a national work, confined to no one State or section, but comprehending each and every State, and the entire country as a whole. Containing all the reported decisions in equity of the United States Courts, and of the courts of the several States of the Union, from the earliest period to the present time, it embodies almost every known principle of American law, and hence becomes a complete encyclopædia of American legal science.

It was originally placed in the hands of the late John A. Dunlay, Esv., well known to the profession for his learning and accuracy as a law writer. He had, however, scarcely entered upon the task, when he was prostrated by the disease which, after a languishing sicknes of eighteen months, terminated fatally. Shortly before his decease, I was call in to prosecute the work so long unavoidably neglected. Though his sands of life were nearly spent, and the objects of sense fast fading from his sight, the vigor of a highly disciplined mind continued unimpaired to the last; and I have to acknoledge from him many valuable counsel, and may important hints and suggestions which cheered, directed and aided my subsequent labors.

Though ostensibly the third edition of the American Chancery Digest, this is substantialy a new work,—not only the plan and arrangement being new, but a large proportion of the materials, also, In the arrangement, I have avoided, as much as possible, the multiplication of divisions and sub-divisions, which only tend to confuse n, of embarrass, and have aimed at an order and classification at once simple and natural. I have amined, with few exceptions, all the reports of the different States. To ensure entire correctness I have not ventured always to rely upon the regard to brevity and clearness of statement, of well as to accuracy, With almost every decision I have also given the authorities that support it, so that the references to standard works are numerous and valuable. Explanatory notes are another feature of the work. At the end of each volume is a very copious index, which it is hoped will prove a valuable acquisition. It has prepared with care, and with a view to utility. This introduction compriseses, first, an historical sketch of the Court of chancery; secondly, the nature, powers and functions of the Court; and thirdly, the organization and jurisdiction of the equity courts of the equity courts of the United States and of each of the several States of the Union. As these subjects are distinct, it seemed proper to assign them to as many different chapters."

NEW AND CHEAP

FURNITURE AND CHAIR

ESTABLISHMENT,

311 Broad-St., Newark N. J.

(Nearly opposite Washington Hall.)

THE proprietor begs leave to announce to the Public, that he has taken the large and commodious store 311 Broad-st. Newark, N. J., where he is prepared to supply any article in the furniture and chair line as low as can be purchased in New York. The following are some of the leading articles

Sofas of every description, Marble and Mahogany-top Dressing Bureaus, Book Cases, Work Stands, marble and mahogany-top Wash Stands, Hat Stands, Tete a Tetes, Divans and Ottomans, Bedsteads, including French, Grecian, Cottage and Plain; mahogany Rocking Chairs, mahogany sitting Chairs of every style and quality; also, Cane Seat, Grecian, Fancy and cottage Chairs; Centre, Side and Sofa Tablss; a large assortment of Looking Glasses; Refrigerators of all sizes. both chest and upright; and every other article in the furniture line, from the most elegant and fashionable drawing room Sofa, to the plainest article of kitchen furniture.

All of the above articles warranted as good as can be purchased elsewhere. He will also guarantee to sell them cheaper than any other establishment in this city.

We think any person about furnishing either on a large or small scale, can do as well at our place as at any other establishment in the country. The styles are as new, and we think, in as good taste as can be found in the city of New Yerk or elsewhere, and we believe that good furniture can be purchased here and shifted to any part of the country at such a rate as to yield to the purchaser more value for his money, than if brought in any of our larger cities.

Please call and judge for yourselves. Don't forget the name and number.

HERNIA.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—This disorder, of very frequennt occurrence, may be considered as arising through weakness of the abdominal walls, inducing an enlargement in the natural openings formed therein for the transmission of blood and other vessels; such openings being enlarged, permit the escape of bowels or other viscera of the abdomen, devolving hernial swellings or rupture, which most generally occur outwardly, as at the navel, groins and thighs.

WHEN IT OCCURS.

The complaint is likely to happen at birth, and therefore should be carefully looked for by those having the charge of children, that it may be arrested and cured promptly. It also occurs at any period of life, to either sex, without regard to the condition or mode of living, and when found, should be attended to without delay—the final penalty being death, and that may be induced through strangulation at any momennt.

The bowel having protruded as a rupture, or burst and known by the external LUMP OR TUMOR, should be cartfully and thoroughly returned into the abdomen and retained there by means of a suitable instrument, as a TRUSS BANDAGE, or SUPPORTER. The application of such mechanical aid in the relief and final cure of hernia, is a matter requiring much special study, skill and experience not only in the mechanism of the body, but also in that of instruments as relating to their application; for apart from the different methods of producing pressures, the disease calls for exact adaptation in the TRUSS PAD or pledget used for the purpose of retaining a hernia.

SUCH IS TRUTH.

The above truths are now being appreciated by the public having been brought particularly to their notice through the recent improvements made by Frederick M. Butler in Supporter and Hernial pads and introduced by the Hull's Truss Office, in their treatment for the relief and radical cure of Hernia. Over two year experience has now been had in the application of BUTLER'S recently patented Truss Pads—proving through numerous cases, that from their peculiar form and bearing they lie over and upon the inguinal canal, dislodge the bowels thoroughly, contract the rings or natural openings, thicken the muscular walls, and thereby effect a cure.

The office is provided with experienced male and female attendants, who apply instruments direct to the person of patients, and the public may rely upon that care being made in the application which will most likely tend to the relief and cure of the several complaints coming under their treatment, whether it be Hernia, Prolapsus Uteri, Prolapsus Ani, Piles, or other similar weakness, requiring the mechanical support of a Truss, Supporter, Belt, Braces or Bandage. HULL'S TRUSS OFFICE,

4 Vesey street, Astor House, opposite St Paul's Church, New-York.

FREDERICK M. BUTLER, Proprietor.

N. B.—The male and female departments are separate and distinct. Children trussed when only two years old and invariably cured. [145is.

BABY JUMPER

AND

WALKER COMBINED.

The subscriber having invented and made application for a patent for the above article would hereby call the attention of the public to its superiority over all others.

It forms a neat article of furniture, somewhat resembling an ottoman; it being upon castors, the little occupant can move it in all directions around the room with the utmost ease. The top opens by a spring and then closes around under the child's arms and locks. The child sits in an upright position upon a saddle or seat, stuffed perfectly soft, bearing no weight on his arms, with its feet resting upon the floor. The child can easily raise the article, and as there is a spring in each leg it can use it as a jumper for its amusement, or push itself around the room, thus learning to walk without other asistance. As the springs buoys the child up, thereby preventing too much weight upon its feet, it gradually learns to use its legs and soon learns to walk. The child can in no manner receive injury; a trial or inspection will satisfy the most skeptical of its superior utility.

Prices from $5 to $10 each, according to style of trimmings &c. Orders punctually attended to by

E. RICE, Cor. Broad and Mechanic-sts, near the Depot, ELIZABETHTOWN. N. J.

☞ Also for sale at 240 Broadway, New-York.

CHERRY PECTORAL:

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, ASTHMA, WHOOPING-COUGH AND CONSUMPTION.

In offering to the community this justly celebrated remedy for diseases of the throat and lungs, it is not our wish to trifle with the lives or health of the afflicted, but frankly to lay before them the opinions of distinguished men and some of the evidences of its success, from which they can judge for themselves.—We sincerely pledge ourselves to make no wild assertions or false statements of its efficacy, nor will we hold out any hope to suffering humany which facts will not warrant.

Many proofs are here given, and we solicit an inquiry from the public into all we publish, feeling assured they will find them perfectly reliable, and the medicine worthy their best confidence and patronage'

From the distinguished Professor of Chemistry and Materia Medica, Bowdoin College.

Dear Sir: I delayed answering the receipt of your preparation, until I had an opportunity of witnessing its effects in my own family, or in the families of my friends.

This I have now done with a high degree of satisfaction, in cases both of adults and children.

I have found it, as its ingredients show, a powerful remedy for colds, and pulmonary diseases.

PARKER CLEAVELAND, M. D.

BRUNSWICK, ME., Feb. 5. 1847.

From an Overseer in the Hamilton Mills, in this City.

LOWELL, Aug. 10. 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer: I have been cured of the worst cough I ever had in my life, by your "CHERRY PECTORAL," and never fail when I have opportunity, of recommending it to others.

Yours, respectfully, S. D. EMERSON.

☞ Read the following, and see if this medicine is worth a trial. This patient had become very feeble, and the effect of the medicine was unmistakably distinct:—

UNITED STATES HOTEL, SARATOGA SPRINGS, July 5. 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer,—Sir: I have been afflicted with a painful affection of the lungs, and all the symptoms of settled consumption, for more than a year. I could find no medicine that would reach my case, until I commenced the use of your "CHERRY PECTORAL," which gave me gradual relief, [illegible] have been steadily gaining my strength till [illegible]th is well nigh restored.

While using your medicine [illegible] gratification of curing with it my reverend [illegible]r. Truman, of Sumpter District, who he[illegible]nded from his parochial duties by a sev[illegible] bronchitis.

I have pleasure in certifying [illegible] to you,

And am sir, yours[illegible]

J. F. CALHOUN. [illegible]arolina.

☞ The following was [illegible] of cases, which the physicians and friend[illegible] to be incurable consumption:—

CHESTER, PA., Aug. 22, 1846.

J. C. Ayer,—Sir: I was taken with a terrible cough brought on by a cold; in the beginning of last February, and was confined to my bed more than two months. Coughing incessantly night and day, I became ghastly and pale, my eyes were sunken and glassy, and my breath very short. Indeed, I was rapidly failing, and in such distress for breath, that but little hope of my recovery could be entertained.—While in this situation, a friend of mine, (the Rev. John Keller, of the Methodist church) brought me a bottle of your Cherry Pectoral, which I tried more to gratify him, than from any expectation of obtaining relief. Its good effect induced me to continue its use, and I soon found my health much improved. Now in three months, I am well and strong and can attribute my cure only to your great medicine. With the deepest gratitude, yours, &c.

NOTHING LIKE IT.

CURE FOLLOWS CURE!

READ THE EVIDENCE!!

The above invaluable Medicine has now been before the public sufficiently long to have its virtues thoroughly tested. It has been used by all classes of the community, under every possible variety of circumstances, and has everywhere proved itself a most powerful and efficient Cough Medicine. Lung Diseases of all kinds, yield to its influence, as mists pass away upon the rising of the Sun. This is no fiction. We give you below, letters from persons who are now living in the state of New York, and who declare, over their own signatures, all that we could possibly desire to say in its favor. Those who can read their statements and yet remain incredulous, must be beyond the reach of human testimony.

A LOVELY YOUNG LADY

CURED OF CONSUMPTION!

☞ The following is from the pen of WM. H. LEVISON, Esq., the distinguished Editor of the U. S. Military and Naval Argus under date New York, Jan. 26, 1850. What could be more conclusive?

"It is seldom we permit ourselves to occupy a space in these columns to speak in praise of any article in the patent medicine way; but when we see the life of a fellow-creature saved by the use of any medicine whatever, we consider it as our right, if not a duty, to give a simple statement of facts, that others may, in like manner be benefitted. The case which has induced us to pen this article, was that of a young lady of our acquaintance, who, by frequent exposure to the night air, contracted a cold, which settled on the Lungs before its ravages could be stayed. (This occurred two years ago this winter.) Various remedies were used, but with very little effect or benefit. The cough grew worse, with copious expectoration, and the sunken eye, and pale, hollow cheek, told plainly that PULMONARY DISEASE was doing its worst on her delicate frame. The family physician was consulted and although he would not admit to the young lady that she really had the CONSUMPTION, yet he would give no encouragement as to a cure. At this crisis, her mother was persuaded to make use of a bottle of Dr. Rogers' Compound Syrup of LIVEWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA and we are happy to state, she was perfectly cured in less than three months by this medicine alone, after even hope was destroyed. It is useless to comment on such a case as this, for the truth will reach where polished fiction never can. If any doubt the authenticity of this statement, let them call at this office.—U. S. Military and Naval Argus Office, No 79 Chatam N. Y.

COUGH AND DISEASE OF 14 MONTHS STANDING.

CURED.

AFTER BEING GIVEN UP TWICE

BY EMINENT PHYSICIANS!

Albany, June 9th, 1849.

Messrs. A. L. Scovill & Co.—I herewith forward to you a Certificate of a Cure. effected by your Compound Syrup of Liverwort, Tar and Canchalagua. The Cough and expectoration was of fourteen months standing, and had baffled the skill of several of our eminent physicians in New York, Albany, and Cooperstown. I am the person in whom the cure was effected, and as I had previously no faith in patent medicines, I have since tried it on others, and have become satisfied of its value. Mine was as GREAT A CURE as ever was performed, as I had, during my sickness, been given up twice by my physicians. I have now commenced my business, after taking, I think about eight bottles.

Yours, repectfully. THOS. C. FAULDER.

BLEEDING AT THE LUNGS CURED.

☞ SEE HOW PROMPTLY IT ACTS!

Statement of Mr. A. Lang, Baker, No 388 Pearl street, N. Y. A few days before last Christmas, I was taken unwell, and soon commenced bleeding freely at the Lungs. I called in a Homœopathic Physician, but his medicine did not seem to help me. I read your advertisement, and thought I would try Dr. Rogers' Syrup of LIVERWORT, TAR, AND CANCHALAGUA. Before I had takea up the third bottle, by bleeding had stopped, my Cough was gone, and I felt well as usual. My health is now good. I consider it a most excellent medicine, and cordially recommend it to my friends. [This statement was made to the Proprietors, March 12th 1850.]

☞ This whole paper might be filled with letters, similar to the above, from those who have been cured.

FOR FEMALES AND MALES

Dr. Lazetti's Juno Cordia, or Protective Elixir.

This is the only actual remedy ever discovered for impetency, Genital Debility, Nocturnal Emissions, and all diseases occasioned by certain secret habits; and many of the nostrums recently recommended for the same complaints are worthless imitations which its unrivalled excellence, fame and popularity have brought into the market. The Medical Faculty of Europe and the United States are unanimous in their recommendations of the Juno Cordial and have not given their sanction in a single instance that has been authenticated, to any compound for the same purposes. The nature of the maladies relieved by the Juno Cordial are generally such as to leave the publication of certificates of cures out of the question, or the proprietor could produce a host of the most conclusive testimony to show that the great reputation that it enjoys was not accidentally obtained, but is firmly based upon its positive, and apparently miraculous virtues. In all directions are to be found the happy parents of healthy offspring, who would not have been so, but for this extraordinary preparption. And it is equally potent in the many diseases for which it is recommended. Objection has been naturally made to the price of the Juno Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown into the market in opposition to it is sold cheaper; but the fact is, the Cerdial cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money, and less in merit. We assure the reader that the utmost reliance may be placed on the Juno Cordial in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also those that follow, viz: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability, and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, Gleet, Lucorrhoea or Whites, and Flour Albus and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the Procreative Functions—in all of which it will afford almost immediate relief, and, if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness or disability of a certain nature, should take this Cordial, as it will infallibly restore health and vigor in a brief period, and where want of offspring is a cause of regret, if recourse be had to it the most beneficial results may be anticipated with confidence. It is of priceless value to those without offspring. It has taken the precedence in Italy and will in all other countries where it may become known.

It also possesses the unrivalled qualities of curing incipient Consumption, and I have administered it with great success to patients who have sought our delightful climate for the restoration of their health and the result is that a medicine has been added to the catalogue for the cure of insipient consumption.

To spread wide the blessings of this medicine, I have appointed Messrs. Judson & Co., of the City of New York, in the United States of America, my sole Agents for its sale; and none can be genuine unless it comes through them, and their signature is on the weapper.
